Following the action of the Generals pledging their support to him, Gen. Carranza sent this message to Mr. Zubaran:

"Hostilities have opened between the forces of the Aguascalientes Convention and its so-called Government and the present legal Government, of which I am the Chief Executive.

"In view of this fact, you may make known that I will have no further dealings with the said convention, Gutierres or any of the other rebels backing him. I have notified civil and military authorities of the country that they are not to recognize any other authority except that issuing from the plan of Guadalupe, of which I am the First Chief in charge of the executive power of the nation.

"I also wish you to make clear that I have never relinquished the authority bestowed upon me by the plan of Guadalupe as First Chief of the Army and Executive of the Nation, and in the fulfillment of my duty I continue to occupy these positions."

The conviction that it will be impossible to prevent hostilities between the forces of Gen. Carranza and those of the Aguascalientes Convention has caused a suspension of the consideration that has been given by the Administration to the question of withdrawing the American forces from Vera Cruz. Opinion here is strong that the proposed evacuation will be postponed indefinitely.

State Department officials said today that while they had not been informed that hostilities between the armies of the rival factions had been begun, their advices indicated that hostilities were imminent. Gen. Villa has started with his troops in the direction of Mexico City. He is accompanied by George C. Carothers of the United States Consular Service, who will report to the State Department in regard to the progress of events. Gen. Carranza is at Cordoba, and it is rumored that he will move his forces toward Vera Cruz. He has been declared a rebel by the Aguascalientes Convention, but in spite of this some of the Generals who were delegates to the convention are indicating an intention to remain loyal to his cause.

Gen. Funston, commanding the American troops at Vera Cruz, telegraphed the Secretary of War today that a Mexico City newspaper had issued an extra quoting Gen. Funston as saying that Vera Cruz would be evacuated in a few days. Gen. Funston denied that he had made the statement.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 12.—Gen. Francisco Villa is converging his entire army at Lagos, midway between Aguascalientes and Queretaro, according to Gen. Pablo Gonzales, commanding Carranza forces at Queretaro. Gonzales today notified the War Department here and Gen. Carranza at Cordoba of Villa's movements.

Gonsales stated that his own force now numbered 40,000 men, while reinforcements were arriving from other places. He did not give an estimate of Villa's strength.

It is believed a decisive battle will be fought in the vicinity of Queretaro within a few days, as the concentrating of Villa's troops at Lagos is said to be the reply to Gonzales's recent ultimatum to Villa that he and other anti-Carranza Generals resign their commands and leave the country immediately.

TRAP DETECTIVES WITH MARKED BILLS

Cafe Proprietor Says Gambardella and Damico Demanded $50.

Liborio Gambardella, one of the best-known of the Italian detectives, and Adolfo Damico, a detective of Inspector Wakefield's staff, were locked up in Police Headquarters last night, after they had been stripped of their shields and suspended by Police Commissioner Woods, on charges of extortion. Both men protested violently that they were not guilty and Gambardella loudly proclaimed that the whole affair was a "frame-up." He was sent to a cell still shouting that he would clear himself and Damico. Shortly before midnight last night Magistrate Barlow in the Women's Night Court admitted the prisoners to bail. They gave bonds for $3,000 each.

Detectives Griffin, Vaughn, and Kelly made the arrests on information brought to Police Headquarters by Dominico Muccio, who keeps a coffee house at 201 Grand Street. He told Capt. Cray yesterday morning that two men had called on him the evening before, represented themselves as State Excise Agents, and demanded $50 from him in return for overlooking violations of the excise law which they said they knew he committed daily. Muccio denied that he ever sold liquor, but told Capt. Cray that he had promised to pay the men $25 if they called in the afternoon.

Cray marked five $5 bills belonging to Muccio and assigned the detectives to watch his shop. Muccio was to give the signal when he had paid the money by coming to the door and drawing his handkerchief from his pocket. It was after 5 o'clock when the detectives got the signal, and they entered to find Damico, Gambardella, and a third man seated at a table. Muccio pointed to Damico and said:

The detective grabbed Damico, whom they recognized, and also Gambardella. They brought the third man to headquarters also, but there he convinced Inspector Faurot that he was merely a customer in the place, and had had no connection with any of the detectives' affairs.

The marked bills, the police say, were found in Gambardella's pocket and they believe Damico passed them to him while Muccio was at the door giving the signal.

Gambardella was appointed to the police force in October, 1908, and Damico in March of last year. Gambardella has made himself well known on the force. It was he who informed Commissioner Dougherty of a hold-up to occur outside the Germania Bank at Spring Street and the Bowery, when four youths took $1,500 from a girl cashier after she had drawn the weekly payroll. Two of the gang were caught.

The two who escaped, and who are known by the names of "Pish" and "Swee," afterward testified before the Curran Aldermanic Police Investigating Committee that Gambardella had first planned the hold-up and afterward revealed it to Dougherty to enhance his own reputation. They said Gambardella frequented a Fourteenth Street saloon where a gang of gunmen made their headquarters and that he often loaned his revolver for hold-ups which he knew were to take place.

DOOMS MILLION WAR TAX.

Coupon Ownership Certificates Need Not Be Stamped, Osborn Rules.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—After extended consideration of a new and difficult problem of law, William H. Osborn, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has decided that under the terms of the War Tax act no stamps need be affixed to certificates of ownership filed with coupons for collection of interest on bonds. The decision may affect as much as $1,000,000 of revenue, but it is not believed that the item at issue was definitely counted on by the framers of the war tax measure.

The legal point involved leads to a curious instance of argument in a circle. The act directs that all certificates required by law must be stamped—in other words, must pay a tax. The Treasury Department is also authorized to draw up regulations for the collection of the tax, which in themselves have the force of law. Under this power the department promulgated regulations requiring, among other things, that certificates of ownership be filed with the coupons referred to.

That section in the regulations raised the question whether the certificates thus required by regulations of the force of law were, within the meaning of the act, required by the law itself. The law officers attached to the staff of the Commissioner finally decided that a tax imposed upon paper required merely by an executive regulation would hardly be less than the imposition of a tax not by Congress, but by executive officers. On that ground the certificates have been exempted from the stamp tax.

J.D. ROCKEFELLER, JR., KNITS

Industriously Works on a Shawl for War Sufferers.

Special to The New York Times.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 12.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is knitting a shawl of heavy wool. Knitting is a new accomplishment for Mr. Rockefeller. He had never tried it until last night, when he was sitting in the lobby of the Homestead Hotel with his wife, W. H. Chesebrough, Mrs. Richard Perkins, and Mrs. N. W. Chadwick, the women knitting, as most of them here are constantly doing. Somebody suggested that inasmuch as the Rockefeller Foundation is giving large sums for relief of the war sufferers, the men might as well help with the work. Needles and yarn were produced and Mr. Chesebrough made a feeble attempt. Mr. Rockefeller, however, went at the work with spirit, soon got the hang of it, and persevered for two hours. Tonight he was continuing and had about a yard done.

TAFT POINTS LAWYERS' DUTY

Because of Peculiar Qualifications, Should Not Refuse Office.

Special to The New York Times.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass., Nov. 12.—William H. Taft opened the series of lectures in the Edward William Bok Foundation here tonight in Grace Hall with an address on "The Lawyer of Ideals."

He declared against the advocate who favors litigation; said a lawyer of too strong partisan feeling has no place in society. The lawyer must collate facts, must synthesize; he must be versatile, quick of perception, and a scholar. But above all he must feel it a duty to respond to every call to public service. Because there are none so able as lawyers to foresee and prevent evil civic conditions, members of the bar should not refuse a summons to a political office. This is the highest and noblest function of the man of law.

SHOOTS THREE MEN ON LINER MOHAWK

C. B. Perkins, Boston Architect, Kills F. W. R. Hinman, Southern Publisher, Aboard Ship.

WOUNDS CAPT. INGRAM

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Nov. 12.—F. W. R. Hinman, business manager of The Florida Times-Union, Jacksonville, Fla., and President of the Southern Newspaper Publishers' Association, was shot and mortally wounded, and Capt. Andrew D. Ingram, master of the vessel, and B. H. Wright of Utica, N. Y., a passenger, were seriously wounded last night by George Batchelor Perkins, an architect of Boston, on the Clyde Line steamship Mohawk, when the ship was off the North Carolina coast bound from New York for Charleston. Mr. Hinman died this morning at 8:30 o'clock. Capt. Ingram and Mr. Wright are in a local hospital and physicians say they will recover. Perkins is held here on a charge of murder.

Persons who saw the shooting said that soon after eight o'clock last night Perkins, clad only in his pajamas and a raincoat, approached Capt. Ingram and Mr. and Mrs. Hinman, who were sitting in the companion way talking. He addressed a remark to Capt. Ingram, who replied that Perkins must wear more suitable apparel if he wished to mingle with the other passengers. Perkins instantly whipped out a revolver and fired at Capt. Ingram, the bullet striking him in the abdomen. Perkins then shot Mr. Hinman and turned the weapon on Mr. Wright, who was lying on a sofa. He shot Mr. Hinman again and tried to shoot Capt. Ingram a second time. Perkins then turned the pistol on himself, but it was empty.

Stewards and passengers overpowered Perkins, and he was put in irons until the Mohawk docked here this afternoon. Then he was turned over to the United States authorities.

A preliminary inquiry was held tonight by Arthur Huger, United States Commissioner. Perkins heard the warrant read without apparently being affected. He did not seem to realize what he had done. N. K. Wentworth of Connecticut, who had occupied a stateroom with Perkins on the Mohawk, said the man had taken several doses of medicine during the evening, saying it was a headache remedy. He boarded the steamer at New York, and several persons had noticed during the evening that he acted queerly.

BOSTON, Nov. 12.—George Batchelor Perkins, who is charged with the fatal shooting on the steamer Mohawk, left here on Monday for New York bound for a tarpon fishing trip in Southern waters. He had complained recently of sleeplessness and was forced to take an opiate, according to Robert H. Holton, his brother-in-law, at whose Summer home in Swampscott he had been staying. Mr. Holton said tonight that at times Perkins had shown what might be considered indications of mental derangement.

"These little things we laid to an artistic temperament, and they never seemed at all serious," said Mr. Holton. He also said that Perkins never carried a revolver.

Perkins was graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology as an architect and gained wealth and fame as an interior decorator and designer. He had traveled much in recent years, having gone around the world twice. He had planned to spend this Winter in the West indies and in South America. He is 43 years old and unmarried.

THE NORTH CAROLINA SAFE.

Not Blown Up and Hasn't Landed Marines, Captain Reports.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Navy Department officials were greatly relieved this afternoon when they received a cable message from Capt. Oman of the armored cruiser North Carolina, sent from Beirut, Turkey, reporting that the vessel was safe and that all on board were well. This was the first information that had come from the North Carolina since Nov. 2.

Capt. Oman's message was in response to several cablegrams from Secretary Daniels asking about a report that the North Carolina had landed marines at Beirut and the alarming story that the North Carolina had been blown up. The Navy Department made the following statement:

"Today at 2:15 P. M., the department received a telegram from the commanding officer of the North Carolina at Beirut, dated Nov. 12, stating that no force had been landed from the North Carolina and that everything was quiet at Beirut. All is well with the North Carolina."

CORNELL STUDENT DROWNED

P. L. Schwarzbach of Brooklyn Dies Trying to Save His Sister.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 12.—After diving from the top of a thirty-foot cliff to the lake inlet here late this afternoon in an attempt to rescue his sister, who had fallen from the same height, Paul L. Schwarzbach, 19 years old, from Brooklyn, a sophomore in the Cornell State College of Agriculture, was drowned.

The two young people were members of a picnic party of Cornell students who were dining on the south bank of the gorge, when Miss Schwarzbach, not knowing of the steep descent, stepped over the edge and fell to the water. She could swim, however, and kept afloat until C. F. Nagel, a graduate student let down from the cliff by a rope, pulled her from the water. Her brother could not swim, and in falling evidently hit his head on a projection, as when his body was recovered by two students, Gustav Bammen and William Calking, his tongue was bitten in two.

It was only last summer that another student fell from the identical spot on the cliff bank, which is ideal for picnics, and met his death in the inlet.

ENGLAND MAY ASK FOR 1,000,000 MORE MEN

Recruits Now Pouring in and Army Will Soon Reach the 2,000,000 Mark.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—There is a steady flow of recruits for Earl Kitchener's army.

It is expected that, with the Territorials, who number 600,000, England before long will have an army of 2,000,000.

New armies are also being organized in India.

It was reported tonight in the parliamentary lobbies that Premier Asquith would next Tuesday ask Parliament's sanction for the raising of 1,000,000 additional troops for the purposes of the war, thus bringing the total up to 2,000,000 men.

PEACE PLEA GOES OUT FROM GERMAN FIRM

"Stop Massacre and Devastation," Urges Circular—Asks Neutral Powers to Intervene.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—A circular being sent abroad by a Hamburg publishing firm has been received here. It urges the duty of neutral powers to intervene on behalf of peace. None of the nations engaged, asserts this document, really wants war, which is an insult to good common sense, religion and humanity.

The circular concludes with an appeal to human beings at large to lift up their voices and cry: "Enough of war. Stop all this massacre and devastation."

DISOBEYED HIS ORDERS, KILLED 600 GERMANS

French Gunner Refused to Retreat Until He Had Fired His Last Shot.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Wednesday, Nov. 11, (Dispatch to The London Standard).—At the battle of Vailly the French were obliged to fall back and were unable to get away with all their guns. They had time to bury most of them, though, and the only one they did not bury was spiked so that the Germans could not make any use of it.

It was with this gun that a gunner of the battery covered himself with glory. The gun crew had been ordered back, but he declared that he would not abandon the gun while any ammunition was left. He methodically emptied shell after shell into the Germans, who were moving up in serried ranks only a half mile away. Closer and closer they came, firing volleys as they advanced, but the gunner stood his ground and still had a dozen shells left when they were not more than 300 yards away. At this distance he bowled them over like ninepins, but nothing could stop them. He let fly his last shell at only fifty yards and did such awful execution that he was able to remove the breech-block and make good his escape, notwithstanding that he had received a bullet between his ribs.

Hardened as they were to slaughter, some of those who witnessed the deed turned faint at the ghastly sight of the mangled Germans, more than 600 of whom were blown to pieces within 500 yards of the gun.

"BOBS" OFF TO WAR TO SEE INDIAN TROOPS

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—Field Marshal Lord Roberts of Kandahar is going to France. The official announcement making this fact public says the famous general is going into the war zone "to see the Indian troops."

A few days before England declared war on Germany, Earl Roberts, who, since his retirement as Commander in Chief in 1904, had spoken and worked for universal conscription, made a speech at a meeting of the National Service League, in which he declared bluntly that England was as unprepared for war as she had been at the time of the Boer war.

Since the war began, the old soldier in citizen's dress, old-fashioned Prince Albert coat and gray top hat, has been making speeches to recruits, visiting the training camps, and trotting about London from the War Office to the Foreign Office, from the National Service League headquarters to the headquarters of the Veteran Reserves, of which he is Colonel. He has also written numerous letters to the press.

On Oct. 27, "Little Bobs," for so the English public still delight to call him, was caught by an interviewer. He praised the Germans as soldiers, but said it was impossible for them to win.

He then entered into a eulogy of the British private and open order formation.

"A British soldier always shoots at something," he said. "He is trained to find a target before he pulls the trigger, and that accounts for the German losses."

The report that he is going "to see the Indian troops," is significant from the fact that Lord Roberts, from childhood, has had a command of Hindustani, as well as several Indian dialects. Just half of his life has been spent in India.

BRITISH $1,000,000,000 LOAN

It is understood that the Government intends to issue a war loan of $1,000,000,000 or more, probably at 4 per cent., and redeemable within ten years.

It is estimated that Great Britain is spending $35,000,000 weekly on the war, and in addition to the war loan the Government may propose to raise a further $250,000,000 by increasing the income tax to half a crown (60 cents) on the pound.

PRESIDENT RESENTS NEGRO'S CRITICISM

STANDS BY HIS POLICY

"Two Years Ago You Were Thought to be a Second Lincoln," Said Equal Rights Spokesman.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Segregation of white and negro civil service employes in Government departments, a system inaugurated during the present Administration, is to be continued. President Wilson made clear his views on the subject today when he received a delegation representing the National Independence Equal Rights League. The President resented the attitude of the spokesman, William Monroe Trotter, of Boston, who was quoted as having attempted to cross-examine Mr. Wilson, when the President explained that the question was not a political one, and that he would not be influenced in his decision by the threats of the league to oppose the Democratic Party.

President Wilson informed the delegation that never since he had been in office had he been addressed in such an insulting fashion. He said that if at any time in the future he should consent to receive representatives of the league, that body would have to designate another spokesman. After the interview, which had been scheduled for fifteen minutes, had continued for nearly an hour, the President rebuked Trotter for the aggressiveness of his attitude and dismissed the delegation.

The President said the policy of segregation had been enforced for the comfort and the best interests of both races in order to overcome friction. He made it clear that he had endeavored in every way to assist the negro race toward its independent development, and assured the delegation that he would gladly investigate any individual cases of discrimination which they might from time to time present to him. The problem, he said, was one which had no place in politics.

Talks of Negro Bolt.

When the President had concluded his remarks, Trotter stepped forward and began questioning Mr. Wilson. He suggested that unless the Administration abandoned the segregation policy the Democratic Party could expect the united opposition of the negro voters in 1916. He charged that the Administration had been influenced in its decision by Secretary McAdoo, Postmaster General Burleson, and John Skelton Williams, Controller of the Currency.

"Two years ago," said Trotter, "you were thought to be a second Abraham Lincoln"—the President tried to interrupt, asking that personalities be left out of the discussion. Trotter continued to speak, and the President finally told him that if the organization he represented wished to approach him again it must choose another spokesman, adding that he had enjoyed listening to the other members of the committee, but that Trotter's tone was offensive.

Here Trotter denied that he had any passion, but the President told him he had spoiled the cause for which he had come and said he expected those who professed to be Christians to come to him in a Christian spirit.

Trotter continued to argue that he was merely trying to show how the negro race felt, and asserted that he and others were now being branded as traitors to their race because they advised the colored people "to support the ticket."

This mention of votes caused Mr. Wilson to say that politics must be left out, because it was a form of blackmail. He said he would resent it as quickly from one set of men as from another, and that his actions could vote as they pleased, it mattered little to him, so long as he was sure he was doing the right thing and at the right time.

The President spoke frankly saying that if the colored people had made a mistake in voting for him they ought to correct it, but that he would insist that politics should not be brought into the question because it was not a political problem. With some emotion he asserted he was not seeking office, and that a man who sought the office of the Presidency was a fool for his pains. He spoke of the intolerable burden of the office and of things which he had to do which were more than the human spirit could carry.

Merely a Human Problem.

Emphasizing that he did not care in the least for the political considerations involved, Mr. Wilson urged that he wanted his auditors to understand that it was a human problem and not a political problem. While the American people wanted to support the advancement of the negro, the President was sure that as practical men everybody knew that there was a point at which friction is apt to occur. The question must be stripped of sentiment and viewed in its fact, because the facts got the better of the individual whether one desired it or not.

Trotter then led the way from the President's office. Once outside Trotter said:

"What the President told us was entirely disappointing. His statement that segregation was intended to prevent racial friction is not supported by facts. For fifty years negro and white employes have worked together in the Government departments in Washington. It was not until the present Administration came in that segregation was drastically introduced, and only because of the racial prejudices of John Skelton Williams, Secretary McAdoo and Postmaster General Burleson."

Others in the delegation included the Rev. Byron Gunner, of Hillburn, N. Y., President of the league; Thomas Walker, Chairman of the Washington branch of the league; M. W. Spencer, of Wilmington, Del., the Rev. E. H. Ricks, and F. Morris Murray, of Virginia.

As the delegation was leaving the White House, Trotter announced that a mass meeting would be held next Sunday at the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church in Washington to protest against the attitude of the Administration.

BRITISH HOLD YPRES UNDER HOT FIRE; ALLIES CLAIM COMMAND OF THE YSER, BUT GERMANS REPORT SUCCESS THERE

Summary of War News.

The battle for the possession of Ypres continues with violence, the British repulsing continued German attacks. According to the Official Press Bureau, this battle will rank high in British annals. The British troops have held the town for three weeks under artillery fire that goes on night and day.

The French War Office reports that, following the capture of Dixmude, the Germans attempted a forward movement, but were repulsed, and that the Germans now hold only a small strip of territory at one point on the left bank of the Yser. Progress by the Allies at other points in the battle line is reported.

Germany Army Headquarters reports that progress is being made south of Dixmude, and that east of Ypres 700 French soldiers and a number of machine guns have been captured.

The Russian Army under Gen. Rennenkampff, operating in East Prussia, has captured Johannisburg, and now controls the frontier railroad from Lyck to Soldau. The Russian General Staff announces that the siege of Przemysl has been resumed.

A force of 6,000 Austrians, who crossed the Danube into Servia, was cut to pieces, 2,000 being taken prisoners.

Petrograd declares that Armenians in large numbers are joining the Russian forces operating against the Turks. Fighting continues along the frontier with both sides claiming victories. Berlin reports that the Turks have captured the fortifications of El-Arish, Egypt.

Details of the battle between the German commerce destroyer Emden and the Australian cruiser Sydney show that the Sydney's superior speed of two knots enabled her to make her own range in the running fight and smash the German ship with shell fire.

SAW THE EMDEN LOSE LAST FIGHT

SURPRISED BY THE SYDNEY

Left Landing Party of 43 Men, Who Escaped in a Schooner While Two Ships Fought.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

KEELING, Cocos Islands, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—It was early on Monday that the unexpected arrival of the German cruiser Emden broke the calm of these isolated little islands, which the distant news of the war had hitherto left unruffled. One of the islands is known as Direction Island, and here the Eastern Telegraph Company has a cable station and a staff engaged in relaying messages between Europe and Australia. Otherwise the inhabitants are all Malays, with the exception of the descendants of June Clunies Ross, a British naval officer who came to these islands ninety years ago and founded the line of "Uncrowned Kings."

The war seemed to be very far away. The official bulletins passed through the cable station, but they gave us very little real news, and the only excitement was when it was rumored that the company was sending out rifles in case of a raid on the stations, and orders came that the beach must be patrolled by parties on the lookout for Germans. Then we heard from Singapore that a German cruiser had been dispatched to these islands, and toward the end of August one of the cable staff thought he saw searchlights out over the sea. Then suddenly we were awakened from our calm and were made to feel that we had suddenly become the most important place in the whole world-wide war area.

Cruiser Dashes Into Port.

At 6 o'clock on Monday morning a four-funneled cruiser arrived at full speed at the entrance to the lagoon. Our suspicions were aroused, for she was flying no flag and her fourth funnel was obviously a dummy made of painted canvas. Therefore we were not altogether surprised at the turn of events. The cruiser at once lowered away an armored launch and two boats, which came ashore and landed on Coral Beach three officers and forty men, all fully armed and having four Maxim guns.

The Germans—for all doubt about the mysterious cruiser was now at end—at once rushed up to the cable station, and, entering the office, turned out the operators, smashed the instruments, and set armed guards over all the buildings. All the knives and firearms found in possession of the cable staff were at once confiscated.

I should say here that in spite of the excitement on the outside, all the work was carried on in the cable office as usual right up to the moment when the Germans burst in. A general call was sent out just before the wireless apparatus was blown up.

The whole of the staff was placed under an armed guard while the instruments were being destroyed, but it is only fair to say that the Germans, working in well-disciplined fashion under their officers, were most civil. There was no such brutality as we hear characterizes the German Army's behavior toward civilians, and there were no attempts at pillaging.

Australian Cruiser Appears.

While the cable station was being put out of action the crew of the launch grappled for the cables and endeavored to cut them, but fortunately without success. The electrical stores were then blown up.

At 9 A. M. we heard the sound of a siren from the Emden, and this was evidently the signal to the landing party to return to the ship, for they at once

KAISER TELLS ARMIES RUIN LIES IN RETREAT

Germany Would Become Enslaved, Degraded Provinces of French and Russians.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—The Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Telegraph sends the following order alleged to have been issued by the German Emperor to his troops in East Prussia:

"My dear and faithful soldiers: Thanks to your valor France has been severely punished and Belgium has been added to the glorious provinces of Germany. You know also that our punitive expedition into Russia has been a brilliant success.

"But now we must turn to the new task of protecting our hearths, which moribund French and barbarous Russians are preparing to attack. Henceforward our military operations will take a new form, which will soon be intelligible to you, my dear soldiers.

"Your trial has come—for you and all Germany. It is necessary to concentrate our energies on the repulse of our enemies, for otherwise they aim to transform our free country into enslaved and degraded provinces of Russia and France.

"If Germany is dear to you; if the culture and faith of the nation and Emperor are dear to you, you will offer the enemy a worthy resistance. Do not make a single step backward into our country. Remember that behind us destruction threatens; it is only before us that happiness lies. For country, for glory, forward, faithful friends!"

KAISER CLIPS ENDS OFF HIS MUSTACHE

Those Upstanding Points Are Gone and He Looks Less Aggressive, Says Copenhagen.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—The Kaiser has clipped off the upstanding ends of his mustache. This startling change in the Emperor's appearance was observed in the last day or two, when the Emperor was passing through central Germany on his way to inspect a large number of recruits completing their military training.

The loss of the aggressively erect mustache extremities robs William II. very much of his semi-ferocious martial appearance, and some persons seem to think that stamps upon his face the outlines of a dejected depression. When it was observed some time after the beginning of the war that the Kaiser's hair had turned white no one paid much attention to the change, but the removal of the mustache ends has struck the public imagination, and, strange as it may seem, has done more, perhaps, than anything else to convince the population of Berlin that the war outlook is becoming bad for Germany. The absolutely chastened appearance of the Kaiser due to the absence of his mustache ends is attributed to his sadness about the German reverses. In these circumstances his advisers may urge him to allow his mustache to attain its former, conspicuous dimensions.

VON BELOW AGAIN HONORED.

Gets Iron Cross of First Class—His Wife an American.

BERLIN, Nov. 12, (via The Hague and London.)—The decoration of the Iron Cross of the First Class has been conferred upon Gen. Hans von Below, who some weeks ago received the second class decoration of this order for military valor before Namur.

Gen. von Below and Mrs. Turnbull were married in Buenos Aires in April, 1907. Gen. von Below was then a Major, and had been detailed by the German Government to assist in the reorganization of the Argentine Army.

ALLIES RESUME OFFENSIVE

GERMANS' COUNTER-CLAIMS

Say They Won on the Yser and Took 700 French Prisoners Near Ypres.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—In a statement reviewing recent operations in Flanders, particularly around Ypres, the defense of which it predicts will rank among the most notable episodes in British military history, the Official Press Bureau says tonight:

"The operations during the last few days have consisted mainly of fighting to the north of the Lys, where the points of interest were at first on the line of Hollebeke, Wytschaete, and Messines. There have also been severe encounters on the line from Zandvoorde to Frelinghem.

"The character of the fighting has been one of frequent and vigorous infantry attacks from the Germans, accompanied by heavy shellfire, alternating with equally vigorous counter-attacks, the general result being the maintenance of our line, not without considerable losses on our side, but with still heavier losses on the other. Six machine guns and over 100 prisoners were taken by us on the 8th.

"The Allies' strength has been constantly maintained by reinforcements. Latterly the stress has been in the neighborhood of Gheluveldt, to the north of Ypres, and at Dixmude.

"The German artillery fire was practically a continual bombardment, intended to pulverize the defense preparatory to the advance of the infantry. In the centre the struggle has been at Ypres, the defense of which will certainly be reckoned in history as one of the most striking episodes of the British Army.

"For more than three weeks the position, which projects like a bastion into the enemy's lines, has been held under a rain of shells which has hardly ceased by day or night. During this time the enemy has poured successive waves of infantry against it, only to see them break to pieces, one after the other."

Allies Report Successes.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—General gains for the Allies along the line of the River Yser are reported by the French War Office in tonight's communiqué, which reads as follows:

To the north we have held all our positions. The enemy has sought to debouch from Dixmude by a night attack, but has been repulsed.

We have resumed the offensive against the enemy, who had crossed the River Yser, and have driven him back at all points, except at one place, where he still occupies from 200 to 300 meters (approximately 218 to 327 yards) on the right bank.

In the centre we have gained some ground in the region of Tracy-le-Val; to the northeast of the forest of l'Aigle. In the Argonne region the German attacks have been very serious, but have amounted to nothing.

On our left wing the fighting still continues with violence and has been conducted with alternate advances and retirements without importance. Speaking broadly, the battle front has not varied greatly since the 10th of November. In the evening of yesterday it was extended along the line between Lombaertsyde and Nieuport; the Nieuport Canal to Ypres; the approaches of Ypres; in the region of Zonnebeke, and to the east of Armentieres.

There has been no change in the positions held by the British Army, which repulsed the attacks of the enemy, and particularly an offensive movement undertaken by a detachment of the Prussian Guard.

From the canal of La Bassée as far as and up to the River Oise there have been minor engagements.

In the region of the River Aisne, in the neighborhood of Vailly, we retained our positions against a counter-attack, and we strengthened our positions in the territory previously conquered by us.

ceeded in reducing to silence the cannon of the enemy. Several of their pieces were even destroyed. We also made some progress in the vicinity of Berry-au-Bac.

In the Argonne, in the Woevre district, in Lorraine, and in the Vosges the respective positions show no change.

Germans Claim Yser Successes.

BERLIN, (via London,) Nov. 12.—German General Headquarters issues the following statement today:

The enemy advanced from Nieuport as far as Lombaertzyde, but was driven across the Yser. The eastern bank of the Yser as far as the sea is now clear of the enemy.

Our attack across the Yser Canal to the south of Dixmude is making progress.

In the region east of Ypres we have advanced further and captured 700 French soldiers, four cannon, and four machine guns.

The enemy's attacks in the forest of Argonne were repulsed.

BATTLEFIELD OF YPRES ONE VAST CEMETERY

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12 (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle).—The fighting on the Yser and around Ypres continues with a violence and obstinacy which must be unparalleled in the annals of warfare. The correspondents repeat over and over, because no more descriptive phrase can be found, that the battlefield itself is one vast cemetery, and the country behind it one vast hospital.

Beside the awful loss of life the destruction of beautiful towns like Ypres, with their wonderful treasures of art and memorials of history, passes almost unnoticed, and in the lists of dead names of men distinguished in letters, science, and public life are for the present lost in the mass of this vast anonymous sacrifice.

For good or ill the Germans are evidently staking everything upon the issue in Belgium. A French soldier, who was wounded on Monday on the Yser and has reached Paris, gives today an account of his experiences which clearly indicates the blind daring and almost incredible determination of their assaults.

"My brigade," he says, "occupied a front of two and a half miles to the north of Ypres. The Germans threw themselves upon it in considerable numbers on Wednesday of last week. Our troops resisted stubbornly, but enormous losses did not stop the attack. Up to Thursday evening they came on repeatedly with reinforcements. I saw a single trench lost and retaken seven times in one day. After that there was a short interval, but on Saturday morning they attacked more violently than ever to the north of Dixmude. For forty hours we fought foot by foot without a moment's respite.

"It is impossible to describe such a hell, but I witnessed the following incident:

"A German regiment advanced, with flag flying, to within 300 yards of our trenches. It was met by a fire so deadly that it fell back. After being reformed in the rear it returned in markedly diminished numbers, and this time it got within about 100 yards of our lines. Our guns poured a torrent of fire upon it, and again it retreated. A third time it attempted the assault. This time the order was given to hold our fire until they had come up. At twenty yards every gun and rifle blazed away. Ten minutes later the regiment was wiped out; in less than an hour 4,000 men had been slain."

FIGHTING FOR DIXMUDE.

Observers Believe That Allies Will Soon Retake the Town.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Times Flanders correspondent, describing the German attack at Dixmude, says:

"There were only two points, Dixmude and Nieuport, where the Germans could assume the offensive on the Yser, all the front between being impossible for fighting on account of the flood. The force concentrated between Dixmude and Thourout was chosen for the attack.

"In the morning the German batteries opened a heavy fire on the French positions and kept it up through most of the day. This cannonade was the prelude to a violent infantry attack on the outskirts of Dixmude. The attack was made with great gallantry and very heavy fighting took place.

"The Germans came on in overwhelming numbers, and toward evening the Allies were compelled to retire. They fell back into the town, destroying the two bridges in their retreat. The Germans thus won the bridge head.

"Next morning strong reinforcements were brought up by both sides, and fighting continued in and about the town. In the course of the afternoon a force of Germans succeeded in penetrating into the town, and a desperate struggle went on in the streets.

"The capture of Dixmude, or a part of it, would be of no great advantage to the Germans. The town is almost entirely surrounded by water. More than once Dixmude has proved a death trap to the Germans, and it may well do so again."

The correspondent of The Daily Mail in Northern France, telegraphing under date of Wednesday, adds that the Germans are exhausted by their exertions, and will probably be driven out again.

Evidence is accumulating, according to this correspondent, that the Germans are suffering from a shortage of ammunition, and that the quality of their artillery and ammunition apears to have deteriorated. Heavy fighting, he says, continues around Dixmude.

GERMANS LOSE BIG GUNS

And Kill More Than 500 German Prisoners While Shelling La Bassee.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

IN NORTHERN FRANCE, Wednesday, Nov. 11, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—A very determined attempt was made by the Germans to pierce the British lines in the neighborhood of La Bassée on Tuesday. They were repulsed with great losses, and their artillery suffered heavily. Two of their biggest guns, said to be 14-inch, were destroyed, and one of their largest howitzers, believed to be of the 16½-inch type, is said to have been captured.

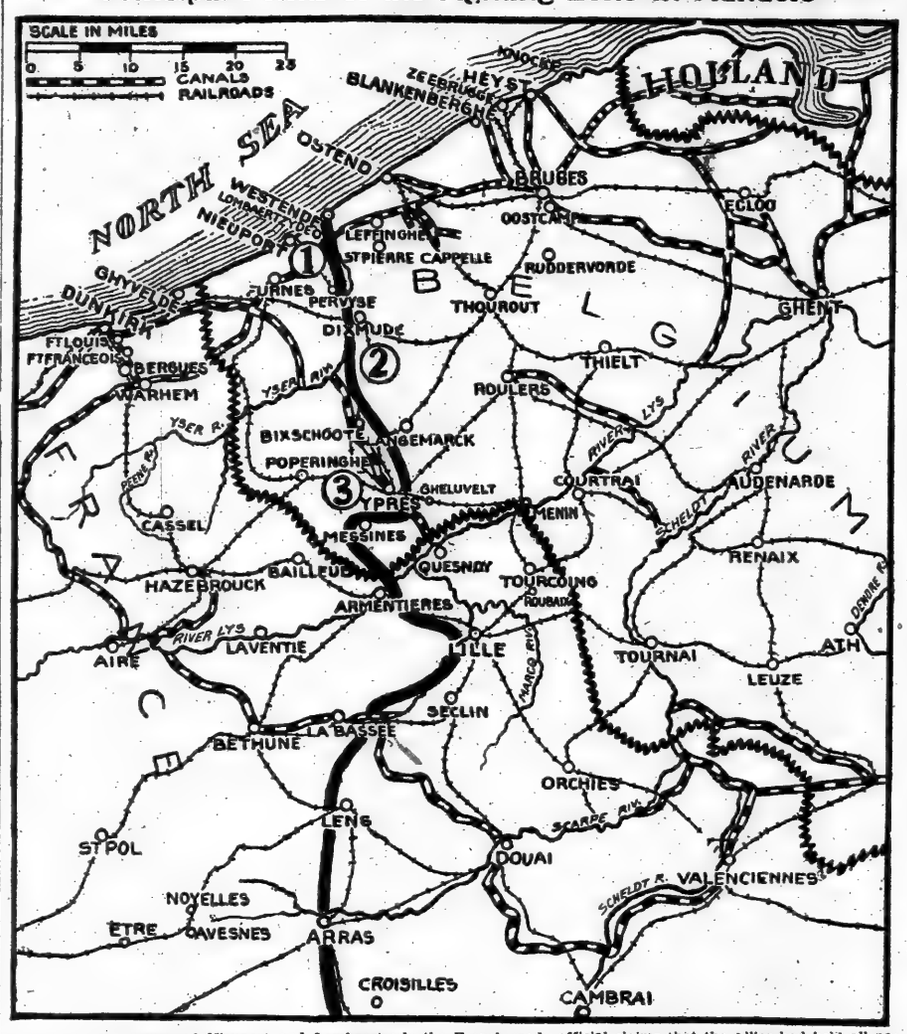
This was a brilliant achievement for which the British artillery was almost entirely responsible. The British troops have been relentlessly shelling the German positions for a week and have crippled the German offensive.

At La Bassée, however, the Germans began a night attack on Monday, and on Tuesday morning they were well on toward Bethune. The town seemed to be at their mercy, but their infantry had been trapped. They had met little opposition, for the thin lines of khaki had retreated before them and occupied a position on the slopes of a hill. The British infantry opened a terrifying rifle fire which decimated the Germans. In the meantime the latter had brought their artillery forward, and in the stampede that ensued after the British fire opened, their gun crews and infantry became a panic-stricken mass of humanity. The British guns did their work mercilessly. The Germans were driven helter-skelter, leaving piles of dead. Their guns were also abandoned, with several rounds of ammunition.

The bombardment of Ypres served on Tuesday to absolve the Allies of the obligation of looking after nearly 1,000 German prisoners. The Germans' shells fell on the railway station, where they evidently hoped to blow up one of the armored trains. At the moment the prisoners were awaiting the arrival of a special train to convey them to the depth of France. They were killed in appalling numbers, only 284 surviving unscathed.

One hundred and sixty-one were wounded and conveyed to the British base hospitals. The others are still unburied at the railway station.

Principal Points of the Fighting Zone In Flanders



1. In the region of Nieuport and Lombaertzyde the French made official claims that the Allies had held all positions and had dislodged the Germans from all points but one on the left bank of the Yser. The Germans, while admitting the Allies' advance to Lombaertzyde, asserted that they had been driven back across the Yser, and that the eastern bank of the river as far as the sea was "clear of the enemy."
2. Berlin reported that the German attack across the Yser Canal (not river) to the south of Dixmude was making progress.
3. The Germans officially announced the capture of 700 French soldiers to the east of Ypres. The French War Office asserted that the British at Ypres had repulsed all German attacks.

"JOHNNY" POE WITH THE BRITISH ARMY

Famous Ex-Football Player of Princeton at the Front as a Scout.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—It is reported in London that "Johnny" Poe, the famous former Princeton football player, has gone to the front as a scout with the British forces.

John Prentiss Poe, or "Johnny" Poe, as he was known to football enthusiasts all over this country in the early nineties, is a son of John P. Poe, ex-Attorney General of Maryland. He entered Princeton University with the class of 1895, and made the 'Varsity football team in his freshman year, playing with great brilliancy and rivaling the record of Edgar Allan Poe, his brother, who preceded him. He failed in his examinations in June, and again entered college with the class of 1896. His record on the gridiron was even better than the year before, but he again failed in his examinations, and did not return to college.

In 1907 Poe was a Captain in the Honduran Army in the war between Honduras and Nicaragua. He distinguished himself at the siege of Amapai, and was in charge of a gun in the engagement of Buenavista Fort. In the following year he joined Gen. Mendez of Venezuela in a fillbusterin expedition against Gen. Castro, then dictator of Venezuela. In the earlier days of the Mexican war it was several time reported that Poe intended to join the Constitutionalists.

WRECKING BELGIAN BRIDGES.

Germans Thus Cut Off Refugees' Flight—Isolating Antwerp.

"Sluis advices indicate that the Germans continue to blow up bridges, and that among the structures so destroyed is the bridge near Heyst, in West Flanders. Sentries are guarding the railways from Bruges to Ghent, from Courtrai to Ostend, and so forth.

"The Allies continue to occupy Ypres, but shells falling in the town yesterday killed four children. Aeroplanes are reported to have dropped bombs which damaged the church and Town Hall and set fire to several other buildings.

"The Kaiser, in journeying through Flanders, visited Courtrai and expressed his satisfaction to the municipal authorities for the manner in which the German troops had been quartered.

"From the Nieuport zone only feeble gun firing was heard on Wednesday.

"Train loads of wounded are continuously being transported from the battle line."

ORDERED TO SPARE FACTORIES

German Prisoner Tells Why Roubaix and Tourcoing Escaped Ruin.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—Surprise is frequently expressed in French newspapers at the comparative immunity of the twin industrial centres, Roubaix and Tourcoing, which were quite unharmed by the invasion, and even escaped the imposition of fine. The St. Omer correspondent of The Temps says that a German officer recently captured had a Headquarters Staff map with a red chalk circle drawn around the Roubaix-Tourcoing district. When asked to explain, he said:

"We have orders to spare both towns."

APPEAL TO ENGLISH WOMEN

Asked to Hold Up Finer and Higher Ideals of Conduct.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—An appeal to the women of the British Empire, emphasizing their duty in time of war, is issued by the National Council on Public Morals. It recalls Lord Kitchener's exhortation to British soldiers at the beginning of the war to avoid alcoholic excesses and declares that the duties there enjoined are doubly strong in their appeal to women, for by living purely and temperately at home they can set a fine example of duty and self-control to those whom they ask to respect women in other lands.

"The present crisis," says the appeal, "is revealing conditions of demoralization and drink in some parts of England among men and women which lead us to the conclusion that the great part which women can and should play in this war has not yet been fully understood by all."

Against suggestions for state regulations of vice, the manifesto makes an emphatic protest and concludes:

"Will the women of England unite in a great movement toward a finer adn higher deal of national duty? This is the moment to begin. We are called upon to help our soldiers to fight enemies of demoralization and drink at home; we are called upon to crush these enemies in our own lives and homes, and we are called upon so to live as to bequeath a heritage of health and happiness to the children we shall eventually give to the nation."

HEROIC FRENCH MOTHER.

Glad She Saved Her Son from Disease to Die for His Country.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—The Temps reprints from L'Information a letter from Mme. de S. of Paris, written on learning of the death of her son, aged 17, who volunteered despite ill health. The letter, which the Temps calls worthy of the Roman matron Cornelia, runs:

"I thank you for the delicacy with which the terrible news was broken to me. In my agonv one consolation remains. For seventeen years I struggled for my son's life against many illnesses, only saving him from death by constant care. I am deeply proud to have succeeded in preserving him to die for his country."

VON PUTTKAMER'S SON DEAD.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—The Matin gives details of the death in the Hospital de la Compassion at Compiègne of a son of Dr. von Puttkamer, former President of the Reichstag. A short time before the German retreat from Compiègne a young non-commissioned officer of the Eighteenth Dragoons was brought to the hospital desperately wounded by a 75-milimeter shell.

Both eyes had been destroyed; one arm had been torn away, and he had a terrible wound in the leg. From the number and attentiveness of the high officials at his bedside the French hospital attendants realized that he was a person of importance.

The young man retained consciousness, murmuring faintly: "The arm doesn't matter, but it is dreadful never to see again, and not to be able to hunt or ride."

The Germans made preparations for an elaborate funeral when they realized that his death was imminent, but the proximity of the French compelled them to abandon their design. Von Puttkamer expired as the French entered Compiègne.

GERMAN PEACE TERMS FORECAST IN BERLIN

Germany's peace terms, as forecast by Dr. Hans Delbrueck of the University of Berlin, were given out by the German Information Service of 30 East Forty-second Street last night. The statement reads:

Hans Delbrueck has written an article for the Preussische Jahrbuecher in which he discusses Germany's prospective peace terms after the war. Because of the high position of Prof. Delbrueck and his close friendship with the Kaiser, his views are being widely quoted by the German press.

A peculiar coincidence is the fact that forty-four years ago, when the Franco-Prussian war was dragging toward its end, Prof. Heinrich von Treitschke, the famous German historian and philosopher, printed in the same periodical an article entitled "What We Ask of France." In it he raised the ardent cry of "Give us back the old loot, give us back Alsace-Lorraine!"

Prof. Delbrueck writes in part:

"Absolute assurance that a conquered enemy will not again grasp a favorable opportunity to reopen hostilities can be gained only when that enemy is permanently subdued. That is what the Romans did—that is how they gradually built up their Weltreich (world empire.)

"Today—and this is a blessing for humanity—such a Weltreich is impossible. A more moderate way is to take large concessions of territory, to retain dominating, strong, strategical points, and to starve out the enemy economically.

"This course was taken by Napoleon particularly in 1807 in regard to Prussia. He took half of our territory, retained the forts on the Oder, limited the size of our army, and claimed a war tax so enormous that we could not pay it in many years.

"It is a course that did not hold good. It would have held good if Napoleon had conquered the rest of the world. As he did not succeed in doing that, as early as in the sixth year after peace was made, there came the day for Prussia where she could rise again, and it was shown that it was just that tremendous material pressure which the French had exerted upon us which had awakened moral forces that proved infinitely more powerful.

"God forbid that the German Empire, after the victory which we expect, steer into the course of the Napoleonic policy! An infinite number of wars would be the consequence. For no matter how strong the chains we might put on the nations, they could never be strong enough to paralyze them completely. And all Europe agrees on this point: That it will never, never suffer the reign of one single State.

"Therefore, the safety and security which we want to achieve can be brought about only through a combination of the highest military power with a political moderation, a moderation which disarms the suspicion awakened by the military power. In other words, our aim must be the maintenance of the existing political equality on land and the conquest of equality at sea."

TURKISH ARMENIANS IN ARMED REVOLT

Were Ready to Join Russian Invaders, Having Drilled and Collected Arms.

SEE DAY OF DELIVERANCE

Native Paper Says They Are Prepared for Any Sacrifice—Refuse to Join Turkish Army.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12. — Reports reaching the Russian capital from the Turkish border attach increasing importance to the part the Armenians are playing in the Russo-Turkish war.

In several towns occupied by the Russians the Armenian students have shown themselves ready to join the invading army, explaining that they had prepared themselves for the Russian approach by constant drilling and by gathering arms secretly. All along the line of march, according to these dispatches, the Armenian peasants are receiving the Russian troops with enthusiasm and giving provisions to them freely.

An Armenian newspaper, referring to this crisis in the history of Armenia, publishes the following:

"The long-anticipated day of deliverance for the Turkish Armenians is at hand, and the Armenians are prepared for any sacrifice made necessary by the performance of their manifest duty."

From this border country there have come to Petrograd further reports of armed conflicts arising from the refusal of Armenians to become Turkish conscripts and to surrender their arms.

It is now rumored that the important City of Van is today besieged by Armenian guerrilla bands in great force. In Feitun the number of insurgents is said to exceed 20,000, and they are reported to have defeated all the Turkish troops sent against them, causing heavy losses to the Turks.

TURKS' NAVY REALLY GERMAN.

3,000 German Officers in It, Says Englishman from Constantinople.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—An Englishman who has long been a resident of Constantinople, which city he left on Nov. 1, has arrived in London. He says that in addition to the crews of the cruisers Goeben and Breslau, nearly 3,000 German officers are in the Turkish naval service.

Two months ago, he says, all the German clerks of public and private establishments were taken over by the military authorities and placed in charge of the telegraph and postal departments and the censorship. He adds:

"Every Turkish ship has a German officer in command. It was a mistake that the Khédive was not allowed to return to Egypt some time ago, where he could have carefully watched developments, whereas in Constantinople he is the centre of the intrigues of discontented Arabs of the Nationalist Party and Germans."

TURKISH MISSION TO RUMANIA.

TURKS FLEE TO MOUNTAINS.

Victories Reported by Russians — Many Prisoners Taken.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12.—The following communication from the General Staff of the Russian army in the Caucasus, dated Tiflis, was made public tonight:

"The attacks of the Turks on our positions at Koprukeui Nov. 11 were repulsed with great losses to the Turks. A Turkish column which attempted to turn our left wing was subjected to the cross-fire of our artillery, and was impetuously attacked by our infantry. The Turks fled into the mountains in complete disorder, pursued by our cavalry.

"Under the protection of the fortified positions of Devebommu the Turks continue to concentrate troops at Erzerum. They apparently are receiving reinforcements by way of Trebisond.

"On Nov. 9 the Turks were attacked and defeated in Khanessour Pass, on the road from Azerbaijan to Van. They retreated rapidly in disorder, leaving behind them their dead and wounded.

An official communication from the General Staff of the Caucasian Army, dated Nov. 10, says:

"Small skirmishes in the region beyond the Tchoruk River, in the neighborhood of the Province of Batum, have taken place.

"We maintained our position at Koprukeui, Turkish attempts to envelop us resulting in failure. The enemy has been put in disorder, the column which intended to outflank or envelop us being dispersed.

"We captured many prisoners and large quantities of munitions. We have occupied all of the Valley of Alaschkertska.

"According to a Turkish officer taken prisoner, the Turkish Army, commanded by Hassan Izzet Pasha, is guided by Germans."

Steamer Reports Fight Between Squadrons of Torpedo Boats.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—A dispatch to The Morning Post from Stockholm says the Captain of the steamer Norden, which has just arrived there, reports that he was warned by a German torpedo boat to steer a wide course from the vicinity of Gjedse rLighthouse on the southern end of the Island of Laaland, in the Baltic, because a battle between Russian and German torpedo boats was in progress.

The Captain also reported that he heard sounds of heavy firing.

SAYS TREATY BOUND TURKEY TO FIGHT

Diplomat at Athens Asserts That an Old Alliance With Germany Existed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ATHENS, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The Embros (Forward) publishes an interview with an "exalted foreign diplomatic personage" explaining the circumstances which compelled Turkey to stake her existence as an empire by entering the war as an ally of Germany.

Turkey, he says, knew that her participation in the war was an act of folly contrary to her own interests, but she was compelled to make war by reason of a treaty of alliance concluded long ago, by which Turkey bound herself to give military and naval assistance to Germany if war were declared on Germany by Russia, Germany entering into a similar obligation toward Turkey.

When the present war began there were strong differences of opinion in the Turkish Cabinet as to whether, under such disadvantageous circumstances, Turkey was bound to carry out her obligations. In fact, Turkey represented to Germany that she had no money, that her army was going through a period of reorganization, and that her fleet was entirely powerless to defend the capital. Germany answered by advancing money and sending officers and men for the Turkish army and navy.

The diplomatist refers to the terms of the telegram from Emperor Francis Joseph to the Sultan, in which the Emperor said Turkey was compelled to fight for her honor—meaning, of course, that Turkey was bound to take the field under her solemn treaty obligations. The diplomatist adds that the existence of the treaty was known to Great Britain.

The story is regarded here as containing a certain improbability. On its face it would appear to be an attempt to represent Turkey as more sinned against than sinning and to prepare the way for retreat, with a severe castigation, from what the great majority of Turks must by now realize to be a senseless adventure.

The fact, however, that the account appears in Embros and other leading organs of Greek public opinion, which are not normally inclined to offer excuses for Turkey, makes it impossible to dismiss it on this count.

MILITARY REVOLT IN ADRIANOPLE

Turks Angry Because German Officers Are Put Over Them —Trouble in Capital Too.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MILAN, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle).—A military revolution has started in Adrianople in consequence of the subjection of the Turkish forces to German commanders.

Il Secolo's correspondent at Bucharest, who transmits this information, adds that deep discontent is also manifest in Constantinople, where the army has been "stiffened" by Teuton officers, who occupy all the higher posts.

BLESSED MEN AS SHIP SANK.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—A Reuter dispatch from Petrograd says:

"A graphic account has been received here of the end of the Russian transport Pruth, which the Russians sank rather than surrender her to the Turkish cruiser Goeben.

"When called upon to surrender, her Captain headed the Pruth for the shore, opened the valves, and blew a hole in the bottom of the vessel. Lieut. Ragowsky perished while attempting to fire a second charge of explosives. Part of the crew got off in boats, while the others jumped into the water and were picked up by the Turkish ships.

"The ship's chaplain and a handful of men were left aboard. As the ship went down the chaplain was seen on deck giving his blessing to the men who remained about him, cheering and singing the national anthem."

TURKISH SHIP CAPTURED.

Torpedo Boat Falls in Hands of the Allies Off Asia Minor.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—A Turkish torpedo boat, which escaped from the Dardanelles, has been captured off Tenedos, an island five miles off the northwest coast of Asia Minor, according to an Athens dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph Company.

Looking to the eastward, we could see the reason for this sudden departure, for a warship, which we afterward learned was the Australian cruiser Sydney, was coming up at full speed in pursuit. The Emden did not wait to discuss matters, but firing her first shot at a range of about 3,700 yards, steamed north as hard as she could go.

Rangefinder Crippled.

At first the firing of the Emden seemed excellent, while that of the Sydney was somewhat erratic. This, as I afterward learned, was due to the fact that the Australian cruiser's rangefinder was put out of action by one of the only two shots the Germans got home. However, the British gunners soon overcame any difficulties that this may have caused and settled down to their work, so that before long two of the Emden's funnels had been shot away. She also lost one of her masts quite early in the fight. Both blazing away with their big guns, the two cruisers disappeared below the horizon, the Emden being on fire.

After the great naval duel passed from our sight and we could turn out attention to the portion of the German crew that had been left behind, we found that these men had put off in their boats obedient to the signal of the siren, but when their ship steamed off without them they could do nothing else but come ashore again. On relanding they lined upon the shore of the lagoon, evidently determined to fight to the finish if the British cruiser sent a party ashore, but the dueling cruiser had disappeared, and at 6 P. M. the German raiders embarked on the old schooner Ayessa, which belongs to Mr. Ross, the "uncrowned king" of the islands. Seizing a quantity of clothes and stores, they sailed out and have not been seen since.

Early the next morning, Tuesday, Nov. 10, we saw the Sydney returning, and at 8:45 A. M. she anchored off the island. From various members of the crew I got some details of the running fight with the Emden. The Sydney, having an advantage in speed, was able to keep out of range of the Emden's guns and to bombard her with her own heavier metal. The engagement lasted eighty minutes, the Emden finally running ashore on North Keeling Island and becoming an utter wreck.

Two Shots Kill Four Men.

Only two German shots proved effective. One of these failed to explode, but smashed the main range finder and killed one man. The other killed three men and wounded fourteen.

Each of the cruisers attempted to torpedo the other, but both were unsuccessful, and the duel proved a contest in hard pounding at long range. The Sydney's speed during the fighting was twenty-six knots and the Emden's twenty-four knots, the British ship's superiority of two knots enabling her to choose the range at which the battle should be fought, and to make the most of her superior guns.

The Sydney left here at 11 A. M. Tuesday in the hope of picking up any of the survivors of the Bureak, the collier that had been in attendance on the Emden and was sunk after an engagement on the previous day. Finally, with a number of wounded prisoners on board, the Sydney left here yesterday, and our few hours of war excitement were over.

CONDEMNS EMDEN'S METHODS.

Witness Recalls How She Deceived the Jemtchug at Penang.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

CALCUTTA, India, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The tendency to overlook the fact that the Emden's raids had been ruinous for Indian ports, in view of the sportsmanlike behavior of Capt. von Muller, had a rude shock yesterday when eyewitnesses of the sinking of the Russian cruiser Jemtchug arrived here and said that when the Emden approached the port of Penang she replied to the Russian cruiser's challenge with "Yarmouth, coming to anchorage."

Before the officer of the watch could reply the Emden swung her stern toward the Jemtchug and fired a torpedo, which struck the Jemtchug amidships. Then the German cruiser poured broadsides into the Jemtchug, which blew up with a deafening roar as the fire reached her magazines. The whole affair, this witness said, lasted barely twenty minutes, and scarcely a single member of the Jemtchug's crew survived.

PLAN TO GREET VON MULLER.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The Australians are making preparations to welcome Capt. Carl von Muller, commander of the German cruiser Emden, destroyed recently by the Australian cruiser Sydney, according to the Sydney correspondent of The Evening News.

BERLIN, Nov. 12, (via The Hague and London.)—All the newspapers of Berlin unite in publishing articles in praise of the commerce-destroying career of the German cruiser Emden, and they say her final destruction always had been counted upon.

The Morgenpost says that since the beginning of the world never before has a single ship taken part in international warfare with such terrible results. All the newspapers reprint from London journals laudatory articles on Capt. von Muller, the commander of the Emden.

Major Morath, the military critic, writes in the Tageblatt: "There has been no question that the career of the Emden was bound to come to an end before long. The British Admiralty would have lost the confidence of the nation unless it finally succeeded in destroying her. In view of the great difference between the fighting power of the Emden and that of her opponent, the Sydney, it is no wonder that she suffered severely. Her career has been a glorious one and never will be forgotten."

TREASURES SUNK BY EMDEN.

Geddes Civic History Collection Lost with the Clan Grant.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—On the Clan Grant, one of the vessels sunk by the Emden, was the unique collection of material dealing with civic history gathered by Prof. Patrick Geddes. The collection represented the work of a lifetime, and it is beyond hope that Prof. Geddes will ever be able to replace the models, charts, ancient maps, and diagrams he gathered to illustrate the evolution of civic life.

The Architects' War Committee, a body formed to watch the interests of members of the profession affected by the war, has contributed £50 ($250), to enable Prof. Geddes to replace some of his material, but he can never be compensated for his loss of time and labor.

Dr. Geddes is professor of Botany at University College, Dundee, and Senior President of University Hall, Edinburgh. He has written works on botany, civic development, and evolution. He also is noted for his travels and explorations.

GOEBEN CRIPPLED BY SHELL.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12.—A dispatch received here from Constantinople says that the Turkish cruiser Goeben was penetrated by a shell at her water line during the recent bombardment of the Dardanelles by the Allied Anglo-French fleet.

The damage inflicted is described as serious.

CAPTURE GERMAN STEAMER.

French Interne 150 Men Found Aboard the Vessel.

PERPIGNAN, France, Nov. 12.—A French cruiser, steaming off the coast, captured a German steamer which had on board 150 men and what was described as a suspicious cargo.

The Germans were interned here.

CRADOCK LISTED AS DEAD.

LONDON, Nov. 12. — The Admiralty tonight published the names of fifty-two officers and warrant officers who were aboard the British cruiser Good Hope when she was sunk, with the cruiser Monmouth, by the German squadron off the coast of Chile. The names include that of Rear Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock, commander of the British ships.

The Monmouth had aboard forty-two officers. The Captain of the Good Hope was Philip Francklin. The Captain of the Monmouth was Frank Brandt.

With the announcement of the names the Admiralty said that, in the absence of further information, the loss of the Good Hope and Monmouth was officially presumed.

Does your mirror say "Overwork?"
YOU know it does, but—the keener the brain the more unwilling it is to admit physical weakness. And yet you cannot escape the grim fact that overwork is undermining your system, weakening your nerves, upsetting digestion—driving you toward physical breakdown.
Now, there is a scientific food-tonic of which Arnold Bennett, the famous novelist, says that it has had a wonderful effect upon his nerves—of which Sir Gilbert Parker says that it feeds the nerves and gives fresh vigor to the overworked body and mind—of which Colonel Watterson says that without it he believes he could not have regained his vitality—from which scores of other famous people have received new strength, a greater capacity for work, a new joy in life.
That food tonic is Sanatogen. Over 21,000 physicians have written in terms of praise of Sanatogen's reconstructive help—think what that means! And frankly, is it not about time you gave Sanatogen a trial?
Sanatogen is sold by good druggists everywhere in three sizes, from $1.00 up.

RUSSIANS TAKE JOHANNISBURG

PRZEMYSL SIEGE RESUMED

MEET DISASTER ON PRUTH

Two Divisions Surrounded and Cut to Pieces—Grand Duke Nicholas Preparing to Strike in Germany.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—The Russian army under Gen. Rennenkampff is fighting its way into East Prussia and has taken Johannisburg, which is on the railway from Lyck to Soldau, both of which towns are already in Russian hands. This gives to Russia the control of an important railway line which skirts the frontier in German territory and several branch railways running into the interior.

The central army, which drove the Germans back from the Vistula, has had only unimportant engagements, but it is known to be pushing forward to the borders of Posen and Silesia, which the Germans are crossing.

The Russian left wing has followed the Kielce Railway to the Austrian frontier and is within a few miles of Cracow, the siege of which is imminent.

The southern army, under Gen. Ruzsky, is at Rzeszow, between Przemysl and Cracow, and its crossing of the San River is being opposed by the Austrians.

Another detachment continues the siege of Przemysl, while still another is operating against the Austrians, who are holding the passage of the Carpathians.

The manner in which Grand Duke Nicholas, the Russian Commander-in-Chief, is wielding these armies, and the mobility they are showing are the subject of admiration on the part of military men here.

In East Prussia on Nov. 11 an action developed on the front of Stalluponen, Krugtanken, and the region of Soldau. Our troops occupied Johannisburg.

Beyond the Vistula battles of secondary importance occurred in the region of Kalisz, (Russian Poland), and Neschava, where advance guards of the enemy sought to progress.

In the Carpathians, Austrian rearguards maintained at the crossings on the upper San in the region of Sanok were attacked by our troops.

The siege of Przemysl, which was suspended during the period in which the Austro-German armies were on the offensive, has been re-established.

PREPARING ANOTHER BLOW.

Russians Plan Invasion of Germany on a Wide Front.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—The Russian advance in East Prussia continues, but this time it is a purely military movement, unlike the first chivalrous dash at all costs to relieve the pressure upon France and save Paris. The Germans appear to be disputing every inch of the ground.

Conflicts presumably of a minor advance guard nature have taken place west of the Goldapp and 116 miles away between Mlawa and Soldau. In both regions the Russians have driven their enemy back.

The German official summary of the Polish disasters assures the world that the whole adventure was a deep-laid scheme on the part of Gen. von Hindenburg to draw the Russians away from their base. The next fortnight will show how admirably the German General has succeeded in the plan, born of his appalling failure to effect anything in Poland.

Three weeks ago the Germans planned to occupy Poland up to the Vistula, wintering in Warsaw and Ivangorod. They brought reaping and thrashing machinery with which to get the Polish crops in and there are many other indications of their intention of a prolonged stay. While established on the Vistula they were to assist Austria to recover Galicia and then they were to proceed in a triumphal march through Russia together.

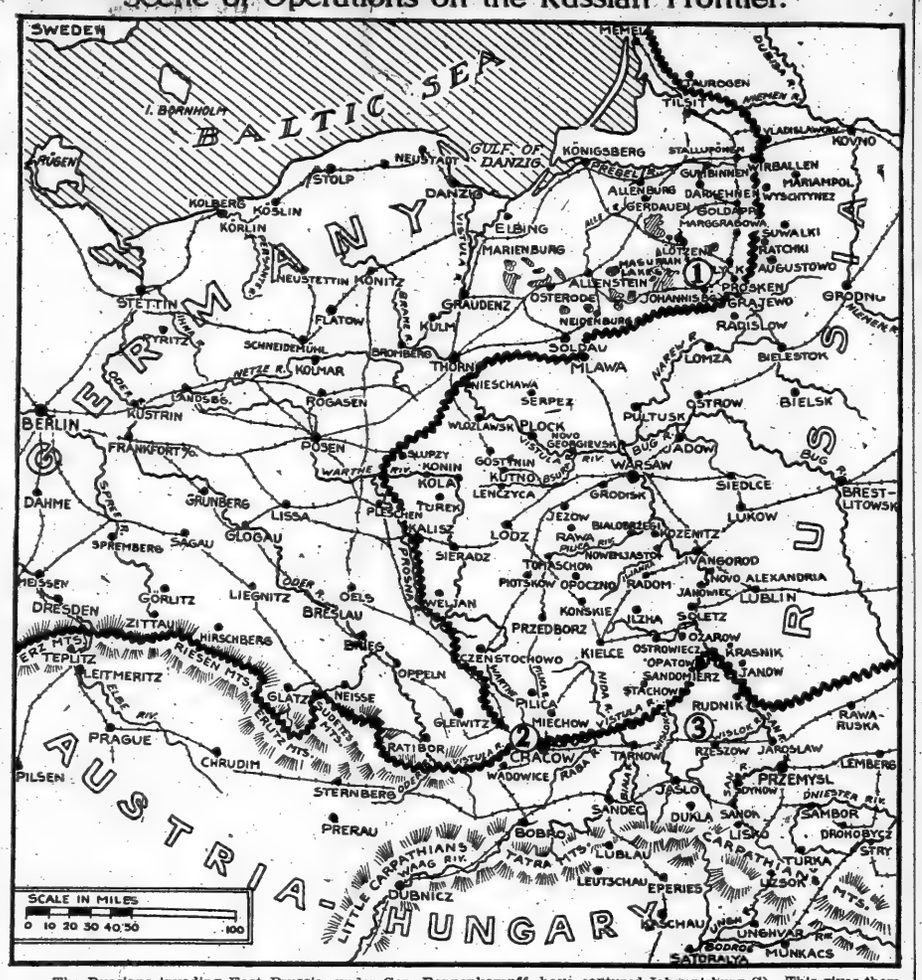
Unfortunately the Russian Commander in Chief also has his plans, which he carries through with iron rigidity. If I am not mistaken, Russia is preparing a move on a wide front into Germany when the time comes. This front has still a considerable extent of German territory to recover before it gets into line for this advance. Some interesting tactical problems with plenty of fighting may be looked for in the near future along the direction which may now be hinted as the Mlawa-Soldau region; but this as a matter for the future.

At the present time good progress is being made with the pursuit of the Austrians who are retreating westward on Cracow, from which the Russian forces are now distant about forty miles on the east side and only half that on the north. The civilian population of Cracow is again being evicted, this time under German command.

The tour of the extended fronts occupied by the Russian armies which Emperor Nicholas is now making will last a fortnight and will cover several thousand miles. After spending the first week with the armies on the Vistula and East Prussian fronts, where the news of the Turco-Germanic attacks on Russian ports was conveyed to his Majesty, the Emperor on Sunday reached Kholm, which a couple of months ago was occupied by the Austrian hosts, but which now is a base hospital, and proceeded thence to Siedlice. Gens. Ivanoff and Russky had the honor of being invited to the imperial table.

After visiting the hospitals, reviewing the troops for the front, and receiving the reports of the Generals of the armies, the Emperor yesterday reached Rovno, where his sister, the Grand Duchess Olga Alexandrovna, has had charge of the base hospital of the Red Cross since the beginning of the war, personally tending the wounded.

Scene of Operations on the Russian Frontier.



The Russians invading East Prussia, under Gen. Rennenkampff, have captured Johannisburg (1). This gives them control of the important frontier railroad running from Lyck to Soldau, which cities they also hold.

The left wing of the Russian Army, which is following the railroad from Kielce in its march to Cracow (2), is only a few miles from that fortress. The southern army, which is also nearing Cracow through Galicia, has reached Rzeszow (3).

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Petrograd says:

"News of the beginning of a battle at Cracow, Galicia, is momentarily expected.

"The Germans have been digging trenches and erecting barbed-wire entanglements along the whole of the Russo-German frontier, with the object of impeding the progress of the Russian forces. It is understood, however, that their main plan is to retire on the fortresses of Königsberg, Thorn, Graudenz, Posen, Glogau, Breslau, and Neisse."

TELLS OF RUSSIAN DEFEAT.

Berlin Paper Says Invaders Were Surprised Near Czernowitz.

BERLIN, Nov. 11, via London, Nov. 12.—The Frankfurter Zeitung has received the following dispatch regarding the reported defeat of the Russians near Czernowitz, capital of the Austrian province of Bukowina:

"The Austrians made an unexpected movement, crossing the Pruth a few kilometers northward of Czernowitz, and suddenly attacked the Russian right wing. The Russians were completely surprised, and after a short resistance decided to fall back upon their base, which seemed free. However, they were then taken under fire by Austrian artillery, which caused terrible losses among the Russian detachments. The battlefield was covered with corpses.

"The Russians were beaten also yesterday in East Galicia, being repulsed in an action between Rzeszow and Jaslo."

An official report issued today says:

In the eastern theatre of the war our cavalry operating near Kalisz have driven back the Russian cavalry which made a fresh advance.

Vienna headquarters reports that in the battle for the heights of Misar against the Servians between Nov. 6 and 11, 4,300 prisoners were taken.

VENICE, Nov. 12.—Gen. Potiorek, commander of the Austrian army operating against the Servians, has issued a general order to the fifth and sixth armies fighting in Servia to do their utmost to break the last resistance of their opponents and end the campaign before Winter sets in with all the terrible sufferings which would follow.

SHOOT MUTINEERS WHOLESALE

Terrible Conditions Reported to Prevail in Austrian Army.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—Details of the condition of the Austro-Hungarian forces have reached here, and form a ghastly tale of death and suffering.

As was reported before the last great battle, which proved such a crushing defeat, the Austrian War Office sent to the front all the men of the Landsturm, three-fourths of whom were scarcely fit for the police work and railway watching which they had done up to then, and were much less capable of rendering service in the field.

The military authorities had no choice but to call them up, for all the best troops had been put out of action in Galicia, while the Hungarian cavalry, which are the finest soldiers the Dual Monarchy possesses, were all drafted north long ago to help the Germans push through to Calais. They behaved splendidly in Belgium, but were almost annihilated by the naval guns. In a single list of the losses suffered by this crack corps in one week alone appear the names of 867 Magyars belonging to the most exclusive circles of the Hungarian aristocracy.

Apart from its enormous losses in the field, the Austro-Hungarian Army has been seriously affected as a fighting force by the indiscipline and even sedition seething in the ranks. Some of the twenty-four regiments from the Carpathian region were shot down more or less wholesale at the very outset of hostilities for refusing to march against the Russians. Despite the terrible example made of the mutineers, the spirit of insubordination was not checked, with the consequence that in the very first engagements whole regiments went over to the Russians.

In Bosnia and Herzegovina things are rapidly approaching a crisis. Natives are deserting from their regiments by hundreds together. There is a constant stream of men returning to their homes from all sides. German troops have been detached to fetch them back, and as all the villagers side with the deserters, civil war is raging over entire districts.

The Germans are relentless in their methods of dealing with the mutineers. In order to strike terror into the population executions are carried out wholesale. At Bugojno, for instance, out of 380 able-bodied men that place contained only 111 escaped being shot. At Mostar 80 men were executed at the same time, while the shooting of parties of 15, 20, and 30 at a time is of daily occurrence. Frequently whole villages are burned down as well as a further example.

It is easy to understand after this how the Russians are driving the Austrians like sheep before them, without taking into account the terrible ravages cholera is making in the ranks of the unfortunate Austro-Hungarian soldiers.

FIXES 1916 AS WAR LIMIT.

But Invasion of England Won't Be Easy, Says Austrian General.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Field Marshal Evettovich of the Austrian Army has published an article fixing 1916 as the extreme limit of the war.

Next Spring, he writes, England can put another army into the field and in the Summer and Autumn other belligerents can collect fresh forces, but in 1916 no more can possibly be raised. The entrance of neutral States into the conflict will prolong rather than abbreviate the war.

A great naval battle will be inevitable, and Germany will find the invasion of England most difficult.

REFUGEES SPREAD BAD NEWS.

Berliners Amazed and Dismayed to Learn of Russian Invasion.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—Profound dismay has been caused in Berlin by the news, which had been carefully suppressed by the censor, that the Russian invaders have again crossed the Eastern frontier and have advanced into the provinces of East Prussia and Posen. The news, though not published in the newspapers, has reached Berlin through refugees from the frontier districts of the invaded provinces, who fled to escape the horrors of war.

The memory of the earlier Russian invasion of East Prussia was just beginning to fade from the memory of Berliners, and practically all the fugitives who after those earlier days had fled to the capital had been re-established in their homes. Their reappearance in Berlin and other towns of the interior in a state of greater panic than ever has thus created a much greater impression than the earlier fights.

The suppression of news by the censor merely increases public anxiety, and the prevailing depression has been further augmented by news which has leaked through from Vienna that the return of civilians to their homes in western Galicia around Cracow has been stopped by the Austrian Government. These fugitives rushed from Galicia to Vienna during the earlier periods of the Russian invasion. More recently during the operations in Russian Poland the authorities had been sending them home in batches. The sudden order that no more be allowed to return to Galicia for the present has created a very bad impression in Vienna and, indirectly, in Berlin.

News of the latest Russian advance is being carefully suppressed by all the German and Austrian newspapers. The Austro-German forces are still thought to be in the heart of Russian Poland and on the verge of capturing Warsaw.

SERBS ROUT 6,000 AUSTRIANS.

Capture 2,000 When Invaders Cross the Danube Near Semandria.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—A dispatch from Nish, Servia, to the Havas Agency recounts the fighting on the Servian frontier during the past few days. It says:

"On the Bosnian side, as on the banks of the Save and the Danube, the past week has been marked by a renewal of Austrian attacks with fresh troops and a quantity of heavy artillery.

"The enemy directed his efforts toward the Tzer Plateau so as to collaborate with troops which, from the Drina, violently attacked the Servian positions at Yagodna, Boragne, and Goutchevo.

"For strategic reasons the Servians abandoned the positions at Goutchevo, retiring in good order to a point a few kilometers in the rear.

"In the fighting around Shabats the Servian regiments, with extraordinary bravery, repulsed the Austrians repeatedly, inflicting considerable losses.

"Tuesday, at 3 A. M., Austrian battalions comprising about 6,000 men crossed the Danube near Semandria (about thirty miles southeast of Belgrade) under cover of the fire of monitors and artillery. The combat that ensued lasted until 5 P. M., and resulted in a check to the enemy.

"A thousand Austrians were killed, 2,000 were taken prisoners, and the others fled on the monitors or scattered among the vines around Semandria and surendered in groups. Among the prisoners are two Colonels and several officers of lesser rank. The Servians also took a number of quick-firers. The troops of the Vardar region particularly distinguished themselves in this fight."

RUMOR OF GERMAN LOSS.

London Hears Three Cruisers Are Sunk in the Pacific.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—A report was current in the lobbies of the House of Commons this afternoon that three German cruisers had been sunk in the Pacific at a place not specified.

However, no confirmation of the rumor was obtainable.

SAW EIGHT JAPANESE SHIPS.

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay, Nov. 12.—A dispatch received here from Valparaiso says that the Japanese squadron seen recently off Easter Island in the Pacific by a merchant vessel consisted of eight vessels.

The battle cruiser Kongo was the flagship.

WAR MAKES CARPENTIER POOR

Seizure of Coal Mines Sweeps Away the French Boxer's Fortune.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—The Illustrated Weekly Sporting says that Georges Carpentier, who was reputed to be worth $300,000, has lost the greater part of his fortune by the seizure of the coal mines at Lens and Courrieres, in which his manager, Decamps, is also largely interested.

THE WAR SITUATION.

(An Associate Editor of The Army and Navy Journal.)

The capture of Dixmude by the Germans and their appearance on the west bank of the Yser show a fighting strength in this part of the line that will yet land some hard blows on the armies of the Allies. The sudden rush of the Germans overcame the troops that were holding the main line of defense of the Allies. The latter, however, soon rushed in reserves, and closed up the gap in their positions. The fighting in this district is apparently again settling down to the deadlock that is its normal status. In the territory where the Aisne joins the Oise the French report another gain northeast of Tracy-le-Val. This region has been the scene of desperate fighting ever since Gen. von Kluck first took up his position in the forest of l'Aigle in the middle of September.

These impetuous attacks that the Germans are delivering at nearly all points of the line are part of the policy that they have been pursuing with such notable success in this field during the last month. In order that they might be able to turn their attention to the east, it was essential that they should hold back the Allies in France with the smallest force possible. They accomplished this by keeping their troops in the west so active that the Allies were kept busy in shifting their forces to check the various attacks.

The German plan miscarried, though, in that it failed to inflict a serious blow upon Russia. Having failed in the east, the Germans are now confronted in both battle zones by superior forces. It is now becoming a serious question for them as to how they are going to release from either border enough forces to strengthen the armies on the other frontier sufficiently to conduct a vigorous campaign. If they try to stand on the defensive in every field there can be but one result. At some point the efforts of the Allies will in time succeed in breaking through. The German lines will thus by degrees be forced further and further back into their home territory. Both the fighting power and the staying power of the German nation are equal to those of any other people in the world. If the war should go against them they will certainly not give in until serious privations and sufferings have reached to all parts of the empire. Even under the most unfavorable conditions this could hardly happen inside of twelve months.

On the other hand, if the Allies should be defeated in a great battle their armies would have to make a rapid retreat to points at which they could reorganize their forces. A gradual development of their strength would again take place, and they would move slowly to regain lost ground. Such a reverse would result in the addition of six months or a year to the probable length of the war.

The enormous use of automobiles in this war for transporting supplies of every kind, heavy guns, and even detachments of troops, raises a question as to the possibility of the maintenance of this vast number of machines in service. These cars require constant tinkering under the best of conditions. Their useful life must be especially short under war service conditions. The Allies can make good these losses by large purchases in America and other countries, but it would seem that the Germans must soon find this means of transportation very much reduced. In gasoline and spirits also Germany is at a serious disadvantage. She imports practically all of her gasoline, while the grain and potatoes normally used for making alcohol must now be used for food.

A lull in the Russians' operations in the north is now giving them time to gather at the front the force that will be needed to attack the Germans in the defensive positions that they have occupied. In East Prussia, particularly, the Russians are going carefully, for the operations in this field are of secondary importance. If the forces in Poland can push westward into Germany, the German East Prussian army will have no choice but to retreat. Consequently, the Russians cannot afford to take any chances of a disastrous defeat in the lake region such as that by which Gen. von Hindenburg two months ago won his great renown. In southwestern Poland it is even more important for the Russians to bring up to the front all possible strength in men and artillery before they deliver their final attack upon the intrenched line that the Germans have occupied along the Silesian border.

The object of the rapid retreat of the latter was to have the next battle take place on a field selected by them. Every advantage of the ground would thus be theirs. If the Russians could be enticed into delivering an attack before the arrival of their heavy artillery, the Germans would thus have a chance to get revenge for their reverses along the Vistula.

The advance of the Russians in Galicia will soon set free their Cossack divisions on this flank for a new invasion of Hungary. When the Austrians have closed in sufficiently to make a strong stand against the Russian pursuit, the fighting will take on the character of siege operations like that in France. Mounted troops are of little value in such combats, but must be moved to the flanks, where the fighting will give them opportunities for performing their true role.

FRENCH CRITICISM OF WAR POLICY

Military Expert Discouraged by the Germans' Continued Occupation.

BUT PUBLIC IS CONFIDENT

Temps Points to Germany's Lost Ground and Rapid Increase of Allies' Resources.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Wednesday, Nov. 11, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—The first outspoken criticism of the conduct of the war has just been allowed to see the light here, and is said to emanate from a high military expert, no longer on active service. It may be said at the outset that the views he expresses are anything but an accurate interpretation of popular feeling here. Public opinion generally is more than satisfied with the way in which the operations are developing. Although aware that mistakes have been made and conscious more especially of the fact that France was decidedly not so well prepared for war as she ought to have been, the public is confident that victory will come in the end, owing to Gen. Joffre's skillful leadership, to the inherent bravery of his men, and to the staunch support given by the British and the signal services rendered by the Belgians.

Starting from the assumption that the sole object of the war is to guarantee the integrity, honor, and life of the nation, the critic in question protests against the newspapers daring to describe the situation as good, when "from Rheims to Mézières, from Lille to Argonne, the German hordes are pillaging and violating our soil." He further remarks:

"The Germans' offensive carried them at one go, as it were, right across Belgium to the very gates of Paris. All Belgium is now in their possession, except a narrow strip of land, while they also hold our northern and northeastern territory. At the most moderate estimate this represents, both in territory and population, at least one-sixth of the total wealth of France. Our losses in land, buildings, factories, mines, railways, and so on, must total fully 30,000,000 francs, ($6,000,000,) without taking into account the shame, insults, and loss of life we have had to endure; and yet eminent military critics on the other side of the Channel assert that the German offensive is a fiasco and has resulted in nothing, while our own papers complacently repeat that the situation is excellent."

The Temps, which publishes this complaint, makes at the same time a running commentary on the points raised. It asks how any impartial observer can honestly say that the situation is not reassuring, when he compares the position of the armies today with what it was only a few weeks ago. Only a very short time back, it says, it seemed almost impossible to drive the invader back, yet where is he now? It is complained that England has put only 70,000 men in the field, but the critics forget that this number is being rapidly increased, and it takes time to prepare for the field the men England has got together—since England at first realized as little as France exactly what the war meant; but she loyally sent France all the men she had, and then set to work as only England can to grapple with the emergency. For the rest, everything is relative in this world, and war is no exception. The war has inflicted incalculable losses upon France; its horrors surpass all that could have been imagined; yet the situation is now excellent. For all that, the Temps continues, but for Belgium and the Allies, France must easily have been defeated. At the present moment the facts of the case are that it is Germany which is now in a corner and compelled to muster all her resources to make one last effort to retrieve her fortunes.

GERMANS SPARED APIA.

Cruisers Said to Have Visited Place, But Fired No Shots.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 12.—According to a letter received here today, the German cruisers Scharnhorst and Gneisenau on Sept. 14 steamed into the harbor of Apia, formerly German Samoa but now held by the British, and trained their guns on the fortifications, over which the British flag was flying. Then for some reason the two warships steamed away without firing a shot.

A garbled account of the visit of the two German warships was carried to Pago-Pago, American Samoa, where it was reported that Apia had been taken by the Germans. Accordingly, twelve seamen from the North German Lloyd trader Elsass, which had put into Pago-Pago for refuge, set sail in an open boat for Apia, to be of what service they could. On arrival they were arrested and sent prisoners to New Zealand.

LIEUT. COL. PERCIVAL IS KILLED IN BATTLE

Widow is Cecil Henland, the Writer—Other Well Known Names on Casualty List.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—A casualty list dated Nov. 3 was issued here tonight. It gives the names of ten officers killed and twenty-eight wounded.

Among the killed are Lieut. Col. C. B. Moreland of the Welsh Regiment, and Lieut. Col. Arthur Jex-Blake Percival of the Northumberland Fusiliers.

In the list of wounded appear the names of Lieut. Col. R. H. H. Boys, of the Royal Engineers and Major B. T. Bell of the Queen's Royal West Surrey Regiment.

Lieut. Col. Percival, a distinguished soldier, was the youngest son of the Bishop of Hereford. His widow, Cecil Henland, whom he married in 1908, at the age of 38, is a well-known author of children's books.

Col. Percival was educated at Marlborough and Rugby and entered the army in 1892. He served in the Sudan in 1898 under Kitchener, and was present at the battle of Khartoum, receiving the Khédive's Medal with two clasps, and was thrice mentioned in dispatches.

In 1905, again in the Sudan, he took part in the operations against the Nyam-Nyam tribes and won mention in dispatches and two more medals. The next year he fought at Talodi, South Kondfan, and again was mentioned in dispatches. Later he commanded the Camel Corps in the Egyptian Army, and, when the present war began he was General Staff Officer at the War Office. He had become a Captain at 30, a Major at 35; received the Distinguished Service Order in 1902, and was admitted to the Staff College in 1908. His services at Mons made him Lieutenant Colonel of the Northumberland Fusiliers.

Major Beauchamp Tyndall Pell is a holder of the Distinguished Service Order, and had seen much service in China, on the northwest frontier of India and in the South African war.

ACQUITS BRITISH ADMIRAL.

Troubridge Blameless in Escape of Goeben and Breslau.

WEYMOUTH, England, Nov. 12, (via London.)—Rear Admiral F. D. Troubridge, second in command of the British Mediterranean Fleet, was today acquitted by a court-martial of neglect in connection with the escape of the former German cruisers Goeben and Breslau. Rear Admiral Sir Archibald Berkeley Milne, formerly in command of the Mediterranean Fleet, was previously exculpated from similar charges.

While they still belonged to the German Navy the Goeben and Breslau eluded British warships sent to attack them, and, escaping from the Messina Straits, made their way to the Dardanelles, where they were transferred to the Turkish Navy.

AUSTRALIA EMBARKS 25,000 TROOPS TO WAR

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 12.—Passengers, who arrived here to-day on the liner Ventura, which left Sydney on Oct. 24, reported that a few days before sailing 25,000 Australian troops were embarked in twenty-three transports, convoyed by fourteen cruisers, and sailed under cover of night for a destination reported to be Egypt.

While off the Fiji Islands the Ventura sighted warships astern. They came up rapidly and proved to be the French cruiser Montcalm, the British cruiser Encounter, and the Australian battle cruiser Australia.

Officers came aboard, scanned the ship's manifest and passenger list, asked for the latest newspapers, and returned to their vessels. This is the first time the Montcalm, whose presence has been reported in all parts of the Pacific, has been placed definitely.

Field Marshal Earl Kitchener, the British Secretary of State for War, announced at the Lord Mayor's banquet at the Guildhall on Monday night, that in addition to the forces of Canada, the vanguard of which had been welcomed in England, soldiers were on their way from Australia and New Zealand to fight for the Imperial cause.

DUKE ERNST AT THE FRONT.

Kaiser's Son-in-Law, Reported Wounded, Now Fighting Again.

PARIS, Nov. 12.—A dispatch to The Temps from Bordeaux says that Ernst August, Duke of Brunswick, son-in-law of Emperor William, who was reported to have been wounded in action, left Brunswick on Nov. 5 and returned to the front.

The Sunday edition of The New York Times during the ten months of 1914 gained 151,537 agate lines—the only New York Sunday newspaper to record a gain.

The Sunday edition of The New York Times was the only New York Sunday newspaper to show a gain in October.

The advertising rate of The New York Times, 45 cents per agate line, with circulation both daily and Sunday exceeding 275,000 copies, makes the cost less than one cent per line for each 6,000 circulation; the cheapest—as it is the best—newspaper advertising in the world.

GERMANS GIVE AID TO BELGIAN RELIEF

Member of American Commission Reports That They Are Doing Everything to Help.

BELGIANS GIVE $3,000,000

Will Pay for Transport of Supplies —Commission Issues New Call to Americans.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Jarvis E. Bell of New York, the first member of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium to return from Belgium since the distribution of relief began, states that instead of hampering the efforts to relieve the starving population, the German authorities are doing their utmost to assist the commission in its work.

The Belgian-Dutch border now is practically closed to passenger traffic, only persons on official business being permitted to pass, but members of the commission are allowed to travel back and forth without the slightest hindrance.

In Belgium, the shipments of foodstuffs, consigned to the American Minister, Brand Whitlock, and in care of the commission, are permitted to proceed with minimum delay. The German officials have treated the members of the commission with great consideration.

Mr. Bell praises equally the Dutch officials for their assistance in the matter of food shipments. In the case of the Coblenz, the first American relief ship to arrive, the officials suspended the law momentarily, and for the first time in history a ship was permitted to discharge her cargo at a Dutch port on Sunday.

The American Commission for Relief in Belgium has received a check on the Bank of England for $3,000,000, which was contributed by prominent Belgians interested in the relief of their countrymen.

With the emergency work in Belgium well under way the commission is now prepared to assume the permanent task of keeping Belgians supplied with food. It has made the following statement:

"The American Commission for Relief in Belgium today received a check for $3,000,000, which it is estimated will be necessary for the transportation of foodstuffs for the next three months from various parts of the world into Belgium. This money has been advanced to the commission under the guarantee given by various Belgian relief committees and important Belgians.

"This substantial sum is a most convincing evidence of the desire of the Belgians themselves to assist the commission to the fullest extent they are capable of doing. The contribution also emphasizes the urgency of the situation and, as large as the sum is, it must be borne in mind that foodstuffs to the value of about $4,000,000 monthly must be secured for seven or eight months. Of this amount $1,000,000 monthly will be required for the expense of transportation.

"The commission is arranging for a regular steamship service from the Atlantic seaboard and transport service from the interior to the seaboard. The commission urges all local associations and others interested in Belgian relief throughout the United States to convert all their funds into local purchases of foodstuffs, as they can be more advantageously purchased by such local bodies.

"Furthermore, the commission feels that those generous American people who are unable to contribute money should contribute something from their own stores of food into the hands of the local organizations. Each American farmer, out of the abundance of his crop, and every resident, from his own store, can well afford a few bushels of grain. What is needed is cereals—wheat, flour, shelled corn, beans, and peas, and the bacon and ham, as these are the only articles that will stand the long and difficult transport conditions.

"The commission is co-operating in a most cordial manner with other organizations and institutions in America and does not wish to overlap the efforts of any one. It wishes to emphasize that its functions are the reception, transportation, and distribution of foodstuffs to the Belgians from every source. By the machinery of the commission every pound of foodstuffs contributed reaches the Belgians without cost to the contributors. A branch of this commission is being perfected in New York to cooperate with others, and supplies collected by the various local organizations at central points will be received and transported by it. This organization and its personnel will be completed within a few days.

"The commission already has delivered an installment of foodstuffs into the hands of local relief committees in virtually every centre in Belgium. The commission is receiving most cordial assistance from the Dutch officials in expediting food through Holland and most helpful facilities from the German officials in the nature of an escort from the frontier to the various distribution points."

GERMANS HAVE AMPLE FOOD.

Only Curtailment Is in Amount of Wheat in Bread, American Reports.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 12. — An American who returned to London today from Germany, but who, because of business reasons, asked that his name be not published, gave a graphic description of present conditions there. He told of having seen Ambassador Gerard shortly before Election Day. He asked Mr. Gerard about his Senatorial campaign, and the Ambassador replied that he was completely in the dark as to his chances. It was said by this American that Hugo Münsterberg's brother had been inquiring of several Americans if it was so that his brother had left Harvard.

Speaking of conditions in Germany, the American said:

"The confidence of the Germans had not diminished in any particular since I was there in the second week of the war. I visited many big cities, and was surprised to find so large a proportion of men of military age not yet called on for service. As to foodstuffs, there has been no curtailment, only the bread is not entirely made of wheat. This precaution was taken by the Government, which knows just how much food there is in Germany and how far it will go. If the Allies think they can starve Germany into submission, there certainly is not the slightest indication of the success of such a policy at the present time.

"Many men have been working in the fields. I had expected to see women doing such work. Great emphasis is placed on the value of the success of the late Fall crops. Every available piece of land in Germany was planted with Fall products shortly after the war started. As to unemployment, I failed to see very much, for the Imperial Government, as well as every town, is carrying out building projects unstintingly.

"In Berlin I found a somewhat apprehensive feeling about the Russians, despite the outward show of confidence in repelling them. The opinion was expressed to me by some Germans that, should the war end in a draw, Germany might take certain portions of Austria to satisfy the people, as well as one port in Belgium and perhaps Liége. You hear about an intended raid on England with 200 Zeppelins, and there is a great feeling of hatred for the English everywhere, but I believe the press is largely responsible for it.

"In some quarters it is felt that Russia's determination to get to the Mediterranean may upset the eventual peace conference, which might give Germany an opportunity to assume a vital rôle; but all this is prefaced on the possible defeat of Germany, which is not really countenanced by any Germans at the present time. The ordinary man in Germany does not know what he can safely say, so he is careful to talk little. The military control everything, and the censorship keeps him from knowing anything not thought good for him."

It was said by this American that Frankfort, because of the fear of possible airship raids, was dark at night, but that all the other big cities were lighted, as usual.

GERMANS LESS CONFIDENT.

First Certainty of Success Has Vanished, Says Italian Diplomatist.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 12.—Reliable reports are received here from Germany through authoritative sources, as some are brought verbally by a prominent diplomatist, showing that the feelings of the people at large have changed. The original unshakable certainty of their military superiority and their infallible success is gradually toning down. It is yet too soon to speak of dissatisfaction or lack of determination, but undoubtedly the first illusions are vanishing. It is not yet discouragement but anxiety that perhaps their country has attempted too much.

A diplomatist who spent fifteen years in Germany said that headquarters at Berlin has begun also to be afraid that Austria will not give the assistance expected. Her inability to crush Servia or defeat Russia, he said, made her "a dead weight" on her ally.

TELLS OF KAISER'S VISIT.

Gen. von Kluck's Report as Published in Berlin.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—The Times says an army order was published on Sunday in Berlin which deserves to be recorded, if only as an example of the military style of Gen. von Kluck. It runs as follows:

His Majesty, the Emperor and King, had the graciousness yesterday to honor the First Army for a second time with his most exalted presence and expressed high praise on the condition of the troops and their great efficiency and brilliant courage. His Majesty visited yesterday a battle position and convinced his most exalted self of the constructions of the first battery in the firing line and of the formation of the trenches and enemy positions in the valley of the Aisne. A review of the grenadier regiment of Prinz Karl and an address to the regiment, which was in splendid order, ended the presence of our most exalted war lord among the troops.

The Most Exalted ordered me to express to the First Army his highest appreciation, and to inform the army of the most excellent impression which he had gained on repeated visits to the army corps. While performing this order of the Most Exalted, I express my congratulations to the commanding Generals and to all troops under them. Forward. VON KLUCK.

BERLIN, (via Amsterdam and London,) Nov. 12.—The Governor of Tsing-tau, China, has sent a cablegram to the German Emperor through the Japanese Legation at Peking, under date of Nov. 9, in which he says:

"After exhausting all efforts, the fortress, which was stormed, was broken through in the centre and fell. The fortress and town were badly damaged by the fire from the howitzers and a strong bombardment from the sea.

"Our artillery was completely overcome. The losses have not yet been ascertained, but in view of the heavy fire, are less than we expected."

DE WET'S REBELS DEFEATED

Botha Attacks Them After a Forced March—250 Captured.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 13.—An official Pretoria dispatch received by Reuter's Telegram Company says that Gen. Louis Botha, commander of the Union of South Africa forces, came into contact with the rebel Gen. De Wet's commando twenty-four miles east of Winburg, Orange Free State, after a forced night march.

The rebels were severely defeated, 250 being captured.

An official dispatch from Lieut. Col. Dirk Vandeventer concerning the defeat on Nov. 8 of a force of Germans and Boer rebels at Zandfontein, near the southern border of German Southwest Africa, was received here today.

According to the report, the Union of South Africa forces inflicted a loss of 120 killed or wounded, and captured twenty-five men. The Union loss was twelve killed and eleven wounded.

"Our officers and men who were killed," the report says, "with some exceptions were shot with dumdum bullets and suffered frightful wounds."

KAISER EXPECTED WAR TO BE SHORT

Germans Assure Times Correspondent He Held Out for Peace Against Ministers.

VON MOLTKE URGED WAR

Story That He Threatened to Commit Suicide—Luxemburg Mecca of German Royalty.

From a Staff Correspondent of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LUXEMBURG, Oct. 19.—That the Kaiser himself expects the war—in France at least—to be of short duration and in fact fondly hopes that peace will be re-established within a month, is the most interesting piece of news picked up in the tiresome sixteen-hour journey from Cologne to Luxemburg. A convalescent infantry Corporal who was returning to the reserve battalion of his regiment at Saarbrucken said to me:

"I received a field postcard recently from a friend who is lying in a field hospital in France, in which he wrote that the Kaiser had paid a visit to the field hospital, had chatted familiarly with the wounded soldiers, and incidentally had said to him and those on the near-by cots: 'Mark my words, there will be peace before the leaves have fallen from the trees.'"

Before leaving Cologne on my way to Luxemburg I had the not unusual experience of being arrested as a spy. While I was writing a story in the Café Monopole there a guest at a near-by table "tipped off" the military authorities. Two husky Landsturm men with fixed bayonets politely requested my presence with them and marched me to the "watch room" in the Dome Hotel. The criminal Inspector was telephoned for and turned me loose on arrival.

They are especially keen on espionage in Cologne and Düsseldorf, owing to the partially successful air raids as well as the highly important railway bridge over the Rhine at Cologne.

Von Moltke the War Maker?

Recent events have not tarnished the Kaiser's reputation as a promoter and lover of peace in the eyes of his own people, and there is not a German to whom you broach the subject who will not tell you that the Kaiser stood out against his advisers and worked for peace right up till the last horn blew. The following sensational story from an apparently well informed source in Cologne is equally interesting and is significant, whether regarded as truth or fiction, as illustrating one type of stories going the rounds in military circles.

"Everybody knows," said my informant, "that the Kaiser did not want this war and was doing everything possible to prevent it, even after he had received proof that Russia was mobilizing. The story is told that the Chief of Staff, von Moltke, argued and pleaded with his Imperial master to declare war on Russia so as not to lose further invaluable time, and that he finally conquered the Kaiser's pacifist opposition in dramatic fashion by half drawing his sword from his scabbard and saying that he would commit suicide under the eyes of his Imperial master if he did not consent to an immediate declaration of war, as to delay meant the suicide of Germany, and he, von Moltke, did not wish to live and see it."

American millionaires and other refugees missed the chance of a lifetime to rub elbows with royalty and semi-royalty when Luxemburg by Jove! with the peers of the Kaiser's realm by not coming to Luxemburg and sitting tight till the refugee rush had blown over. The first invasion of Luxemburg by the Germans, on Aug. 2, headed by Gen. von Tuelf Techa de von Weidenbach, Commander of the Eighth Army Corps, was followed by a rising tide of notables, military and otherwise, that reached its brilliant climax when the Kaiser and his staff came to town the last of September, and the great headquarters were located here for a month. The register of the Hotel Brasseur is a historical document of unique interest. Here is the German Minister to Luxemburg who moved out of his legation when the Kaiser moved in. Also the Archduke Albrecht of Würtemberg on his way to take command of his army; Grand Admiral von Tirpitz, Chief of the Naval Staff; the Crown Prince of Saxony, Prince Adolph of Schaumburg-Lippe, going as volunteer driver of an automobile; the Grand Duke of Oldenburg, Prince Hohenlohe, and swarms of others. The Imperial Chancellor, von Bethman-Hollweg, tried to get a room, but there was nothing, and he had to be passed on to a private hotel. He ate his meals at the Brasseur and I was told that he frequently was heard to exclaim loudly to his table companions between bites, "We will win. We must win."

News from Lichnowsky.

Here also came Prince Lichnowsky, sometime German Ambassador to the Court of St. James's, en route to the front as an officer in von Kluck's cavalry. On his way back, some weeks later, Prince Lichnowsky told a friend here that some of their cavalry detachments had penetrated as far as Fontainebleau, but that the Paris garrison had quite unexpectedly attacked in such superior numbers that they had been forced to retire.

Coming American tourists can also, on request, be shown where the Crown Prince consumed three meals a day while Longwy was being attacked. Americans, however, missed an even more interesting sight by not being here, for the fortress of Longwy is only twenty-five miles away, and tourists could have seen and heard a real battle without personal danger and discomfort. I was told that at night half the town—men, women, and children—took to the hills, a mile out of town, from where a fine moving picture was to be seen of German howitzer batteries opening the grand assault, bombs bursting in air, the town in flames, and a French military monoplane circling overhead, with shells popping around it like fireworks.

Though the great headquarters were moved to Sedan about Oct. 1, and at present are pitched in Mézières and Charleville, Luxemburg is still worth lingering in, for it continues to be the stopping place for the automobiles full of personages going to and fro between the great headquarters and Germany, and a rendesvous for wives. The King of Saxony is booked to arrive tomorrow on his way to the front, and among the dining room full of personages at the Brasseur tonight was the Countess Schoenburg, sister of the murdered Archduchess of Austria.

But no amount of royalties and exalted personages, nor even the war, has made the good Luxemburgers forget "their friends, the Americans," and many expressed the hope that the war would be over before next season, "so that the Americans will come back."

SIGNALS AIDED SUBMARINES

Member of Parliament Voices the Alarm Over Spies' Activity.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—William Joynson-Hicks (Unionist), the well-known philanthropist, voiced, in a speech in the House of Commons today, the widespread anxiety concerning the presence of German spies in this country.

Mr Joynson-Hicks said there was a German in London who had been in touch with a German statesman and the firm of Krupp, and that two sons of the London agent of the Krupp firm had been sworn as special constables in London. These men, Mr. Joynson-Hicks added, might be estimable, but they would be better under lock and key.

There were 70,000 alien enemies in the country, the speaker continued. It was certain that signals had been given to the German submarines to enable them to torpedo British ships, he said, and that by some means a chart of the mined area had reached the Germans. Otherwise, Mr. Joynson-Hicks declared, the German squadron could not have got so near Yarmouth.

Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary, in reply to Mr. Joynson-Hicks, said the Government must be careful that injustice was not done to any person. He said that at any rate his department in this matter was acting under the instructions of the military authorities.

Arthur Henderson, the Labor Party leader, upon the continuation in the House of Commons today of the debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, said organized labor felt that the only course now open was to go straight through with the war until complete and final success crowned the Allies' efforts.

When the end came, he said, labor would use its powerful influence toward a settlement on the lines of true nationalism and democracy. The Government's "White Paper" on the question of allowances for those dependent upon soldiers obviated the necessity for him to go further on that subject, but he still felt that recruits were being improperly treated. He cited cases in which, he said, wives had been insulted by officials of relief associations.

Mr. Henderson also inquired if the Government was in a position to tell more about the escape of the former German cruisers Goeben and Breslau from the British Mediterranean fleet and whether there existed between Germany and Turkey a prior arrangement for the sale of these cruisers.

OPPOSES ALCOHOL IN ARMY.

Archbishop of Canterbury Presides at a London Mass Meeting.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—The Archbishop of Canterbury presided today at a great mass meeting at which resolutions were adopted calling for national support of Earl Kitchener's appeal for assistance in keeping the soldiers temperate.

The Archbishop urged that all in the audience who were not total abstainers become so, at least for the period of the war, as an example to the troops.

Treating was condemned, and it was pointed out that, with sterilized water for their use, there was no reason why soldiers in the field should not abstain from alcoholic stimulants.

He found conditions satisfactory and is making a detailed report to the State Department at Washington.

RUINS OF LOUVAIN VISITED BY CROWDS

PINE ROOF ON CATHEDRAL

High Fence Guards Hotel de Ville and Landsturm Camps in Court of the University.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
From a Staff Correspondent.

LOUVAIN, Nov. 5.—Louvain now presents the ghastly spectacle of a dead city, buried under ruins, slowly coming to life again and continues to give full scope to the morbid streak in human nature, for sightseers continue to flock here in increasing numbers from Antwerp, Brussels, and, in fact, all over Belgium, excepting from over the deadline of the operating zone. With Brussels people especially it is a favorite outing on a pleasant Sunday. The Germans have succeeded in restoring train service to the extent of two passenger trains daily between here and Brussels and one between here and Antwerp. The German military authorities pursue a surprisingly lenient and liberal policy in giving traveling passes to the Belgian population. In addition to those who come by train a steady procession of autos passes through all day, and next week, when the Berlin-Brussels express is to be started, the local tourist season will have a further boom.

About 5 per cent. of the original population have come crawling back and three companies of Landsturm garrisoned here, together with sightseers, form a source of revenue for the more courageous shopkeepers, who have come back and reopened stores. They are coining money as never in peace times, especially the little confectionery and pastry shops, where the soldiers off duty come for afternoon coffee, and the one tailor shop is open.

Workmen are putting the finishing touches to a new pine board roof on the cathedral, and making efforts to restore the stone exterior. The famous Gothic Hotel de Ville is now protected by a high board fence and two bearded Landsturm men mount guard day and night. A gang of laborers is making headway in cleaning up the interior of the hopelessly ruined university library and the streets are all cleared of débris. The academic halls of the main university building, which suffered little damage, are not silent, for one of the Landsturm companies is quartered there. I found half a hundred new students and two cows in the university quadrangle or campus. The men were unshaven, but good-natured, and many were the rough jokes as they watched the milking of the cows, preparatory to their being slaughtered on the spot by the company butcher, who stood in waiting, while at the same time a gray-haired university castellan was getting ready to take a time exposure of the cows, and calling out in French from behind a big antiquated camera mounted on a shaky tripod to hold still and look pleasant.

"Yet they say we Germans are barbarians," laughed an under officer. "I bet you won't find that French soldiers or highly civilized English gentlemen either have a photographer come to take pictures of the cows they are about to eat."

The venerable university guardian continued to do a good business making group pictures and portraits of Landsturm under officers, sergeants, and men at two francs per dozen postcards, till a Lieutenant appeared on the scene and the bugle sounded in the court for boot inspection. All hands promptly lined up in double file against the brick university wall and presented feet for the critical eye of the inspector.

The last of the former students of the University of Louvain was probably a well-dressed, meek looking young Chinaman, who was eating lunch at a near-by restaurant, the only one open in town. The German soldiers had fortunately not mistaken him for a Japanese.

The inhabitants who have no stores to keep seem continually to wander aimlessly in the streets, and here too is a sight common now all over Belgium of many women with children, begging. They linger around the entrances to the barracks, for hunger gives them a keen nose for bread and they soon learned soldiers will give them what they have left over from their ample rations. The German Government is trying to stimulate the return of the population and apparently is doing its best to help them to earn a living by providing work.

QUEEN MARY VISITS AMERICAN HOSPITAL

SPEAKS TO EACH PATIENT

And Makes a Gift to Every Man—Only Serious Cases Taken to the Hospital at Paignton.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Queen Mary visited the American Women's War Hospital at Paignton, Devonshire, today. She was accompanied by Lady Paget, Lady Randolph Churchill, and Mrs. Lewis Harcourt.

To these members of the Hospital Committee as well as to the members of the active staff the Queen expressed herself as greatly pleased with the work done by the American women in preparing such an institution for the wounded.

The Queen was particularly interested in the American Red Cross physicians and nurses stationed at the hospital, and conversed with all of them.

It was a great occasion for the patients, and the Queen talked with each wounded soldier. She also had presents for all of them.

In speaking of the Queen's visit, Lady Paget, President of the Hospital Committee, said tonight: "It was a great honor to the American Hospital for the Queen to make such a long trip in order to visit the institution, and I know it will be pleasing to Americans to know how warmly she spoke of it."

The Queen left London this morning on a special train. It is nearly a five-hour ride to Paignton. After spending two hours at Paignton the return journey was begun, the party reaching London tonight.

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 12.—Queen Mary gladdened the hearts of 200 wounded "Tommies" in the American Women's Hospital at Paignton, Devonshire, by her visit today.

The Queen was accompanied by Lady Mary Trefusis, one of her ladies in waiting, and Sir Charles Cust of the King's household, besides Lady Paget, Lady Randolph Churchill, and Mrs. Lewis Harcourt.

Upon the arrival of the party at the hospital Dr. Howard N. Beale and the other surgeons and the nurses, all of whom are Americans, were presented to the Queen, who remained for two hours, visiting the wards, talking to the wounded, and presenting pipes, cigarettes, mufflers, and shirts to them.

The Queen was enthusiastic in her praise of the beautiful hospital, which is the private estate of Paris Singer of the well-known American family of that name, and which he has given for the use of the American women. She highly commended the immaculate wards, thanked the surgeons and nurses for their efforts on behalf of the English soldiers, and congratulated the soldiers upon falling into such good hands.

Only seriously wounded private soldiers are sent to Paignton, the American women feeling that they have the greatest need of sea air and are less able than others to look after themselves. Practically all the patients are bed-ridden.

The Queen did not overlook a single man. She chatted with men wounded at Mons, Courtral, and Ypres, discussing those battles and the conditions under which the men were wounded, and invariably congratulating them on their valor and thanking them for their services to the nation.

The Queen was specially impressed by the efficiency of the hospital staff, which consists of two American Red Cross units of six surgeons and twenty-four nurses under the direction of Dr. Beale. She expressed to the committee of women her appreciation of the assistance the Red Cross is rendering at a time when skilled surgeons and nurses are so badly needed.

Every cent for the equipment and support of the hospital has been contributed by Americans, who plan to maintain it throughout the war without British aid.

Both the King and the Queen left Buckingham Palace shortly after 9 o'clock this morning. While Queen Mary was at Paignton, King George was spending the day with the troops at Aldershot.

EXPLAINS ITALY'S SHIP BOND

Bryan Says It Is Not Unfair to American Vessels.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Steamship agents who complained to the State Department today that the Italian Government was guilty of a gross discrimination against American steamships engaged in the Italian trade in seeking to require them to deposit a bond of $20,000 for each vessel and to pay $20 for each steerage passenger carried were informed by Secretary Bryan that the regulations were not as harsh as they appeared to be. Mr. Bryan explained that the bond and tax were intended to compel observance of a requirement for adequate accommodations of Italian steerage passengers and that vessels which lived up to this requirement would not suffer any monetary loss.

P. A. B. Franklin, Vice President and General Manager of the International Mercantile Marine Company, brought the matter to Mr. Bryan's attention last night. The International Mercantile Marine was interested because it had scheduled the Red Line steamship Finland to sail from New York for Naples on Nov. 21 and had been informed by the Italian Consul General in New York that before the vessel could obtain a license to carry emigrants it would be necessary to furnish a bond of $20,000 and to pay $20 for each steerage passenger carried.

Secretary Bryan made an investigation and indicated that he was of the impression that there was no discrimination against American vessels in the requirement that a bond should be furnished and a head tax paid. He said the regulation was not new and that it applied only to the carrying of Italian passengers.

According to the position taken by the State Department, the Finland will not be obliged to pay the head tax if her steerage accommodations conform to the rules of the Italian Government. Secretary Bryan's understanding of the matter was obtained from the Italian Ambassador, who called at the State Department today.

SIEGEL FIGHTS ON FINE LAW POINT

Rests Defense on Claim That Notes Practically Were Continuous.

TRACE THEM IN BANK

Merchant's Counsel Follow the Procedure of Cancellation and Renewal.

Special to The New York Times.

GENESEO, N. Y., Nov. 12.—The fourth day of the trial of Henry Siegel, the former head of department stores in New York, developed still more clearly one of the chief lines, by which his counsel hope to prove that he is not guilty of the theft of $684.05 from the National Bank of Commerce on June 14, 1913. Toward the close of the afternoon session, when the minds of many of those who have followed the testimony were confused by the mass of figures, this outline of the defense was submitted to John B. Stanchfield, counsel in chief for Siegel for his approval.

The defense is purely technical, resting on the fact that at no minute on April 29, 1913, did Siegel or Vogel not have a loan of $25,000 from the bank. In other words, that no new money passed to Siegel and Vogel on that date, and that consequently, the item of $684.05 could not have been part of a larceny; so that the indictment as drawn is faulty.

Mr. Stanchfield listened to this outline and said: "That is pretty correctly stated."

When this outline was submitted to Assistant District Attorney Arthur C. Train, conducting the prosecution, he made this comment:

"If that is their defense, they are forced absolutely into this position: That they could have committed larceny if they had discounted that note in any other bank in New York except the National Bank of Commerce and that because they discounted this note in their own bank where they did busines, they could not commit larceny."

In the cross-examination of H. P. Howell, one of the Vice Presidents of the National Bank of Commerce, who was on the stand all of yesterday afternoon and the greater part of today, and in the cros-examination of A. W. MacDonald, discount clerk of the same bank, the burden of the defense was to show that there was not a lapse of time on April 29, 1913, when Siegel and Vogel were not under obligations to the bank for a loan of $25,000 obtained on a note of Jan. 7, 1913, and maturing on April 29. The prosecution intends to establish that the note was paid on the date of its maturity before another note for $25,000, maturing Dec. 5, was discounted.

Discussion of Earnings.

The defense apparently was satisfied that it had scored a strong point in favor of Mr. Siegel when the credit statements of the various Siegel-Vogel enterprises as of Feb. 1, 1913, were put in the hands of Vice President Howell, who was asked by Attorney Ross M. Lovell, assisting in the defense, to point out any items represented as "earnings," and he was unable to find such a word by comparing the statements of the Fourteenth Street Store of 1913, showing a capital of $1,177,488.35, with that of the preceding year, showing a capital of $1,153,639.08. Mr. Howell maintained, however, that the earnings clearly were indicated. He had testified that it was on the strength of these statements that the National Bank of Commerce advanced loans to the Siegel-Vogel enterprises.

"Can't a surplus be made other than by earnings?" asked Mr. Lovell.

"Not honestly, so far as I can see," replied the witness.

"What would prevent stockholders from putting in more money?" interjected Mr. Lovell. Subsequently he asked the witness if the National Bank of Commerce had a surplus which was not made up entirely of earnings, and received an affirmative reply. This was later qualified by Mr. Train's examination, which brought out that such was in accordance with the banking laws. Then Mr. Lovell asked Mr. Howell if it was not true that he merely had compared the statement of 1913 and 1912, found that the items in the former were more and "jumped at the conclusion that this meant earnings or profit."

The witness replied that there was no material difference in the assets of a concern. When pressed to say whether the statements showed "earnings," he answered:

"Not so-called."

When Mr. MacDonald took the stand he testified that Siegel and Vogel had discounted two notes for $50,000 each, beginning in 1904, and that each year thereafter they had obtained a loan of $100,000 from the National Bank of Commerce, giving four notes of $25,000 each. Mr. Train exhibited the note of Jan. 7, 1913, maturing April 29, which Mr. MacDonald testified had been discounted for the account of the Fourteenth Street Store.

On the cross-examination Mr. Lovell asked Mr. MacDonald how he could be sure that he sent the old note down for cancelation before he started the new note of April 29, maturing on Dec. 5, for $25,000 through the process of being discounted. The discount clerk testified that it was part of his instructions to make the cancelation of old notes and the discount of new ones in that order. Asked if it was not possible that the note to be discounted had not been brought to him on the day before, that is, April 28, he said he was positive that it had not.

Transcripts from the Fourteenth Street Store ledger account were placed in evidence and the examination by the defense failed to show that there was any connection between the order of the entry of items on the ledger and the order of the notes. For instance, it was shown that the first item on that date was $5,897.17, which Mr. MacDonald explained represented the sum total of a number of checks that came into the National Bank of Commerce through the Clearing House.

The second item was $25,000, which he said undoubtedly represented the note of the Fourteenth Street Store falling due on April 29, 1913; while the third item, $1.96, he testified, evidently represented some check which was deposited in some account in the National Bank of Commerce through some outside source.

Questioning by Mr. Train disclosed that these charge items had been entered after being collected in alphabetical order and that, therefore, the order of the entries had no relation to the order in which the maturing notes had been received for certification.

The witness further testified that he was absolutely certain about the order in which the cancellation of the note maturing April 29, 1913, and the discounting of the new note of April 29, 1913, maturing Dec. 5 had taken place, because he had made a memorandum of these transactions.

When Mr. Lovell resumed the cross-examination of Mr. Howell in the morning he questioned the witness about an interview with Frank E. Vogel at the National Bank of Commerce in December, 1913, as the result of which one-half of the amount of three notes maturing Dec. 19, 23, and 25, was renewed until the following February.

"So up to the date of the receivership Vogel did just what he said he would do?" asked Mr. Lovell.

"Yes," replied Mr. Howell.

"So that when the Bank of Commerce closed the books there was $62,000 due on those notes?"

"Yes."

Asked if the bank had applied the money to the notes, Mr. Howell answered in the affirmative and further said it was true that a balance of $49,-172.98 was thus left due on the notes. A claim for this balance was placed by the bank with the receiver and the bank received a 5 per cent. dividend amounting to $2,459.31, which, applied to the notes, left a balance of $46,713.67. At this juncture Mr. Train interrupted the examination and accused the counsel for the defense of trying to anticipate questions which he knew the prosecution was going to ask.

Balances in the Banks.

The cross-examination by Mr. Lovell further disclosed that the books showed the balance for Siegel and Vogel in the bank as of Jan. 2, 1913, was $7,835.14, and the balance at the opening of business Jan. 7, 1913, was $161,834.33. On that day this balance was reduced to $105,583.30 at the close of business.

Subsequently it was established by Mr. Lovell that the stores had a credit at the bank of $27,843.45 on Feb. 7, 1913. Item by item he took the credits at the opening and closing of business on the days of the maturity of the notes from Feb. 7, 1913, to June 14, 1913. These balances ran from $27,843.45 to $96,838.82. The balance at the opening of business on June 14, 1913, was $82,927.36 and at the close of business $46,910.34.

Mr. Howell was asked to explain how the loans to Siegel and Vogel were approved by the Finance Committee of the National Bank of Commerce. Subsequently he was directed to name other mercantile houses to which his bank had made loans, and he mentioned Acker, Merrall & Condit, the General Motors Company, and others. Asked if there were any department stores to which the bank had made loans, he named McCreery's, Gimbel Brothers of New York and Philadelphia, and Saks & Co.

According to Mr. Howell, he first saw Mr. Siegel at the bank on April 9, 1913. The conversation was along the same lines as that with Vogel in March preceding. The hypothecation of credit and installment accounts was the subject of the interview. Siegel said he was not doing this, and intimated that other companies which had obtained loans from the bank were. Mr. Howell was asked if Mr. Siegel had not asked President Alexander whether such transactions were all right, desiring merely the information, but the witness could recall no such conversation.

Robert G. McMeekin, Secretary of the Siegel Stores Corporation, who is to testify that Siegel asked him to ascertain the countries with which the United States had no extradition treaties, returned to New York tonight, and probably will not be called until next week. Mr. McMeekin was not, as was reported, confidential secretary to Siegel.

SIEGEL BLAMES DEPOSITORS.

Tells Their Representative They Should Have Taken $900,000 Offer.

A. Schwartz, who was sent with Irving Coone and Benjamin Marcus, to attend the Siegel trial at Geneseo, told 100 depositors at the University Settlement last night that, after Siegel had avoided him several times, he finally cornered him and said:

"Don't run away from me. I'm not so bad as you think. Tell me something to tell the depositors."

"I can't do anything for you," Siegel replied, according to the speaker. "See what you have done! You have caused all the trouble. I offered you $900,000, but you refused it and now I need the money for my trial. If I was free, I would go into business again and make the money, so that I could pay the depositors dollar for dollar."

Irving Coone said that Assistant District Attorney Train was the best possible man to try the case and that the jury was composed of twelve honest men.

"I feel sure there will be a conviction," he said. "The only way that there can be a disagreement is by mixing up one or more of the jurors with a mass of figures. No man on that jury can be bought. I started to tell the people of Geneseo of our losses, of the sickness, death, and even suicide caused by Siegel, and I found they were already pretty well acquainted with our affairs."

RUINED DEPOSITOR A SUICIDE.

Fritz Lost His Job and His Savings When Siegel Failed.

Albert Fritz, 55 years old, who was formerly Superintendent of the Engraving Department of the Simpson-Crawford Company and is said to have had $10,000 on deposit in the Siegel bank, was found dead about 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in his home at 249 Maple Street, Brooklyn. The police say he committed suicide. Fritz was a widower and made his home with his sister, Mrs. Louisa Formont, and her son Paul. He was a steady and thrifty man, according to the story told by his relatives, until the failure of the Siegel stores last Winter, when he lost at once his money and his work. From that time on he began to drink heavily. As he was unable to obtain work, he slept for a considerable part of the day; and so when he did not get up yesterday morning, Mrs. Formont thought nothing of it and went out for the day.

When her son came home at 4:30 o'clock he went up to his uncle's room and found him in bed, apparently lifeless. He called Henry Finkenauer, an undertaker of 1,118 Nostrand Avenue, who pronounced Fritz dead, and then notified Coroner Wagner. No physician had been summoned, but the Coroner's office, having learned from the undertaker that a glass containing a white sediment had been found on a chair beside the bed, sent word to the police of the Flatbush Station, who decided that Fritz had taken his own life. The contents of the glass have been turned over to the city chemist for analysis.

WAR CUTS CANAL INCOME

But Waterway Will Earn $4,500,000 a Year, Bishop Estimates.

John Bucklin Bishop, former Secretary to the Isthmian Canal Commission, who returned yesterday from Panama on the United Fruit steamship Tenadores, said that the income of the canal for October amounted to $376,000, which, if continued, would mean $4,500,000 a year.

"Gov. Goethals has said," Mr. Bishop asserted, "that the operating expenses of the Panama Canal amount to $4,000,000, so that the canal will clear $500,000. The war in Europe has made a big difference in the traffic through the new waterway, and the increase when peace is proclaimed will be considerable."

"What about the slides in Culebra Cut?" he was asked.

"Col. Goethals is not worrying over the slides in the canal," he said. "The big dredgers were ready for just such an emergency, and made short work of the two slides on the other side of Culebra Hill."

Mr. Bishop said that ships could be passed through the canal in ten hours now, instead of twelve hours, as previously estimated.

CALIFORNIA VOTING ALARMS JAPANESE

Tokio Papers Fear Further Legislation as to Alien Land Ownership.

FALSE ALARM, IT IS SAID

Japanese in San Francisco Do Not Believe the New Legislature Will Pass More Stringent Laws.

TOKIO, Nov. 12. (Dispatch to East and West News Bureau.)—A report from America reaching here says that the majority of members just elected to the California Legislature entertain anti-Japanese sentiment and therefore the passage of the amendment to the Alien Land act, that is intended to deprive aliens of the right to lease farm land, is certain and, further, that in the primaries of the State of Washington the proposed constitutional amendment to permit aliens to own land within city limits was defeated by a large majority.

This news has attracted much public attention and has become a topic of lively discussion by the press.

Most of the papers express their utter failure to understand why, in spite of the most sincere efforts made by the Japanese people for the maintenance of friendly relations between America and Japan, part of the United States is so strongly affected by the anti-Japanese fever.

The papers speak of it as a most regrettable phenomenon. They fear that at such a critical moment as this to the world, when it is convulsed by a tremendous catastrophe, a serious difficulty may develop if the anti-Japanese sentiment in America has full sway. The papers all hope that the intelligent public of America will do its best to counteract such an undesirable movement.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 12.—Reports received in this city that newspapers in Japan are commenting unfavorably on the election of Hiram Johnson to succeed himself as Governor and the further fact that the Legislature will be preponderantly Progressive as indicative that there will be an attempt to enact more stringent anti-alien land laws have caused surprise in the Japanese colony in this city. It is said to be probable that brief cable dispatches conveying information as to the results of the recent election were misinterpreted, or that editorial writers in Japan jumped at conclusions.

Japanese Vice Consul General Kumasaki said that nothing of an official nature had reached the consulate from Japan, and that he believed there was nothing in the present legislative situation in California to cause the belief that any attempt would be made in the coming session of the Legislature to make more stringent the laws regulating land ownership by aliens.

"There has been in the Japanese newspapers published in San Francisco some editorial comment on the result of the election," said Mr. Abika, editor of The Japanese American, "but nothing of an inflammatory nature. The principal basis of the editorials has been the fact that before the election certain labor organizations obtained from candidates for the Legislature declarations that they were opposed to alien ownership of land. Many of the candidates so pledging themselves were elected, but it is not believed here that this pledge will be considered more than a promise not to modify existing legislation, and it is believed that no attempt will be made at the coming session of the Legislature to enact legislation more stringent than that now in effect."

K. K. Kawakami, head of the Pacific Press, a news distributing agency that has many subscribers in Japan, and a magazine writer of note, said:

"Correspondents in San Francisco of Japanese papers, including myself are preparing letters to our papers for the purpose of fully explaining the situation here as it is influenced by the recent elections. In Japan they base their opinion undoubtedly on the result of the anti-alien ownership agitation of two years ago. They know that Gov. Johnson was insistent at that time that the legislation now in effect be enacted, and they jump at the conclusion that now, with a Legislature almost wholly Progressive, he will undertake to have enacted more stringent legislation. We in California believe that he will do no such thing."

The new Legislature meets in January. Nothing so far has developed to indicate that there will be any concerted attempt to bring about new legislation regarding alien ownership of land.

Speaking in reference to the State of Washington, Mr. Kawakami said today that there was nothing in the situation in that State that caused any alarm to the Japanese. He cited the fact that in Washington the anti-alien land laws had existed for years.

So far as the Japanese here have ascertained, there is nothing in the Washington situation to which they should take exception.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Officials of the Administration who come from the Pacific Coast are surprised by the reported bitter comment in the Japanese press on the supposed election of a State Legislature in California and possibly one in the State of Washington threatening anti-Japanese legislation.

It was suggested here tonight that the statements in Japanese newspapers might be simply another outburst of the jingo element that his figured rather conspicuously in Japanese journalism in recent years. It is known that these expressions in the press have been the occasion of worry to Japanese statemen.

JURY FINDS FOR MRS. SMITH

Judge Told Them She Had Right to Warn Against Mrs. Brashears.

The jury which had been trying the $50,000 slander suit brought by Mrs. Marion W. Brashears in the Federal District Court before Judge Noble Hand against Mrs. Susan W. Smith returned a verdict yesterday for the defendant. They were out one hour, and had been instructed to consider that if Mrs. Smith had been actuated by right motives in warning her protegée, Miss Mary Adele Case, not to associate with the plaintiff, she could not be held for damages.

The jury's verdict, as reported by the foreman, Alexander Stone, stated:

"We wish explicitly to state that we find nothing in the evidence proving improper conduct on the part of the plaintiff."

Judge Hand assented to this, and denied the motion for the setting aside of the verdict made by A. C. Palmer, counsel for Mrs. Brashears.

REPORTS $65,000 GEM LOSS.

Theatrical Man Says Woman on Train May Have Taken Jewels.

Don Valentine Harwood, who described himself as a playwright and theatrical man, reported at Police Headquarters last night that he had been robbed of jewels worth $65,000. He said he was not sure whether the case containing them had been picked out of his overcoat pocket a week ago by a richly dressed woman in a Sixth Avenue elevated train or whether they had been stolen from a trunk with a supposedly impregnable lock, in which he was not sure whether he placed them or not in moving last Tuesday from 550 Riverside Drive to 320 Manhattan Avenue.

Harwood said the jewels had been given to him by his father on his deathbed, and that he had kept them in a safety deposit vault until last week. Inspector Faurot placed some detectives on the case.

WOMAN FIREMAN SUES TO HOLD JOB

Discharged from School Because of Her Sex, She Asks for Writ for Reinstatement.

TO MAKE A TEST CASE

Her Service Record Excellent—Dismissal Due to Board of Education Employment Rule.

Miss Antoinette Vonasek, 23 years old, and five feet four inches tall, is a licensed fireman and has been employed in Public School 34 in the Bronx looking after the pressure boiler. She was discharged because she happened to be a woman and yesterday she applied to Supreme Court Justice Davis for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Education to reinstate her. Decision was reserved.

Everybody who knows anything about the quality of Miss Vonasek's work admits that it is first class. During the time she was in charge of the boilers there was not a blow-up or a blow-out. She can shovel coal and bank a fire as well as any man. Taking care of a boiler is in her blood. Her father and her uncle are engineers and her ambition is to be an engineer, too. In 1910 she got a job working about the school at $30 a month and after this work was over she helped the fireman. Janitor Banker liked her. She never neglected her duties.

Word that a woman was a fireman at $912 a year got around and the Board of Education discovered that this violated one of the rules and so Supervising Janitor McGuire was ordered to dispense with her services. He wrote her a nice letter in which he said that he had to do as he was told and explained that her sex was the only complaint made against her.

Miss Rosalie F. Janoer represented Miss Vonasek in court. She told Justice Davis that the ousting of a woman because she was a woman could not happen in the Western States.

She said that Miss Vonasek's license permits her to operate a boiler of ninety pounds pressure, while the boiler she had been operating was only forty pounds pressure. Miss Janoer said that there are still some women janitors in the public schools who are permitted to look after low pressure boilers.

"I am going to make a test case of this," said Miss Janoer, "in order to discover whether a woman who has brains enough to become an engineer shall not work as a fireman if she prefers to."

Assistant Corporation Counsel McIntyre submitted briefs which explained that the Board of Education had adopted the rule prohibiting women from acting as firemen because it was thought that the children would run a greater risk in case of an accident in a boiler-room where a woman was in charge.

Charges of Violating Neutrality False, Ecuadorean Minister Tells Secretary Bryan.

BRITAIN PRAISED CHILE

Was Acted in "a Splendid Manner"—No Complaint by Allies Officially Before State Department.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—South American Governments are aroused over reports that they have violated neutrality in connection with the presence of belligerent warships in Western South American waters. Today the Minister of Ecuador called on Secretary Bryan to deny that his Government had discriminated in favor of the German squadron in the Pacific, which recently defeated the British squadron under Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock off the coast of Chile.

Minister Suares of Chile, has received by cable long extracts from a speech delivered by the Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs in which, in connection with questions asked in the Parliament of the republic concerning the engagement off the Chilean coast, he explained the measures taken to "insure neutrality. The questions asked were based on rumors printed in European newspapers about the observance of Chilean neutrality.

A report that the British Government had suggested to the United States that this Government, as the guardian of the principle enunciated in the Monroe Doctrine, should call the attention of certain South American countries to allegations that those countries had violated neutrality in permitting the erection of wireless stations on their territory for the military uses of Germany was explained at the State Department today. It was said that in a casual and informal conversation with one of the officials of the department, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, had said that there were reports that Colombia and Ecuador had permitted the use of radio-communication with the German squadron off the Pacific Coast of South America, and that it was rumored also that Ecuador had not stopped German warships from coaling in the Galapagos Islands. The British Ambassador did not ask this Government to take any action and it was understood at the State Department that the statements of the Ambassador were not based on any official information.

Secretary Bryan said today that the matter of the accusations against South American countries was not brought to the attention of the department until today, when the Minister of Ecuador called to say that he had seen newspaper reports that complaint had been made to the United States by Great Britain that Ecuador had been guilty of violation of neutrality. The Minister told Mr. Bryan that these reports were untrue and that his Government was observing strict neutrality.

Not Officially Before Department.

With reference to the visit of the Minister of Ecuador, Secretary Bryan said that the United States had not made any representations to any South American country concerning alleged violations of neutrality and that the attention of the Government had not been called to the matter in any way except by the Ecuadorean Minister. He added that the subject was not officially before the State Department in any way.

The Chilean Legation here has received by cable the text of a message sent by the Chilean Minister in London to his Government, in which Sir Edward Grey, the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, is quoted as saying that Chile had fulfilled its neutrality obligations in a splendid manner.

In his speech before the Parliament, the Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs said:

"Ships of the Chilean fleet daily patrol the coast, exercising careful vigilance, more specially in the neighborhood of the Straits of Magellan, the route which merchant vessels must take, and consequently the region in which there is most likelihood of pursuits or conflicts in territorial waters. The application of these measures has had the effect of preventing on more than one occasion acts contrary to neutrality, such as the seizure of merchant vessels in territorial waters.

"There has been no claim by any of the belligerent Governments based upon acts violating neutrality. The rumors set on foot in certain circles respecting a claim by the British Government are entirely false and imaginary. A few accusations have been made by both sides of acts attributed to our authorities and the majority of them connected with the procedure of the belligerents themselves. None of the charges made in connection with the procedure of the authorities has proved to have any foundation.

"The most serious imputation has been that formulated by the Consul of one of the Southern ports, that news of the movements of belligerent ships was being transmitted from Chile to Argentina by wireless telegraph. Upon investigation this basis for the accusation was proved in a manner so irrefutable that the Consul who made it was constrained to withdraw it and to offer explanations.

Watch Kept on Wireless.

"The Government has adopted various measures to prevent the belligerents from making use of the ports or territorial waters as bases of naval operations, and especially from installing therein radio telegraphic stations or any apparatus destined to serve as means of communication.

"I have the satisfaction to inform the Senate that the Minister of Great Britain visited me in my office to inform me that he had been expressing to his Government the concrete facts, which contradicted any idea that the Chilean Government had not employed all its means of vigilance to protect its neutrality.

"The honorable Senator wishes to know if the naval engagement of the first instant took place within or outside of territorial waters. The data obtained up to the present show that the said engagement was fought at a very considerable distance from the line of territorial waters. On the coast in the vicinity of which it is said to have occurred no noise of firing was heard and no traces or indications of fighting have been found. The Government, fulfilling its humanitarian duties, has sent a ship to the scene of the combat in order to afford what help may be needed. The Government has just received a telegram from the Governor of Constitucion (a Chilean port) in which he transmits the report that a warship has run ashore in Punta Carranza, and as the ship referred to may be one of the combatants the Minister proposes to order the necessary steps to be taken for rendering her assistance."

WON'T JOIN MINE PROTEST.

United States to Keep Hands Off North Sea Matter.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The United States Government has no present intention of joining other neutral maritime powers in representations to the European belligerents looking toward the opening to neutral merchantmen of trade channels in the North Sea, now strewn with mines. Secretary Bryan said today that the American Government "was not ready to discuss the matter." He told Mr. Brun, the Minister from Denmark, who called at the State Department to ask what this Government's attitude might be, that nothing had been done toward preparing a protest.

It is understood the position of State Department officials is that they do not know who has laid mines in the North Sea, and, therefore, have no authority for directing a protest to any particular nation among the belligerents. The notification recently received from Great Britain of the closure of the North Sea merely stated that mine fields were located on routes previously used by merchantmen traversing the North Sea, and advised such vessels to seek other routes. There was nothing to indicate that the mines were laid by the British, and the impression has prevailed that many of them, at least, were German.

The suggestion that the United States join in an effort to open the North Sea to neutral commerce came from Amsterdam, and, it is understood, representations on the subject already have been made to Great Britain by several neutrals.

Cantor Gets a Recount.

Jacob A. Cantor, Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twentieth District, who was declared defeated on the face of the election returns by a small majority, filed with the Supreme Court yesterday an application for a writ of mandamus requiring the Board of County Canvassers, now in session at the City Hall, to open up and examine all the 1,499 so-called disputed and 104 void ballots. Mr. Cantor believes that a re-canvass of these ballots will show that he was elected over Isaac Siegel.

SEES LITTLE PERIL IN ZEPPELIN RAID

Goldmerstein Tells Aeronautical Society British Would Wreck an Airship Fleet.

CAN'T HIT MOVING SHIPS

So That British Fleet Is in Little Danger—Testing Device for Aeroplane Wireless.

Aerial strategy in war was discussed at the general meeting of the Aeronautical Society of America, held last night in the Engineering Societies Building, at 29 West Thirty-ninth Street. The activities of the aeroplane and the dirigible in the present war, and speculation concerning their operations on a larger scale than has heretofore been the case led several speakers to express divergent views regarding their powers for destructiveness. The problems standing in the way of an extension of the use of wireless equipment on aeroplanes was discussed also.

Frederick W. Barker, First Vice President of the society, presided in the absence of President T. R. Macmechen, who is returning today from Europe on the Baltic. W. R. Kimball and W. J. Hammer told of the attacking power of aircraft, and Leon F. Goldmerstein and E. L. Jones explained their defensive attributes.

Mr. Goldmerstein said it was his belief that the Zeppelin airship fleet stood little chance of doing serious damage to the British fleet, although he conceded that the dirigibles might effect some destruction in London. He maintained, however, that the aircraft would never be able to escape across the English Channel or North Sea after making such an attack.

"Speaking from an engineering point of view," said Mr. Golmerstein, "I believe that should the Zeppelin fleet assail London, it would never get back to its base. The minute it reached the British capital, the news would be flashed over land and sea, and I doubt if a single one of the attacking force could escape. The London fogs are thick, and even with the powerful searchlights with which the Zeppelins are equipped, an attack on a specific object would be very difficult, although it is within the range of possibilities that such a structure as the House of Parliament might suffer.

"The chance of a successful attack by the Zeppelin aircraft on the British fleet is very slight. By a process of careful mathematical calculations I am convinced that it would be almost impossible for the moving dirigibles to destroy vessels under headway, which is the problem that must be met in any such attack."

Mr. Goldmerstein scouted reports that the Germans have perfected a new and more powerful type of Diesel engine for use by the dirigibles.

Elmer E. Bucher, instructing Engineer of the Marconi Wireless Company, said that the carrying power of messages on heavier-than-air craft is between fifteen and thirty-five miles. This is due to the small surface on such ships that can be used for wiring. The problem is easier on airships of the Zeppelin type, which are capable of sending messages as far as 800 miles.

Mr. Bucher said that experiments are being made with a more sensitive receiving apparatus which, it is expected, will eventually make it possible to give aeroplanes and kindred craft a radius of between 150 and 175 miles.

It was announced that the Aeronautical Society of America had called a joint conference on aviation, to be held at the headquarters of the society on Feb. 12 and 13, to consider the inventions made by American engineers, mainly with regard to stability and safety in flight. The society also is planning to co-operate closely with the National Guard of this State with the view to stimulating interest in aviation in the militia.

MME. GRANDIDIER'S WILL.

The will of Marie Sylvie Grandidier, who died in Paris, France, on July 29, leaving a contingent bequest of $47,000 to the Metropolitan Museum of Art here, was filed for probate yesterday. The instrument disposes of property in the United States to her husband, Claude François Marie Julien Grandidier, in trust for life. At his death the bequest to the Art Museum becomes effective.

The remainder goes to two sisters of the decendent, Mrs. Gustave Mouraille of 74 West Twelfth Street and Mrs. Ferdinand Studt. There were gifts of $2,000 and $1,000, respectively, to Mrs. Adeline Robert and Mrs. Eugène Auger, sisters-in-law.

Another will, not filed here, disposes of the property in France.

GENERALS LINE UP FOR MEXICAN WAR

Though there is still some faint hope that the differences will be composed by possible personal conference between Gen. Carranza and Eulalio Gutierres, who claims the title of Provisional President, the people at the capital regard the renewal of civil strife as practically inevitable.

It is conceded here that if Carranza succeeds in bringing about the evacuation of Vera Cruz, which is reported here as certain, he will hold a trump card and be able to make a powerful plea for national support. Gen. Carranza is already receiving numerous telegrams congratulating him on the success of his diplomacy in removing the last obstacles to the recovery of the republic's chief port.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 12.—A general order issued today by the military commandant in the capital informed all officers to be ready from today to call their men to quarters and to hold them in readiness for any emergency.

Fighting on the outskirts of this city continues. The Constitutionalists are holding the attackers in check everywhere along the line.

Gen. Villa has not replied to telegrams sent him by Gens. Obregon and Blanco requesting him to resign his position as commander of the Constitutionalist troops in the north. Gen. Pablo Gonsales has sent a dispatch to Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez from Queretaro saying:

"From this moment I declare broken and of no value whatever the compromises I may have contracted with the Aguascalientes convention, and I am ready to fight Villa and his bandits."

It is reported here that Gen. Gutierres has solicited a personal interview with Gen. Carranza. According to extra editions of the newspapers issued tonight, Gen. Carranza will go to Vera Cruz on Sunday to take over that city, which is to be delivered up by Brig. Gen. Funston.

From Puebla comes the report that 25,000 followers of Emiliano Zapata are still threatening the city, but that the Constitutionalist forces thus far have been able to hold them in check.

ASSAILS AMERICAN AGENT.

Carranza Organ Demands Recall of Carothers, Now with Villa.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 12.—El Pueblo, a pro-Government organ, attacks editorially this morning George C. Carothers, the American agent with Gen. Villa, saying in part:

"In Mexico Mr. Carothers, who is relatively young, is a type of intriguer who affiliates himself with one of the contending factions, who becomes the confidant and intimate friend of a rebel General with no very disinterested aims assuredly, who runs hither and thither with orders, messages, and suggestions; who before the White House assumes the defense of his friend Gen. Francisco Villa, so that President Wilson may support him and secure his supremacy. If we did not know the good faith and integrity of President Wilson and his Secretary of State, William J. Bryan, we should believe the story that the United States keeps in Mexico agents to sow seeds of discord in order to weaken us and fall upon us when the nation is exhausted and the energies of the people, sapped by the prolongation of strife and conquest, offer less obstacles.

"We should also believe that the chief of these malignant agents of discord, dissolution, and death is George C. Carothers, the friend and ally of Francisco Villa. Therefore, in respectful terms we appeal in this article to President Wilson and his Secretary of State, requesting them for the good of the Mexican Republic, our country, and for the good also of the United States, which has the highest interest in the re-establishment of peace in Mexico, that they recall from this friendly nation George C. Carothers, and that they forbid him to meddle in the future in Mexico's political affairs."

MAD CAT BIT OTHERS; THEY ESCAPE RABIES

DOCTORS FIGHT TO SAVE HER

Man and Boy Who Were Bitten by the Same Animal Quickly Recovered from Their Wounds.

Grace Polhemus, the 13-year-old Brooklyn girl in whom hydrophobia developed one year after she was bitten by a stray cat, was yesterday reported in a state of coma at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur A. Polhemus, 872 Monroe Street. This was described by Dr. Theodore Vosseler, physician in charge, as the "beginning of the fatal termination of the disease," and last night no hope was held out for her recovery.

The little girl's case remained as much of a puzzle as ever to physicians. Investigation showed that she was one of three persons bitten by the same cat on Nov. 19, last year, and that she alone had taken the Pasteur treatment. The others merely had their wounds cauterized, and have enjoyed good health ever since.

One of these is ten-year-old Morris Feinstein of 552 Gates Avenue, who was with the Polhemus girl when the cat attacked her. Morris, in trying to catch the animal was bitten on the arm. The boy's mother took him to Dr. Vosseler, who cauterized the wound and recommended the Pasteur treatment, as in the case of the little girl. But the mother did not take his advice. The wound healed quickly and the boy is as well as ever today.

William Murphy, a plumber, 36 years old, of 286 Sixteenth Street, was at work near by when the two children were bitten. He tried to catch the cat and was nipped in the calf of the leg. Murphy ran to a drug store, had the wound cauterized, and forgot it. He has never had any trouble from it since, but yesterday, on hearing of the plight of the Polhemus girl, became alarmed and said he intended to undergo Pasteur treatment at once.

Doctors declared that everything possible had been done to save the girl's life since the disease first made its appearance last Sunday. The use of the pulmotor, they said, had been of great assistance in the early stages, while a new serum, the invention of Dr. Moon of St. Louis, had also been of some benefit. Dr. Charles Wuest, a Brooklyn Coroner's physician, advanced one theory which he said might explain why hydrophobia made its appearance a whole year after the girl was bitten. At the time of the accident, he said, the girl was in good physical condition and the poison was prevented from entering the system by a sort of protective coating of blood corpuscles. So long as this sack remained intact the germs could not do any harm, according to Dr. Wuest. This Fall, however, she had been in poor health, and the ability of the corpuscles to resist the disease was greatly reduced.

EPISCOPAL WOMEN GET VOTE

New York Diocese Awards Them a Voice in Church Affairs.

Woman suffrage in parochial meetings and other affairs of the Protestant Episcopal Church became a diocese law yesterday, when the delegates to the one hundred and thirty-first annual convention of the New York Diocese voted almost unanimously in favor of the recommendation of a special committee of clergymen and laymen to admit women to an equal share in church management. Dr. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, was greeted with applause by the delegates when he asked them to accord women the vote, after Bishop Greer, presiding, had presented the resolution for consideration. Dr. Manning said:

"I hope the resolution will prevail; there is nothing dangerous in this proposition, and I see no reason why the Church should be denied this larger participation on the part of its faithful women. It is not a radical step. Even Connecticut permits the women of the Church to vote in parish matters and at parish meetings. Here we find ourselves in the unusual position of being behind the times. I favor this resolution, not only in the interest of the women, but also for the credit of New York."

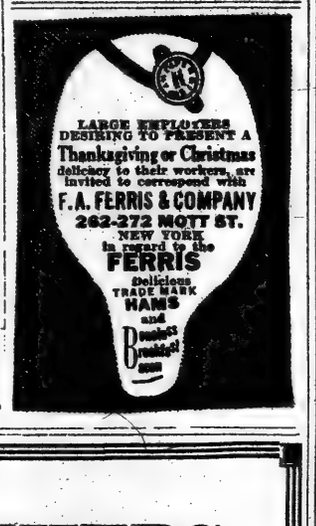
No record was kept of the exact vote, but not more than ten voices were heard in opposition.

It was indicated that the Episcopal Diocese will endeavor to develop its work more thoroughly among the foreign population of the city. Bishop Greer was requested to appoint a special committee to confer with officers of societies and other religious bodies for the purpose of co-operation.

Members of the Board of Trustees of the Cathedral were elected under the provisions of the new constitution of the corporation, which provides for a board consisting of the Bishop and twenty-four members, twelve laymen and twelve clergymen.

The convention authorized the establishment of a Diocesan Commission on Church Buildings, which is to include three architects skilled in ecclesiastical design. The commission will act in an advisory capacity to all the parishes in building or alteration operations.

It was voted to increase the duration of future conventions from two to three days.



EAST SIDE FACTORY BURNS.

Paper Novelty Company's Loss is $75,000 in $125,000 Fire.

Fire destroyed the four-story factory of the Paper Novelty Manufacturing Company at 318-20 East Forty-eighth Street last night with a loss of approximately $125,000.

The building is in the midst of a densely populated tenement district and three alarms were sent in. Daniel Levi, President of the company, said the fire started about 7:45 o'clock just as he was getting ready to go home. He said there was at least $75,000 worth of paper and materials of an inflammable nature in the building, as his company was in the middle of the Christmas rush.

It took two hours' hard work to subdue the flames. Chief Kenlon said the loss on the building, which belonged to John B. Schleisinger, would amount to $50,000. Levi said his company's loss was covered by insurance.

BIG BRONX ROUND-UP FOR BOMB OUTRAGE

County Officials and Police Will Make New Attempt to Wipe Out Slavers.

JUDGE GOT MANY THREATS

Anarchist Theory Strengthened by Finding of Fragments of Pamphlet —Hoefling Made Mistake.

A big round-up of persons suspected of connection with the white slave traffic in the Bronx and surrounding districts is planned by the police. Capt. Andrew J. Wines of the Fifth Detective Branch will be in charge, and he will be aided by all the resources of the office of District Attorney Martin of Bronx County.

County officials are still inclined to attribute the explosion of the bomb which late Wednesday night wrecked the bronze doors in the main entrance of the Bronx Court House to sympathizers and friends of the gang of white slavers against which District Attorney Martin has been waging a war of extermination, and seven of whose members have received long prison sentences from County Judge Louis D. Gibbs. With seven already sentenced and six men awaiting trial on similar charges, it had been thought that there were few of the gang at large, but the setting off of the bomb has convinced the county officials that somebody is still at large who is capable of doing considerable damage.

The report that a second bomb had exploded in the office of City Marshal John Hoefling, just across the street, was due to a natural mistake made by that official. When the bomb went off at the Court House Mr. Hoefling's windows were shattered, and he fled from the office under the impression that he had been the target of the assassins. It was not until some time later that the mistake was discovered. The fact that Judge Gibbs was still in his chambers when the bomb was exploded was due to his waiting to listen to an appeal for clemency from the father of Harry Goldberg, who had just been convicted of forgery, and had he made his exit by the front door instead of the side entrance, which is used after 4:30 P. M., he would, under ordinary circumstances, have come upon the bomb just about the time of its explosion.

The county officials are not inclined to take much stock in the theory, which to a large extent is favored by the police, that the explosion was the work of anarchists, who were thus celebrating the anniversary of the hanging of the men implicated in the Haymarket riots in Chicago.

The chief support of the anarchist theory comes from a pamphlet printed in Spanish, bearing the title of "Los Martires de Chicago," ("The Martyres of Chicago,") and dealing with the Haymarket riots, fragments of which, the police say, were found in the wreckage of the explosion. It is said that this was published in Paterson and distributed from the offices of Mother Earth, the anarchist magazine, in Harlem. At the Mother Earth Headquarters, however, all knowledge of the publication was denied.

Judge Gibbs has received great numbers of threatening letters, which began with the crusade against the carrying of weapons. Violators of the Sullivan law were consistently sent to prison, and District Attorney Martin said yesterday that the practice had materially reduced the number of gun fights in the Bronx. Then when the authorities set to work to clean up the white slavers the letters became more numerous and threatening. The only one which Judge Gibbs kept was written in Italian, and mailed on the lower East side on July 28. It was signed "A Citizen," and said that the writer had been in court and had seen prisoners sent to prison.

"Swift justice will be meted out," it continued, "and the same fate accorded you as to King Humbert of Italy and the Empress Josephine of Austria."

Both these rulers were killed by anarchists. But it is considered strange that the writer of the letter, who was apparently a man of education, made the curious slip of calling the Empress Elizabeth by another name.

THOUGHT CANDY A BOMB.

Nineteen-year-old Ethel Edwards of 311 East 188th Street, the Bronx, found a package awaiting her when she got home late yesterday afternoon and was about to open it when she recalled the bomb explosion of Wednesday night. Now Miss Edwards recently rejected a youth, who swore to get even, and suddenly she began to fear that the apparently harmless box was a bomb. Her mother shared her fears and on the elder woman's advice Ethel took the package to the Bronx Park Police Station.

Lieut. Peter Carter was just as ready as she was to believe it might contain a bomb, and, after handling it gingerly, he hurried it away to the Bronx Detective Bureau, breathing a sigh of relief when he saw it leave the station.

Detective Hazlitt had no fears, however. He opened it and found a candy frankfurter, five pieces of candy bologna, and a candy chop. There was no card, but from Miss Edwards's blushes she seemed to know where the candy had come from, and she gathered it up and hurried away.

As a precautionary measure two detectives were last night detailed to guard the home of District Attorney Martin, at 2,336 University Avenue.

ONE YEAR FOR NOVELIST.

Henry Wallace Phillips, author of "Red Sanders" and other Western tales, was sentenced to a year in the penitentiary yesterday by Justices Russell, Moss, and Collins in Special Sessions on his plea of guilty to the charge of corrupting the morals of Marjorie Kluxton, 14 years old. The Justice had received the letters recommending clemency from many well-known persons, but Justice Collins said the "idiosyncrasies of genius" did not excuse the crime.

Among those who recommended mercy were Suffragan Bishop Burch, Drs. William Mabon and O. S. Spellman, Robert H. Davis of the Munsey publications, and John Phillips of The American Magazine. Their plea was supplemented by one from Randolph Newman, Phillips's counsel, who admitted that his client had talked on sex subjects with the girl, but said that in doing so he was only carrying out his ideas of sex hygiene.

Marjorie Kluxton is the daughter of Mrs. Lillian Kluxton, a nurse, who attended Phillips. She made a complaint to the Children's Society.

REOPEN LABOR TRUST CASE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Arguing that the wrong men were convicted in the Danbury hatters' case, Alton B. Parker and Frank L. Mulholland, in a brief filed with the Supreme Court today, urged the court to set aside the $252,000 judgment imposed under the Sherman anti-trust law upon 186 hat factory laborers of Danbury, Norwalk, and Bethel, Conn.

The brief was submitted as the basis for oral argument of the case on Dec. 7. It was in this case that the Supreme Court several years ago decided that a labor union was subject to the terms of the Sherman anti-trust law.

The attorneys contended that most of the 186 defendants did not participate in the slightest degree in the boycott of the hats of D. E. Loewe & Co., for which they were convicted.

"They were made defendants," the brief asserted, "because they were members of local hatters' unions in the respective places where they lived which were affiliated with the United Hatters, and because they owned property."

It was urged that the laborers could not be held liable for the campaign against the company by the President of the National United Hatters' Union and its advertising agents, because if the officers engaged in illegal acts they exceeded their authority.

MORTGAGE ON HAGAN'S CLUB

The first cold blast of a hard two years for Tammany struck Leader James J. Hagan of the Fifteenth District yesterday when suit was begun in the Supreme Court to foreclose a mortgage on his headquarters, known as the Amsterdam Democratic Club, at 131 West Sixty-fourth Street. The plaintiff is Charles J. Fitzpatrick, the administrator of the estate of Sarah J. Fitzpatrick, that held a mortgage of $17,000 on the premises. This mortgage was made on April 4, 1905, and on Jan. 9, 1911, it was reduced to $11,000. Taxes for the first half of the current year, amounting to $195.80, have not been paid and there has been a default in the interest.

Mr. Hagan was appointed Commissioner in the Corporation Tax Bureau by Controller Sohmer in 1911.

WHITE WOULD FACE MEN WHO JAILED HIM

Pastor Asks Magistrate, Judge, and Dr. Woelfkin to Attend Carnegie Hall Meeting.

MAY INVADE CHURCH AGAIN

After his release from the Queens County Jail yesterday morning, where he served five months for disorderly conduct, the Rev. Bouck White spent yesterday afternoon and evening writing letters to those he held responsible for his imprisonment.

One of the letters he addressed to the Rev. Cornelius Woelfkin, pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church. White was arrested for interrupting a service at the Calvary Baptist Church, with which the Fifth Avenue congregation was meeting, six months ago. Dr. Woelfkin was the principal witness at the hearing before Magistrate Campbell in the West Side Court.

White wrote to Dr. Woelfkin yesterday, as Pastor of the Church of the Social Revolution. He told Dr. Woelfkin that it was largely because of his testimony that he was sent to the workhouse, and he invited Dr. Woelfkin to meet him tonight in Carnegie Hall and to speak with him from the stage to those before whom he said he proposed to put his side of the case. White invited Magistrate Campbell, who sentenced him to jail, and Judge J. T. Malone of General Sessions, to present their views to the audience. Here is the invitation to Magistrate Campbell.

Dear Sir: Six months ago you sent our pastor, Bouck White, to the Work House on Blackwell's Island. It was said by us at the time that the hearing you accorded him was grotesque and inadequate. Appeal was refused.

During the six months he has been behind the bars you and your fellow-defenders of the moneyed caste have been in a position to get your side before the public, while he has been fettered.

Fair play demands that both sides be heard and to that end we are planning to give our pastor a reception at Carnegie Hall tomorrow, Friday night, at 8 o'clock. Bouck White will be there to narrate the whole affair. Inasmuch as your part in this sorrowful affair will have to be treated, it is but fair that we invite you to be present and defend your position.

SOL FIELDMAN, Director-Lecturer.
HELEN L. FISHER, Secretary.
For the Church of the Social Revolution.

Not Harmed by Imprisonment.

When White came out of the jail he was greeted by fifty or more members of his congregation. Hands, mops, and brooms protruded from the cell windows of the jail, each one waving White a farewell. A few notes of farewell were thrust between the window bars and faint cheers from the inmates left behind could be heard. Instead of having the usual prison palor, White's face was tanned.

He went in a taxicab from the jail to the headquarters of the Church of the Social Revolution in East Twenty-fifth Street, where a reception committee was waiting for him. He continued to receive members of his congregation at intervals, when he was not writing letters, until 8 o'clock, when he preached his first sermon to his followers. It dealt with his imprisonment.

"First, I want those who went to Dr. Woelfkin's church with me and who are here tonight to stand up," he said as he smiled upon his followers.

Edward Ames and Charles C. Morrison, both of whom received suspended sentences when White was sentenced, stood up.

"I want to ask you," he said, "before the others of our congregation, if there should be another Ludlow massacre would you go back with me to the church of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and join me in presenting our Christian protest?"

"I would dare all the flesh is able to dare," said Ames, and the others applauded. Morrison indicated that he, too, would be willing to make another visit to Dr. Woelfkin's church.

Foresees a Revolutionary Era.

"I want the world to know we are united," White went on, "because I feel that New York City is facing the most socially disturbed Winter the city has even known. I may say we are entering a revolutionary era, the most serious that our city has known. I may say the most serious our country has known.

"Our little church, so near Dr. Woelfkin's church, is the poorest in the world. His is the richest in the world. So it is merely our opportunity to afford a stage setting for the drama of revolution that will assert itself first as a religious outbreak.

"I know that a committee of clergymen, called a clergymen's protest committee, went to Dr. Woelfkin with a protest against his attitude toward me. They did not do it for my sake, but because they realized that if his actions toward me should be the final attitude of his Church, then Protestantism in general would receive a blow from which it could not soon recover.

"On this committee were Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, the Rev. John Haynes Holmes, the Rev. Frank Oliver Hall, and the Rev. Percy Stickney Grant. I have heard that to them Dr. Woelfkin humbled himself contritely and almost broke down in expressing his sorrow at what he had done. At the same time he pledged himself to do all that he could to obtain a reduction of my sentence."

SULLIVAN WRECKED ESTATE

District Attorney James C. Cropsey and the Kings County Grand Jury in their search for the missing assets of the wrecked Union Bank of Brooklyn continued their investigation yesterday of a charge of grand larceny made against David A. Sullivan, the former President, who is now in Sing Sing Prison, is accused of concealing money and property belonging to the bank.

Sullivan asserted at the time he was convicted that he did not own any property, but the District Attorney has found that the convict transferred property to his wife, Mrs. Anna F. Sullivan. Miss Louise D. Burkhardt, through whom Sullivan is said to manage this property, holds a power of attorney.

The Grand Jury is investigating Sullivan's administration of the estate of his friend and former associate in the bank, Edward B. Tompkins. Mr. Cropsey learned that the estate was worth $200,000 when Sullivan took charge of it as executor and that when he filed his final report only $14.11 was left.

Tompkins was a Director and Vice President in the old Mechanics' and Traders' Bank when Sullivan was President of the institution. He owned a flourishing marble business in Long Island City. He died in 1907 and Sullivan was named executor of the estate with Ellen Tompkins, the widow, and Thomas Tompkins, a son. Although the widow and son of Tompkins were co-executors of his estate Sullivan acquired control of the marble business, and Mrs. Tompkins was seldom consulted in the management of the estate.

One of the witnesses before the Grand Jury yesterday was Mrs. W. J. Weed, Sullivan's sister-in-law. Joseph Birdsall, a keeper in Sing Sing, was asked about the telephone calls sent to Mrs. Sullivan and Miss Burkhardt an hour after Assistant District Attorney Goldstein arrived at Sing Sing and started the present investigation.

AVENGES FATHER'S MURDER.

Salvatore Comparotto, a fruit dealer of 377 East 137th Street, the Bronx, fell from his buggy, wounded mortally, at 3:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when four shots were fired at him by a man on the sidewalk. Witnesses to the shooting started in pursuit of his assailant, who was caught at Second Avenue and 100th Street and taken to the East 126th Street Station by Policemen Cox and Beban. Comparotto, who was wounded in the back and right shoulder, was taken to the Reception Hospital, where he died at 7 o'clock.

The prisoner, who said he was Matthew Amato, 18 years old, a fruit dealer of 156 East Eighty-eighth Street, confessed to Assistant District Attorney Breckinridge that he had done the shooting. He said that he had revenged the death of his father, who was killed on April 4 by Comparotto for failing to pay a sum demanded by the Black Hand.

His father, Amato said, had a fruit stall at Ninetieth Street and Third Avenue. After receiving Black Hand letters demanding money the elder Amato decided to pay, but found after a meeting with the blackmailers that they had made their demand too high. Shortly after he had refused to pay he was shot, young Amato said, in Seventy-fifth Street, near First Avenue.

CADDY GETS $500 REWARD.

Locust Valley, L. I., has a caddy who was lucky enough to find and honest enough to return a valuable gem-studded bracelet belonging to Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer of Piping Rock.

Mrs. Tailer spends her Summers with her husband and two children in their home near the Poping Rock Clubhouse. She missed the bracelet the evening of Election Day, after she had been about the grounds of the club and had taken a motor ride. The bracelet was studded with fifty-nine diamonds and emeralds and was valued at 3,000 or $4,000.

The caddy got a reward of $500 for returning the bracelet.

FIND COWS STRICKEN ON MASPETH FARM

New Centre of Plague Infection in Dairy Herd in Queens County.

HEALTH BOARD IS ALERT

Several cows suffering from the foot-and-mouth disease were found yesterday in a herd of forty milch cows on a farm near Maspeth, in Queens County. All persons on the farm were ordered quarantined, and Sheriff's Deputies were sent to enforce the order. Warnings were given to farmers in the neighborhood not to allow cattle, chickens, or dogs to stray. Several veterinarians are inspecting other Long Island farms.

The disease, it is believed, was carried to the Maspeth farm by cattle which arrived there two weeks ago from Ohio.

The Board of Health of this city is watching the situation closely. Commissioner Goldwater said yesterday:

"We are taking all needful steps to safeguard the milk supply, although an exaggerated importance has been attached to the danger of the disease to human beings. A few instances of human infection have been recorded, but even when the disease is communicated to human beings, the effects are not serious. At the worst, it takes the shape of sore places around the mouth and gums, and they speedily disappear.

"Milk from diseased cows that has been Pasteurized is harmless, and almost all the milk that comes to New York is Pasteurized. Fortunately, though, we get no milk at all from the three up-State counties where the disease is at its worst. If it turns out to be true that the disease is in Queens County, that will bring the menace closer home, but you may be sure that we will do everything that is necessary to safeguard the public from the slightest danger of infection.

"Our milk Inspectors keep a close watch on all sources, and it is unlikely that any diseased milk, Pasteurized or otherwise, could get in. Even if the milk from affected cattle is harmless after Pasteurization, we do not believe in its use."

It was reported from Trenton yesterday that because of the embargo on the shipment of hay and straw from county to county until the cattle plague has been stamped out, hay and straw had advanced from 50 cents to $1 a ton.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The Department of Agriculture issued a formal statement today, in which it said:

"The anxiety that has been expressed in several quarters in regard to the effect upon human health of the present outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease is regarded by Government authorities as somewhat exaggerated. The most common fear is that the milk supply might become contaminated, but in view of the precautions that local authorities in the infected areas are very generally taking there is comparatively little danger of this.

"Milk from infected farms is not permitted to be shipped at all. The only danger is, therefore, that before the disease has manifested itself some infected milk might reach the market. For this reason, experts in the Department of Agriculture recommend pasteurization. As a matter of fact, however, pasteurization is recommended by the department anyway for all milk that is not very high grade and from tuberculin tested cows.

"In this country the foot-and-mouth disease has been so rare that there are few recorded cases of its transmission to human beings. In 1902 a few cases were reported in New England, and in 1908 in a few instances eruptions were found in the mouths of children which were believed to have been caused by contaminated milk. In both of these outbreaks, the sale of milk was stopped as soon as the disease was found among the cattle.

"As long, therefore, as the disease can be confined by a rigid quarantine to certain specified areas, the danger from this source is very small. Should the pestilence spread all over this country and become as general as it has been at various times in large areas in Europe, the problem would become more serious.

"Men who come in contact with diseased animals may become infected. While causing considerable discomfort, however, the disease is rarely serious. The disease, in short, is dangerous because of the loss that it occasions to property, and not because of its effects upon the health of mankind. At present all infected herds are being slaughtered as soon as they are discovered."

Housewives need have no fear that their tables will be without turkey on Thanksgiving Day on account of the Federal quarantine. The Department of Agriculture tonight explained that the disease did not affect poultry, and there was no embargo upon its shipment. The department officials also expressed the belief that the rise in price of poultry reported to have occurred in various States could not in any way be attributed to the outbreak of the foot-and-mouth disease.

BALTIMORE, Md., Nov. 12.—The foot and mouth disease was found among five herds of cattle at the Baltimore Union Stock Yards today. The yards were quarantined.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Nov. 12.—Fear that the foot and mouth disease had spread to human beings was expressed by Federal and State authorities today. Four children of a Providence man who owned infected cattle, it was found had eruptions in their mouths. A boy of 14 who had taken care of the cows had the most pronounced symptoms.

WOMEN IGNORANT OF PRICES

Mayor's Food Committee Says Housekeepers Lack Training.

A report of the Executive Committee of the Mayor's Committee on Food Supply, signed by George W. Perkins as Chairman, was submitted to Mayor Mitchel yesterday. It set forth that a great lack of knowledge had been found on the part of housekeepers as to the proper prices to pay for food. The report states:

Another reason is that a large number of homes in this city are presided over by wives and mothers who were daughters in well-to-do families, where the mistaken notion prevailed that it was not necessary for the daughters to learn practical housekeeping. The result has been that these daughters married without knowing anything at all about housekeeping, and the extravagance and waste in these households due to ignorance and carelessness are large and unnecessary drains on the food supplies of this city.

The domestic science work now taught in public schools and colleges is certain to be most helpful in changing this condition. An exhibit of foods, their relative values, how to prepare them, &c., was given in the Washington Irving High School a few weeks ago. It was attended by about 10,000 people, showing the keen interest in this subject that exists among the people generally.

The report stated that the committee had issued a circular every few days and distributed about 800,000 copies of them to the pupils of the public and other schools of the city.

Arthur C. Ludington, formerly assistant to President Woodrow Wilson at Princeton University, who was found dead in a London hotel from a wound inflicted by his own pistol on Nov. 4, left an estate in excess of $10,000, according to the petition filed with his will yesterday. An estimate of the estate places it at more than $100,000.

The will directs that one-third of the estate go to Mrs. Helen G. Rotch of Lakeville, Mass., a sister. Josephine N. Rotch, a niece, gets a large diamond which was an earring of Mr. Ludington's mother. The residuary estate, including all articles of personal property, such as jewelry, books, and furniture and title to the homestead at East Lyme, Conn., goes to Katharine Ludington, a sister, at whose death it is to go to Mary L. Ludington, another sister, of 9 East Thirty-ninth Street.

Mr. Ludington tried to enlist in the British Army at the outbreak of the war, but failed. The Coroner's Jury, which passed upon his death, returned a verdict that he died from accidental shooting.

The will of Mrs. Julia Marianne Brand, a survivor of the Windsor Hotel fire and widow of James Brand, who brought the first cargo of coffee to this port from Ceylon, was filed for probate yesterday. The estate exceeds $100,000. A water color of the Antwerp Cathedral by S. Prout and an ebony chair are left to the Metropolitan Museum of Art. A framed letter of Robert Burns is made part of the residuary estate, which goes in eight equal shares to relatives of the decedent's husband.

There are bequests of $5,000 each to Agnes Leavey, decedent's maid; to the St. Andrews Society of New York, and to Louisa Baron, a niece. Sir Percy Sanderson, late British Consul at New York, gets some Dresden chinaware, and his sister, Miss Lucy Sanderson, gets a gold bracelet and brooch.

HARTMAN STILL IN TOMBS.

Mrs. Mackenzie's Agent to Plead to Theft Indictments Tuesday.

Efforts to obtain $25,000 bail for Richard J. Hartman, former President of Tyson & Co., who was arrested on Tuesday charged with stealing the fortune of Mrs. Charlotte L. Mackenzie, proved unavailing yesterday and Hartman remained a prisoner in the Tombs last night.

Tuesday has been fixed as the day on which he is to come before Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions to plead to the indictments against him. It was said yesterday that there was little expectation that bail would be obtained before then.

TEACHERS TO GET MATERNITY LEAVES

MISS RODMAN UNDER BAN

Supt. Maxwell Orders Insubordination Charges Against Her—Symposium Tonight on Problem.

Mayor Mitchel believes that the Board of Education will settle the teacher-mother controversy by allowing teachers about to become mothers leaves of absence. The Mayor said yesterday that it was his understanding that the board would adopt a policy that would be fair to the teachers, but he would not comment on the action of the board in ordering that charges of neglect of duty be preferred against Mrs. Lora M. Wagner, the teacher in the Curtis High School whose baby was born a week ago last Saturday, beyond saying that the board had acted in accordance with precedent in similar cases.

"The board's action in preferring charges of neglect of duty against this teacher-mother must not be taken to indicate what that body's ultimate disposition of the matter will be," said the Mayor. "No action will be taken on the charges until the board adopts a policy in regard to teacher-mothers. This I understand from what President Churchill told me.

"Do you mean that leaves of absence will be granted to teachers under such circumstances?" the Mayor was asked.

"It is my understanding that leaves of absence will be provided for teachers about to become mothers," was his reply.

"Have you any information from the Board of Education that such a step will be taken?"

"I have no concrete information. It is just my impression. It is my strong impression that the Board of Education will adopt a reasonable, wise, rational policy of allowing some sort of leaves of absence."

"Do you think that when a teacher's husband is fully able to support his family comfortably she should have a leave of absence to become a mother, or should she be expected to retire from her profession and devote her attention entirely to her child?"

"You are now raising a collateral question that involves the question of the economic independence of the teacher-mother's home. The question that we are now dealing with is that of a teacher's right, as a teacher, to a leave of absence to become a mother."

The Mayor said he did not care to comment in any way on the letter written by Henrietta Rodman, criticising the Board of Education for its attitude. Miss Rodman is planning to call on the Mayor at the City Hall with a delegation of women on Monday.

Miss Rodman is to be tried on charges of gross misconduct and insubordination, as an outcome of her activities in the mother-teacher agitation. City Supt. Maxwell said last evening that he had just directed District Supt. Darwin L. Bardwell to prefer the charges. Miss Rodman was at Wadleigh High School all day yesterday attending to her duties as teacher. She half expected to be served with the charges. She said last evening that she would report as usual at her school this morning, and as soon as papers were served on her she would turn the matter over to her lawyer. She intends to make the strongest fight possible at her trial before the Committee on High Schools.

Mrs. Wagner has not yet received a copy of the charges against her. She said at her home in Tottenville, S. I., last evening that she intended to report for duty at the Curtis High School on Monday unless otherwise advised by her counsel.

There will be a debate in the Washington Irving High School auditorium at 8 o'clock this evening on the mother-teacher issue. William G. Willcox and John Martin, the two representatives in the Board of Education from Staten Island, will speak in defence of the board's attitude on this question. Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Henrietta Rodman, Prof. Andrew P. Montague of Columbia College, and Prof. Harry A. Overstreet of the City College, will be the speakers on the side of the mother-teacher. Letters will be read from Commissioner Katharine B. Davis, President Henry Moskowitz of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, and Frederic C. Howe, commissioner of immigration. At the close of the discussion a resolution addressed to the Board of Education, in favor of granting leave of absence to the married teacher, who is about to become a mother, will be voted on by the audience. Whether the vote is aye or no it will be forwarded to the Board of Education.

PRICE RESTRICTION IS LEGAL

The Circuit Court of Appeals handed down yesterday a judgment of Judges Lacombe, Coxe and Ward upholding the verdict given by the jury in the District Court by direction of Judge Mayer in favor of the American Tobacco Company in the Sherman law suit, brought against it and other tobacco companies for $300,000 damages by the E. Locker Company. This concern was a tobacco jobbing company, and it contended that the old American Tobacco Company, before it was dissolved, by selling all its products to the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, a jobbing concern, and giving it the exclusive rights, had damaged it to the extent of $100,000.

In writing the opinion of the Circuit Court of Appeals, Judge Coxe says:

"If the manufacturing defendants had concluded to sell their products solely through instrumentalities of their own and had organized in the factories a selling department through which they supplied their products to all who desired to purchase them, it will hardly be contended that such action was even within the purview of the Sherman law. How then does an act which the defendants might lawfully do themselves become unlawful when done by another to whom they sell or consign their goods?

"We are convinced that what was done by these defendants was not prohibited by law, but was a reasonable, common sense trade arrangement, dictated by the exigencies of the situation. We see nothing forbidden by the Sherman act in a manufacturer consigning or selling his product to a jobber for a particular territory and placing certain restrictions upon the prices at which the goods are to be sold. Many of the large mills have a factor in New York to whom their products are thus consigned. He can sell to A or B, or both, as he sees fit, and the consignor is not concerned with the transaction so long as he gets his price and the terms of the consignment are not violated. The same is true of the jobber; he is at liberty to sell to one retailer or twenty retailers as he sees fit."

Then Judge Coxe says that a tobacco manufacturer is at perfect liberty to sell to a jobber or to a retailer as he pleases, and a concern which wishes to become a jobber has no right to complain because the manufacturer chooses another to do his work.

Charles Dushkind, counsel for the E. Locker Company, said last night that he intended to take an appeal to the Supreme Court. He considered an exclusive arrangement with the Metropolitan Tobacco Company might fairly be held to be a restraint of trade, contrary to the Sherman law.

CHILD LABOR FIGHT GROWS.

National Committee Shows Results of Ten Years' Work.

Child labor may be abolished by the present generation, according to Owen R. Lovejoy, general secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, whose tenth annual report has just been published in The Child Labor Bulletin for November. Mr. Lovejoy compares the State child labor laws in 1904, when the National Child Labor Committee was organized, with those of 1914, showing that in 1914, thirteen States had a straight fourteen-year age limit for all factory work, while in 1914, thirty-six States have that limit.

Factory inspection was provided for in thirteen States in 1904 and in thirty-four States in 1914. The committee points to the fact that the drafting of a Federal child labor law has already been favorably reported by the House Committee on Labor. Investigations were carried on by the committee in eight industries in thirteen States in the past year and the exhibits of the committee were shown in fifty cities in twenty States.

HAS PLAN FOR LABOR TO SHARE IN PEACE

Federation's Mining Members Seek Approval of the President's Plan to Settle Colorado Trouble.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—More than one hundred resolutions dealing with the problems of union labor, boycotts, the European war, and the social welfare of workmen have been presented to the convention of the American Federation of Labor, now in session here. A great many of these resolutions were filed with the Secretary of the Federation today as the time limit for introducing them expired tonight.

Among the important resolutions referred to committee was one introduced by William Green of the United Mine Workers of America, acting for the mining department of the Federation, urging the President of the United States to insist that the Colorado coal mine operators comply with the President's plan for a settlement of the strike in that State and for the Government to take over the mines and operate them in case the mine owners refused to accept the peace plan. The Federal plan proposes a three-year truce and a commission to settle disputes.

Another resolution which probably will be adopted by the convention was introduced by President Samuel Gompers and related to the European war. It conveyed the sympathy of the organized labor movement of America to the organized labor movements of Europe. Continuing the resolution said:

"That the convention of the American Federation of Labor, in view of the general Peace Congress which no doubt will be held at the close of the war for the purpose of adjusting claims and differences, hold itself in readiness and authorize the Executive Council to call a meeting of representatives of organized labor of the different nations to meet at the same time and place to the end that suggestions may be made and such action taken as shall be helpful in restoring fraternal relations, protecting the interests of the toilers, and thereby assisting in laying foundations for a more lasting peace.

The convention today listened to a number of addresses by fraternal delegates and others, among those who spoke was Frank P. Walsh of Kansas City, Mo., Chairman of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations. He said that the first report the commission would make to Congress next month on the underlying causes of industrial unrest would not contain definite conclusions. The report would however say, he added, that of 300 employers representing the greatest industries in the country examined by the commission only five disagreed with the underlying principles of collective bargaining.

Among other resolutions introduced was one urging the repeal of the Dick military law and "other legislation having a tendency to further the spirit of militarism." Another provided for the establishment by Legislatures of State labor bureaus for aiding the unemployed in obtaining work and to abolish "shark" employment agencies.

CHICAGO CUBS SOLD TO C. H. WEEGHMAN

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., Nov. 12.—The Chicago Cubs were sold today to Charles H. Weeghman. The club once owned by Frank Selee and James Hart, and later by Charles W. Murphy and Charles P. Taft, and which has been the wedge with which organized baseball has been attempting for some weeks to break open the ranks of the Federal League, today became the property of the owner and President of the local Federal League team.

While official announcement of the sale of the club was not made, owing to the fact that several minor details must be completed by Weeghman and Charles P. Taft, until today owner of the club, Weeghman admitted tonight that the deal had gone through. All details will be arranged by Dec. 1, and on that date all parties concerned will issue a statement giving the facts to the public.

The deal for the sale of the club was practically closed this morning at a conference between August Herrmann, President of the Cincinnati Club, and representative of Charles P. Taft. Taft was expected in the city to attend the conference, and when he did not arrive Weeghman and Herrmann decided to meet again at 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Taft, however, did not appear, and Edward Flanner announced that nothing new had taken place, that the conference had been called off, and all further negotiations would be carried on between Taft and Weeghman.

Flanner was asked if his statement meant that Herrmann was out of the deal and that as far as the Red owner was concerned if the negotiations were off.

"Decidedly not," was Flanner's reply. "It simply means that there are several small details to be arranged, and nothing will be announced until Dec. 1. Mr. Herrmann is and always has been acting in an unofficial capacity, and has completed his labors. Weeghman will meet Taft in Cincinnati, and that will be the day when the news is announced. I suggest that you see Weeghman."

Weeghman practically confirmed the rumors that the sale had been completed. The new owner intimated that the Chicago Federal League Club, and not he alone, was interested in the purchasing of the West Side team.

HAS MADE NO PEACE OFFER.

National League Has Not Authorized Herrmann to Deal with Federals.

Secretary John A. Heydler of the National League returned yesterday from Harrisburg, Pa., where he has been with Governor Tener for the past few days. Governor Tener's term as governor, will expire on Jan. 1, and he is now preparing to take up his duties as baseball president in earnest. Gov. Tener sent a statement here with Secretary Heydler in which he takes a quiet rap at the star ball players and points out that the so-called stars of the game were only valuable when they lived up to their reputations, which many of them did not do last season. Governor Tener also states that August Herrmann's negotiations with the Federal League are entirely individual and that whatever he does will first have to be approved by the National and American Leagues. Gov. Tener's statement is as follows:

All is serene in the old league. Our people have ceased to worry over the loss, or the threatened loss, of any of their star players. In fact, our club owners have come to realize that the retirement of a star player of exceptional value to their clubs only when they are consistently playing up to their reputations.

The unparalleled record of the Boston Club was not the achievement of a few star players, but was rather the result of a team spirit backed up by the enthusiasm of youth. In the improvement and upbuilding of our standard of play we will, therefore, have well in mind the basic principles that inspired our tail-enders to become world's champions.

Regarding the movement for the readjustment of our troubles in baseball, I can only say that no official proposition has been duly filed and has been received by the National League from the Federal League, and certainly no proposition has been made to the Federal by the National. Whatever is being done in those lines at the present time is being done by August Herrmann.

So far Mr. Herrmann's work has been of purely personal character. If, later on, this should crystalize into some definite proposition, then the same would be submitted by him in his official capacity as Chairman of the National Commission to the American and National Leagues. In that event, the National League would give full and fair consideration to his recommendations, and would take such action as the league would deem best and wisest for the present and future welfare of the game.

Yankees May Get Plank.

Secretary Davis of the Yankees announced yesterday that the New York club had refused to waive claim on Pitcher Eddie Plank of the Athletics and that President Farrell was making a strong effort to land the former Athletic star. It is understood that the other American League clubs waived claim on Plank so that the Yankees could get him. Secretary Davis also stated that the New York club hoped to again get the services of Pitchers Russell Ford and Ray Caldwell, both of whom jumped to the Federal League. It is expected now that if there is a general declaration of peace among the warring elements in baseball the best of the deserting players will be permitted to rejoin the clubs from which they jumped. Mr. Davis denied the story that the club was trying to sign Fielder Jones as manager.

Federal Club for Cleveland.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 12.—"The Federal League has told us for a year that it would give us a franchise for Cleveland if we could get the grounds and it is up to the Federal League to act," said F. Bramley, former Federal League magnate today.

For over a year Bramley and his associates have been endeavoring to secure grounds suitable for a Federal League baseball park, and today Bramley announced he had secured options on the property from 4,701 to 4,023 Euclid Avenue. The property has a frontage of nearly 700 feet and runs back to Windsor Avenue, being ample in size for the purpose of a big league park.

It was inspected yesterday by R. B. Ward owner of the Brooklyn Federal League Club, and pronounced by him the most ideal site for a park in the Federal circuit. It is directly reached by three car lines.

GIANTS MAY TRAIN IN WEST.

Considering Plan to Practice a Month in California.

Manager John J. McGraw of the Giants is considering a plan to take the New York club to California next Spring to train. Secretary John B. Foster stated yesterday that nothing definite had yet been done in the matter, although the club was considering it carefully. When McGraw visited California last year with the world tourists he was impressed with the fine climate in Southern California, and was advised to train there by Charles A. Comiskey of the White Sox, who has taken his team to the Coast for several seasons.

Manager McGraw does not mean to desert Marlin Springs, Texas, entirely, because the Giants have a permanent training camp and baseball park there. If the plan goes through, the Giants will spend three or four weeks on the Coast and then go to Marlin for a couple of weeks to put on the finishing touches of the training work.

It is believed that the Giants would be a big attraction on the Coast next Spring, because there will be thousands of Easterners there to attend the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The Giants have trained at Marlin Springs for several seasons, and, as the place is so well suited for the purpose, it is not likely that the Giants will abandon their camp there. Secretary Foster is already arranging several exhibition games to be played throughout the South on the Giants' return trip North.

GAFFNEY DENIES RUMORS.

Not Going to Sell Braves or Buy Brooklyn Nationals.

Some imaginative person in Boston yesterday started a rumor that James E. Gaffney of this city, owner of the World's Champion Boston Braves, wanted to sell his franchise for $400,000. It was also stated that Mr. Gaffney had sold the South End grounds in Boston, and that the Braves had no park, but would have to depend on the generosity of Joseph J. Lannin to use Fenway Park.

If so happened that all of these important transactions were news to Mr. Gaffney. He said yesterday: "I have not sold the South End grounds, and it seems hardly necessary for me to deny that the Braves are not for sale. If the club was on the market the price would be far in excess of $400,000."

Not the least astonishing news to Mr. Gaffney was the report that he had an option on the Brooklyn Dodgers and would send George Stallings over the bridge as manager.

"Why," said Mr. Gaffney, "that's the most absurd statement I ever heard. Charley Ebbets would not sell his team for a million dollars, and he has said so. Brooklyn has a three years' contract with Manager Wilbert Robinson, and that should be enough to show that this last rumor is simon pure bunk."

SHIFT SPRINGFIELD NINE.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 12.—Territorial rights came to the fore as a matter of contention in the final session today of the National Association of Professional Baseball Clubs. After a prolonged debate the Three I League was permitted to transfer its Springfield, Ill., club to Rock Island, which is within the five-mile limit of Davenport, which is expected to have the Ottumwa club of the Central Association the coming season.

An attempt to fix the annual meeting place in Chicago received no encouragement. San Francisco was selected for the 1915 meeting. The name of no other city was presented.

The Board of Arbitration resumed its sittings tonight. It was expected to take up the Northern League controversy at the first session.

Reduce Junior Title Teams.

In nominating their teams for the junior metropolitan cross country championship run at Van Cortlandt Park tomorrow afternoon, several clubs overlooked the A. A. U. rule which prohibits the naming of more than eight men to a team. Columbia University, the Irish-American A. C., and the Mohawk A. C. each entered more than the legal number, and at a meeting of the championship Committee last night, at which the entries were passed upon, the coaches of these respective teams were requested to reduce their number to eight, which they did without trouble.

Nick Gianacopulos, the Greek athlete of the Millrose A. A., still rules favorite for the individual honors. His showing in recent races indicate that his form has improved 30 per cent. over that of last year and established him as a formidable candidate for the championship crown. Gianacopulos has been title hunting for a number of years, but success has never crowned his efforts because he invariably was not trained sufficiently for a championship effort. Since joining the Millrose Club, he has adhered to a strict training schedule and gives this as his reason for the very perceptible change in his recent running ability. The big Greek runner is built on lines of stamina, not speed, and is favored by athletic followers to win in the junior title because of his great strength. There are several youngsters in addition to Gianacopulos who are considered possible winners, but none has shown the ability to set Gianacopulos's fast pace.

N. Y. U. Corrects Weak Points.

The New York University football squad engaged in its last hard practice yesterday afternoon on Ohio Field, preparatory to the game with the Stevens Institute eleven tomorrow. With two elevens working, first separately and then opposing each other, the coaches had an excellent opportunity to criticise the Violet players and to correct weak points in the various plays. Both the varsity and the scrub teams first went through a signal drill, which was followed by a long and stiff scrimmage. The right side of the regular line showed additional changes, Stein, from the University Medical School, filling in at right guard for part of the time. The changed backfield proved very effective in gaining ground against the second eleven, but in order to give it a stiffer opposition the regular and scrub lines were interchanged. Even against its own line, McNally and Capt. Huntley made good advances, several times taking the ball over the goal line from the 15-yard mark. The coaches also shifted the varsity backfield men to their former positions, Huntley playing quarter back, McNally and Schuck, half backs, and Bernstein, full back. With this offensive aggregation, good results were demonstrated against the second team players.

Stagg Shifts Backfield Men.

CHICAGO, Nov. 12.—The University of Chicago football coaches drilled a new backfield today in order to have two sets of backs to send in against the University of Illinois in the game at Urbana Saturday, which probably will settle the Western conference championship. Gray, Chicago's crack half back, and Flood, full back, probably will start the game despite injuries. A. A. Stagg, head coach, today prepared another backfield, putting Russell, Chicago's star quarter back, at right half; Bergman at left half back, Shaffer, regular half back, at full back, and Gordon at quarter back. If Chicago wins on Saturday, it will be entitled to claim the conference title despite its draw with Wisconsin, unless the Wisconsin team, contrary to expectations, can defeat Illinois also, or hold the Illinois team to a draw. The Illinois team completed its preparation today at Urbana for the crucial game of the conference season. There are no cripples on the squad and Coach Zuppke said that he had an unusual number of first-class substitutes. Pogue of Illinois has made a touchdown in every game he has played in during his scholastic and University career.

Bennett Wins Roller Skating Race.

The five-mile amateur roller skating race at the Hunt's Point Roller Skating Rink last night was won by Joe Bennett in 19:25. Tony Parella was second and White Fredericks third. All three were scratch men. There were twelve entries and the race was extremely fast for three miles, but at the end of that distance most of the handicap men were "killed off" and the three leaders skated easily and jockeyed for position. William Stearn, champion miler and five miler of two years ago, was among the leaders last night, but received a bad fall at the end of the third mile and had to retire.

TIGERS' ROUSING FOOTBALL MEETING

Princeton Undergraduates Sure Yale Will Have Lively Time Tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 12.—Fifteen hundred Princeton undergraduates cheered the Tiger team at a mass meeting in Alexander Hall tonight. It was the most enthusiastic gathering in Princeton since Eddie Hart's championship eleven celebrated their victory in 1911. Head Coach Penfield and Hart spoke, and both promised that the team would go on the field Saturday prepared for a superhuman effort against the Elis.

The defeat by Harvard has not shaken the confidence of Princeton's undergraduates in their eleven, and the general feeling is that Yale is in for the liveliest kind of a time on Saturday.

Princeton's practice this afternoon virtually concluded the preparation for the Yale game and for the season, a light signal drill being the only thing on the programme for tomorrow. Coaches Hart and Penfield took the players in hand today and after a short drill in fundamentals the scrub eleven, which has been taught the Yale plays, were brought on the field to try them against the regulars. It was not a real scrimmage, both teams merely walking through the plays, emphasis being placed on showing each man where he belonged and just what his duties were. This diagnosing of the Blue offense lasted for almost a half hour, and then Hart took charge of the Varsity for signal work.

All the regulars were in their places, even Glick, who has been on the side lines this week, going to his regular place at half back. He worked out there for the greater part of the time, but toward the end he was sent in at quarter back in place of Ames. The coaches realize that they must have a second-string quarter on whom they can depend in case of injury to Ames, and Glick seems to be the probable choice. Tibbott and Driggs were the other backs and Dickerman took Glick's place when the latter went to quarter back.

The line was the same that faced Harvard with the exception of right end, Brown having replaced Shea. Highley and Brown and Lamberton and Shea are new pairings for the end positions. McLean was Capt. Bulis's running mate at tackle and will be Saturday's choice for Bigler went to the infirmary today with a second attack of blood poisoning. He was there for several days after the Dartmouth game and was discharged as well but the poison made its appearance again today. Whether he will be fit to play on Saturday is not known now. Shenk, E. Trenkmann, and Gennert were the centre trio.

Tomorrow afternoon the undergraduates will march to the stadium to practice cheers and to be present at the formal dedication of the new structure. Grantland Rice, the donor of the stadium, will make a presentation speech. President Hibben will accept it on behalf of the university, and Dean McClenahan will represent the Athletic Association.

TO HANDLE BIG CROWD.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 12.—Special traffic regulations will be put in force in Princeton on Saturday in connection with the tremendous crowds that are expected here for the Yale-Princeton game. The authorities of the railroad company, the Borough of Princeton and the Athletic Association are all uniting in their efforts to handle the throngs as expeditiously as possible.

The railroad has increased its accommodations here by laying ten more tracks, thus making thirty-one in all. All local traffic between New York, Philadelphia, and Princeton Junction to Princeton will be suspended on Saturday during the rush hours and special trains leaving New York and Philadelphia will run at frquent intervals direct to Princeton.

Preparations have been made for the parking of 4,000 automobiles and special regulations pertaining to cars have been drawn up. The space for the automobiles is the large level field just to the east of the stadium and is approached by a newly constructed macadam roadway which leads in from Harrison Road.

Applications Still Pouring In, but Are Being Refused.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 12.—There have been 72,832 applications for the 69,000 seats in the new bowl for the Yale-Harvard football game next week, according to an announcement today at the Yale ticket office. Practically all the 6,200 public applications have been returned, in order that Yale graduates may be accommodated. Applications are still pouring in, but are being refused.

Harvard has applied for 25,000 seats, Yale graduates 27,322, and the university 11,042. The Yale Committee of Twenty-one has an allotment of 3,268 seats.

Navy's Coming Test for Army Game

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 12.—With the game against the strong Colby team on Saturday in view, the Naval Academy coaches worked the team hard this afternoon and used two or more men in every position. Special attention was devoted to the backs, as a number with the team on Saturday and the game will probably furnish a final test for the players who will start the game against the Army team. Miles and Mitchell were used at quarterback, Blodgett, Craig, Collins and others at the halves and H. Harrison and Culbert fullback. Head Coach Howard said this afternoon that he expected Colby to put up a strong contest and that he would put in the full strength of the Navy team for a portion of the game, at least. It will be the last big game on the local field for the season, as no great difficulty is anticipated from Ursinus on the following Saturday, and the Navy coaches would not work their regular players hard under any circumstances.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., Nov. 12.—Lehigh's student body descended on Taylor field today and showed by cheers and singing its appreciation of the work the Varsity is doing. The regulars responded with a snappy practice. No lengthy scrimmage, such as took place yesterday, occurred today, but the men were lined up in a dummy scrimmage, during which new plays were further perfected. Forward pass formation such as Lafayette and Villanova use were broken up with surprising alacrity. Individual coaching was the order of the day, five coaches being on the field. It is believed President Coach Keady will put all the Varsity men possible in Saturday's game against Villanova and for next week's Lafayette game so most of today's work was devoted to developing second string men who will get a chance to show their possibilities under fire on Saturday. Pons, Early, Kirkpatrick, Bacon, Boland, and Chapman will probably all get into the game.

Dartmouth Starts for Penn. Game.

HANOVER, N. H., Nov. 12.—Amid the cheers of the entire student body the Dartmouth football team left here this afternoon for Philadelphia. The undergraduates marched to Alumni Field in a body, where the team was having a light practice and cheered and sang. The practice consisted of running through signals and putting. At 5 o'clock the team departed, the students giving them a hearty send-off. With a few exceptions the team was in fine condition. Coach Cavanaugh realizes that the team that he will play Saturday will be much diferent from the one that lost to Michigan last Saturday and he will put the best team that he has in the field against the 1,000-pound line of the Red and Blue. Macalliffe was brought down from the hospital long enough to see his teammates depart.

HINKEY HUMBLES ELIS.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 12.—Yale's football squad today paid its last visit to Yale Field before the game with Princeton. With the same line-up to which Coach Frank Hinkey has adhered for ten days in signal drill the Varsity spent an hour in running off signals and handling punts and passes. Concluding this practice the first string men had their pride shaken by being thrust into fifteen minutes of dummy tackling. This reversion to rudimentary play was not pleasant, but no player was excused from it, the rush line getting more than the backs. While the practice in passing and punting was being held the second eleven played the freshmen, who scored three touchdowns on Dr. Bull's reserves.

Five elevens were on the field, the largest number retained in practice on record to the final drill before a Princeton game. The size of the squad attests to Hinkey's scheme for developing substitute players until the end of the season. No visiting coaches were present, a marked departure from former years, when former players flocked almost by the dozen to the scene on the eve of the departure of the eleven for Tigertown. All the work was secret and the players did not visit the Yale "bowl."

Hinkey persists in retaining his line-up selected last week, despite minor injuries to Knowles and Stillman. There will be many substitutions and two full elevens are expected to face the Tigers.

For the first time in many years on the eve of a Yale-Princeton game there are still tickets tonight in the Yale football headquarters for Saturday's match. There has been a public sale for three days. Yale's poor showing against Brown, Princeton's against Harvard, and the fact that the new Princeton stadium holds about 5,000 more people than were ever before seated there, are the main reasons assigned for the surplus.

CORNELL TEAM STARTS WEST

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 12.—The Cornell football squad of twenty-six men left here tonight for Detroit after one of the biggest send-offs in the history of athletics at Cornell had been accorded to the players who will try to beat Michigan at Ann Arbor on Saturday.

Although none of the coaches or players would venture a prediction, there is strong confidence among the undergraduates that Cornell will win. Head Coach Sharpe said: "The boys are in fine shape and ready for a good fight. I know they will do their best."

The Varsity team worked out in a final scrimmage in the baseball cage this afternoon, running off the plays to be used against Michigan and getting a final polishing up. The entire Varsity team got into action for a few minutes, and every man looked as fit as a fiddle.

In addition to running the team in the practice today, Charlie Barrett, one of the mainstays in the Cornell attack, practiced punting for half an hour, working out with the ends. Barrett's punts averaged close to fifty yards and he placed them at will. Barrett was never in better condition, and his kicking is a big factor in Cornell's offense. The Cornell crack also put a number of drop kicks over from the thirty-yard line. He is ready for this style of attack if needed, but it is no secret that Cornell is looking for touchdowns. The Cornell team today worked out fine, charging quickly and showing a lot of "pep." The Ithaca forwards, who average about 177 pounds, are somewhat lighter than Michigan's, but Dan Reed thinks they will do.

Coach Sharpe and Capt. O'Hearn made short, snappy speeches to the 3,000 students in a final mass meeting at the station. The team will practice tomorrow morning at the Detroit Country Club and will not reach Ann Arbor until just before the game.

Lafayette in Long Scrimmage.

EASTON, Penn., Nov. 12.—Again today Coach Crowell put the Lafayette men through the paces in a long scrimmage. The Varsity showed to better advantage than it has at any time this week. The first team was able to get two touchdowns over on the scrubs. Word has come from Kelly that his case has been pronounced typhoid fever. Toll, therefore, was played at right end and he did the kicking for the first team in the scrimmage. It is likely that he will kick for the team in all the remaining games. Luhr did not scrimmage on account of a sprained wrist, and Livzey played in his place. Dick Diamond also remained out of the scrimmage, and Aiken played half back, while Church resumed work at quarter back. Diamond played half back in the signal drill which followed the scrimmage.

Michigan Now Ready for Cornell.

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 12.—In a drizzling rain, the football eleven of the University of Michigan went through fast signal practice today. It was the last hard work out before the game with Cornell here Saturday. Coast Yost allowed no scrimmage this week, but probably will send his warriors through another round of signal work tomorrow. Michigan is expected to start against Cornell with the same line-up that began the Pennsylvania game, except that Lyons may be at full back instead of Splawn. The latter is light, but is Michigan's best punter and drop-kicker. Yost said today he may start Splawn at this side tonight, but is needed to boot the ball. Splawn was injured in the game at Syracuse three weeks ago, but punted splendidly against Pennsylvania last Saturday.

Williams Fit for Amherst Game.

Williamstown, Mass., Nov. 12.—An easy workout was the order of the day for the Williams Varsity eleven again today. The team is in top form to play Amherst and injuries are being guarded against with the greatest care. Following a long signal drill the Varsity lined up for a few minutes on the 35-yard line, while Dewindt and Toolan practiced drop kicking. Previously the second string men had roughed it up with the freshman eleven. The second team scored one touchdown which resulted from a 50-yard run by H. Wright after he had intercepted a forward pass. A few minutes later the second string men again threatened the freshman goal, but Halsted caught Hubbel's forward pass over the goal line and downed the leather for a safety.

Indians Off for Chicago.

CARLISLE, Penn., Nov. 12.—The Carlisle Indian football squad, numbering twenty-five men, left here tonight for the Notre Dame game at Chicago on Saturday after receiving a big send-off from the local student body, which is an unusual event. The squad occupied the grandstand at noon today, and the student body paraded and cheered lonely speeches made by school officials and players. Two practice drills were held today. The early morning exercises consisted only of signals and the customary afternoon work covered elementary drills and a thorough signal practice, in which Quarter Back Welch showed proficiency in handling the new formations upon which he has been working for the last three days.

Cornell Did Not Bid for Warner.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 12.—A report from Pittsburgh that Cornell had unsuccessfully bid against Pittsburgh University for the services of Glenn Warner, the Carlisle Indian football coach, who is reported to have signed a contract with Pittsburgh University, was pronounced to be entirely without foundation at the offices of the Cornell Athletic Association today. "Absurd," said Graduate Manager Kent, when informed of the report. "A change has not even been thought about here. There is every satisfaction with our present coaching system."

HARVARD SETS FAST PACE FOR SCRUBS

Week's Hard Work Concluded—Several 'Varsity Men Going to Princeton Game.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 12.—Because it is likely that several of Harvard's first-string Varsity football players will not take any part in the Brown game Saturday, but will go to Princeton to see Yale and the Tigers, there was some lively football in the stadium this afternoon between the regulars and the scrub team. The Harvard coaches have ordered little hard scrimmaging in the ten days preceding the Yale game in the past, and have simply put their men through the Brown game between the Princeton and Yale battles. Today, however, the regulars went at the scrubs strenuously, the coaches from time to time stopping the play to put on a little work with individuals and on assignments in the plays; but otherwise the men were allowed to play straight football and to play it mighty hard.

That there was no scoring was not due to the closeness of the play so much as to the fact that when one or the other eleven got near the goal line the positions were reversed. The Varsity went through practically all the plays on which it has been drilling, but mainly the line plays, with here and there a short forward pass of the general character the team has been using in its games this Fall. The scrubs again used the Yale offense against the regulars, and while these plays hardly were run off with true Yale precision, at the same time the Varsity got some good practice.

The first team was in the game with the exception of Jeff Coolidge, who could have gone in at left had the coaches desired. It is figured that what he needs most is a lay-off, and as he is one of the men who most likely will be sent down to see Yale play Princeton Saturday, it was natural that C. Coolidge should take his place in today's scrimmage. Wallace played centre all the time the Varsity was in the game. He is in splendid shape and his defensive work did not show that he has been handicapped by his two weeks' absence from the field.

Mahan made some very pretty kicks, and there is every indication that he will be at the top of his punting game by Nov. 21 at New Haven.

The Harvard freshmen who will go to New Haven tomorrow for a game with the Yale freshmen Saturday were serenaded today by their classmates, who came down to the field in a body behind their band.

No Fordham-N. Y. U. Game.

Aroused by the report that Fordham was to play the New York University eleven in a practice game, the management of the Maroon football team, announced yesterday that the report was false and that the only way Fordham would consider a meeting would be in a regularly arranged game. The two Bronx rivals have not crossed gridiron in nine years, but each season an effort has been made by both managers to arrange a game only to come to the same failure. This year because of the unusually good records made by both of the two elevens and stirred up by the friendly rivalry existing between the two undergraduate bodies, Fordham made several advances in an effort to arrange a post-season game for the local championship, but the Violet officials sidestepped the issue on every occasion. Fordham's last overture was made on Tuesday when Capt. Burt Wyman and a member of the Fordham Press Club offered to play New York University during the week following Thanksgiving Day, the proceeds of the game to be given to the Belgian Red Cross Fund. So far, no answer has been made by the leaders of the other Bronx football machine.

Fordham got in its last hard practice yesterday for the annual Yale game tussle tomorrow. Practice consisted mainly of a long scrimmage with the High School of Commerce team followed by individual instruction to the Maroon linemen. For the first time in two weeks all the regulars were out in uniform, but neither Conklin, who just returned from home, nor Morcaldi whose place at quarter back has been taken by Rowan, was tried out against the scholastic warriors.

Dartmouth at Ebbets Field.

The Dartmouth football team, which will play Pennsylvania at Franklin Field tomorrow, will arrive in New York this morning, and this afternoon Coach Cavanaugh will take the squad to Ebbets Field, where the regulars and subs will run through an hour's signal and kicking drill. In the party are twenty-eight players, managers and coaches. Dartmouth is without the services of McAuliffe, the end who played such a good game against Princeton. Spears, the giant guard, is also suffering from a bad ankle. It is expected, however, that the big fellow will be able to play tomorrow. The probable line-up will be: Shaffer, left end; Fudrith, left tackle; Merrill, left guard; Millmore, centre; Spears, right guard; Cotton, right tackle; Winship, right end; Ghee, quarter back; Capt. Whitney, left half back; Curtis, right half back; Gerrish, full back.

Not Enough Army Regulars for Team

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 12.—When the big Army squad was turned out for football practice today names were counted and it was discovered that there were not enough of the Varsity players to make a fair showing against the scrubs, so numerous were the physical ailments among the first team men. McEwan's bad shoulder and leg bruise, Merrillat's painful thigh injury, Hodgson's lame ankle, Oliphant's old knee wrench, and Captain Prichard's illness with tonsilitis included the ailments of the men, and the coaches decided on a hike into the hills back of Fort Putnam and Crow's Nest Mountain. The big squad headed by Trainer Tuthill and the coaches were gone for two hours and returned much refreshed after their exhilarating walk. Tomorrow the team will put on the finishing touches in preparation for the game with Maine here on Saturday.

Army-Navy Football Officials.

It was learned yesterday that from a large number of names submitted by both the Army and Navy authorities for officials at the football game at Philadelphia on Nov. 28, the selection for referee would be William S. Langford of Trinity and Al Sharpe of Yale, who is now coach at Cornell, would be umpire. It is stated that Carl Marshall of Harvard will be named as head linesman.

High School Indoor Games.

A movement is on foot among the Principals of the various high schools in the five boroughs for a renewal of the high school indoor championships. They are endeavoring to make arrangements for the use of one of the Brooklyn armories for the games, with the intention of holding them on Jan. 30 or as near that date as possible.

BOSTON IN HOCKEY LEAGUE.

With the idea of giving the game a greater impetus in this city, the Boston A. A. hockey team was admitted to the American Amateur Hockey League last night at the annual meeting of the organization held at St. Nicholas Rink. As the Wanderers have withdrawn from the league, there will be only five clubs entered for the championship this season—the Hockey Club of New York, St. Nicholas, Crescents, Irish-Americans, and Boston A. A. With the entrance of this team from the Hub it is probable that the league will once more go back to the seven-men hockey.

A twenty-game schedule was arranged, with sixteen games at St. Nicholas Rink and four in Boston. A. Winsor, Jr., represented the Boston Arena, and stated that the dates, when allotted, would be satisfactory to his club and to the promoters of the rink.

School Athletic Averages.

For the purpose of making up the averages of the school work for the year in the required athletics among the children of the public schools, the authorities of the Public School Athletic League have ordered the records of each child at the broad jump compiled up to Dec. 1, when trials at this sport will be completed. The next activity in the schools to ascertain averages of capability among the students will be chinning the bar. This will be the general school activity until the final date for the compilation of records on March 15. Then will follow the period of outdoor sports, and running will be taken up to ascertain the average ability of each scholar at this the third of the three required activities to obtain the coveted "button," or physical training badge, which goes to each pupil who attains the average of performance at the three tests. The date fixed for the conclusion of the running trials is May 15. To the school which stands highest in these averages will be awarded the banner indicating the championship of the borough, there being a banner provided for each of the boroughs.

Jaffee First in C. C. N. Y. Run.

The Sophomore class won the annual interclass cross-country run at the City College yesterday. The course was about five and a half miles long. Jaffee got revenge on Joe Scarlata for his defeat in the run against Lafayette. Scarlata led for the greater part of the distance, but was beaten at the finish by only a few yards. The first seven men to finish will go to New Haven to represent the college in the intercollegiate run. The point score of the classes to finish teams were: 1917, 34 points, and 1916, second with 44 points. The times of the first ten men to finish were: H. Jaffee, 1917, 31:04. J. Scarlata, 1916, 31.24; H. Schaffer, 1915, 31.40; A. Schroeder, 1917, 31.48; F. Weberpals, 1917, 32.01; A. Skelding, 1917, 32.40; R. Rimbach, 1916, 33.05; J. Glicksberg, 1916, 33.30; J. Wright, 1918, 33.44; J. Drake, 1916, 33.55.

Founders' Day at St. George's Club.

St. George's Club will observe Founders' Day at St. George's Church on Sunday. In the twenty-six years of its existence the club has produced some famous athletes. A reunion will be held in the club rooms at 4 o'clock and at 6 a buffet luncheon will be served. The anniversary service will be held at 8 o'clock in St. George's Church, with an address by the Rev. Karl Reiland, rector. A smoker in the club rooms will follow the service and William E. Curtiss will deliver an address. A dual athletic meet will be held at the St. George's Club tonight with St. Barthol mew's Club.

Insurance Companies' Dual Meet.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company Athletic Association and the Prudential Insurance Company Athletic Association will hold a dual athletic meet next Wednesday evening in the First Regiment Armory, Sussex Avenue and Jay Street, Newark, N. J. The events will be a 75-yard dash, 300-yard dash, 880-yard run, one mile run, half-mile relay, running high jump, 300-yard invitation race, and two-mile run. (open.)

Co. F, 22d Regiment, Games.

The first games of Company F, Twenty-second Regiment Engineers, will be held next Tuesday evening, in the drill hall of the new Armory, 168th Street and Broadway. There will also be a prize dancing contest.

Sprint Races at Garden.

Sprint and motor-paced races will serve as a curtain raiser for the twenty-second annual six day bicycle race at the Garden tomorrow night, and the form of the contestants in yesterday's practice at the Newark Velodrome can be taken as a criterion that they will be keen contests. Francesco Verri, the Italian sprinting sensation, covered a lap ride at the Newark track yesterday in 15 4-5 seconds, equal to Frank Kramer's best performance. The spectacular event will be the motor-paced race with Bobby Walthour, Clarence Carman, Georges Parent, and Georges Seres in the list of starters. Parent is the only foreigner who has won the pace title three times, and Walthour is the European champion of 1908, 1911, and 1912. The card will be ready this afternoon and the first trials of the men will be held. The amateurs will use the course from 7 until 10 tonight to accustom themselves to the steep bank, while the professionals will have their inning in the afternoon.

Twentieth Sportsmen's Show.

The Sportsmen's Show will be held in February at the Grand Central Palace. The coming exhibition will mark the twentieth year of national annual sportsmen's shows in New York and it will be managed by Capt. J. H. Dressel, who originated the first one in 1895. For these yearly events an auxiliary honorary committee is rapidly being organized, composed of naturalists, big game hunters, explorers, geographers and makers of still and motion photographs of wild life. The action of the show will be constant in shooting competitions, which will include outdoor trap shooting for amateurs and professionals to be held on the Palace roof and the annual rifle tournament of the Public School Athletic League indoors, but away from the exhibition floors. A strong phase of the show will be the "where to go" department, locating and describing new game fields in various parts of the western hemisphere, and how to get there.

Fox Hunters' Field Trials.

LA GRANGE, Ky., Nov. 12.—Excellent sport was enjoyed today at the field trials of the National Fox Hunters' Association. Shortly after a pack of thirteen chosen dogs was chased off, four foxes were sighted, and the lively chase that resulted lasted more than two hours. The hundred or more riders made up the largest field of the meeting, and while several were thrown, there was no serious accident.

BANKING FOR BUSINESS.

The regulations of the Federal Reserve Bank fulfill the promise of its establishment. That promise was that there should be banking accommodations primarily for business. That seems a simple proposition, but it is something the United States never has known. Before the establishment of the national bank system there was banking anarchy, and a community so unformed and crude in its business relations that there was no need for the sort of banking now established. After the wildcat era came the national bank system, which was established to support the credit of the Government.

That was banking for patriotism, and slipped into banking for investment, or some might say for speculation. The national bank system did admirable service. It was no fault of our bankers, it was the faults of the system that caused the little panics due to alternate excesses and deficiencies of currency which there was no way to remedy. Instead of adjusting our banking to business we adjusted business to banking. When there was more business than could be done with the currency and credit available, we stopped business while private bankers cranked the machine. It was costly for us, and toward our business connections it was barbarous. We are so rich that when we set out to buy gold nobody could withstand our bidding, and foreign friends suffered for our faults.

The significance of the regulations now published is the closing of that chapter. From now on there is solid basis for the belief that good business will not be checked for lack of either cash or credit. The possibilities of profit in business in the United States have never been exhausted or even tested. We have had orgies of promotion profits and excesses of speculation, but they now are to be shackled as business has been. Our tariff prevented us from trading with other countries except on a limited scale and at a banking disadvantage. Our banking system's domestic faults already have been referred to. The removal of these two barriers and the checking of speculation give the true new freedom of trade for a nation often thought boastful, but in reality unaware of its strength.

In order to appreciate the future now opening to us, if we rise to our opportunities, we should not compare our totals of trade with those of other countries, but the relation of trade to population and area. Our totals are large because we are a nation of a hundred million of people of capacities inferior to none. But our trade development is unworthy of us. If our population were to be as stagnant as France's we ought to multiply our trade several times. If our population per acre should equal that of several other nations, and our trade should increase correspondingly, it would be a bold man who should dare to reckon the billions awaiting our harvesting. In theory the Federal Reserve system should allow this process of profit to proceed without check.

This does not mean that the Federal Reserve system will provide easy money for everybody. Competence and wariness are reflected in every line of the regulations. There are as sharp teeth in them for borrowers without merit as there is in the Sherman law for bad trusts. The credit of the Federal system is for the acceleration of "the progression of goods from the producer to the consumer." Three months is taken as a trade period, six months as a crop period. Only a quarter of the new banking capital can be loaned on the longer period. The shorter limit is the true productive or distributive period, and the bulk of the loans will be of that sort, with maturities so distributed that one-third can be collected within thirty days. This country has never known banking on that principle. Our national banks have a billion in bonds, besides those held for circulation, and they have billions loaned on collateral instead of on commercial paper. It is good business, and should be done, but not by the Federal Bank. It is the business man, large and small, who is to be accommodated on his note, which he is to be required to pay when due. Credit and profit are to be brought into closer relation than ever before. It is a message of hope and almost a promise of prosperity. The man with a contract will be able to go ahead. The man with a market scheme, or "information," may find times harder than they have been. There are no names to this report, but there are clues nevertheless. The country is fortunate in having in the Federal Board men capable of conceiving the ideas expressed so simply and clearly.

THE BOMB IN THE BRONX.

Lamentation over the destruction of part of the admirably designed and expensive Court House of the Bronx will not help to apprehend the scoundrels who placed the explosive bomb against its walls, and denunciation of these unidentified miscreants will be equally profitless. We have reason to believe that the police have been watchful since the latest fatal explosion of bombs by anarchists, but their watchfulness has not been potent to prevent another bomb outrage in a public building in a densely populated part of the city. The object of this explosion was murder and the prospective victim was a just Judge who had done his duty in bringing to justice men who have committed foul crimes. Judge GIEGS has received threatening letters of the familiar pattern since the trials began. Happily he was not injured by the explosions. The chief damage was to public property.

We have confidence that the police will do their full duty in this matter. They will spare no pains to identify the persons who caused the bomb to explode at the Court House, but they have arrested bombmakers before now, while the favorite business of the murderous anarchists goes briskly on. A sterner attitude on the part of the authorities of the City Government against all persons who preach the use of violence to defeat the ends of justice is essential to the permanent welfare of this community. The police have not always been strongly upheld in their efforts to prevent public incitements to violence. Public meetings have been held in spite of the police in which threats of vengeance against all who oppose the doctrines of anarchy have been freely made.

It happens that the men recently convicted before Judge GIEGS had forced women into captivity and sold them for immoral purposes and that white slavery is not conspicuous in the anarchists' creed, but these men and their associates were of the very type of the Black Hand and anarchist miscreants who have committed the bomb outrages from time to time. There will be general hope and expectation that the police will bring these miscreants to justice, but there can be no safety against bombs until the whole race of bombthrowers are put down or put away. One way to do this is to deny them the right to preach murder in the public streets.

PANAMA CANAL BUSINESS.

The first two months' business through the Panama Canal disclosed what was inevitable under conditions of war. That is to say, the largest class of business was American coastwise trade, which is doubly exempt from disturbance by the war. It is a legal monopoly, and it is the business of neutrals, not subject to war risks. Under such conditions it is plain that exemption from tolls would have thrown the support of the canal almost entirely upon the taxpayers, at a time when the Treasury's deficit has already demanded additional taxation. Taxation to enlarge the profits of the monopoly, and to provide the running expenses of the canal, would certainly be more unpopular than the taxation which already is a heavy load for the Administration so unfortunate as to be involved in the results of the war without possibility of escape.

The freight charges to the shippers are not based upon canal tolls and other costs of carriage. This is competitive business, and the competition fixes the rates until the era of combination arrives. The ships charge just as much as they can and get the business. The railways do the same. When each learns what business it can get and where the best profits lie, the rates will become normal. At present the railways are regulated, and the ships are not. It will be interesting to learn whether the new Trade Commission will regard this as an unfair method of competition, and if so what it will do to prevent its being carried so far as to be detrimental—first to the railways and secondly to shippers after the railways have been driven from the trade.

The ultimate result may be that the ships will be placed under regulation, possibly under the same regulation as the railways. The present situation is that the railways are not allowed to compete with the monopoly through the canal lest the ships should be unequal to the trial. That is to say, the rates are to be kept up in tenderness to the monopoly, although the canal was built to bring rates down. But it is clear that cutthroat competition among the ships is as bad for the ships as competition with the railways. A combination among the ships for a uniform rate is predestined. It necessarily exists among the railways under the law and the Interstate Commerce Commission. Reasonable rates might be established better before than after a fight for life between the ships and the railways. Neither should be allowed to ruin the other for the sake of the shippers. The rates should not be allowed to fall unreasonably low. They ought to be high enough to support the canal at least, and preferably to pay for it. If that should be done, the canal money would be released for further similar use. The results above predicted are matters of years, and there will be many cross currents of interest before the adjustment is reached.

TALKING ABOUT CONSCRIPTION.

The appearance of Sir WILLIAM ROBERTSON NICOLL as an advocate of conscription in Great Britain is significant. A Nonconformist clergyman and journalist held in great esteem by millions of his countrymen, what ROBERTSON NICOLL says on any subject is listened to with earnest attention by people whose support the British Government highly values. Conscription has always been a very unpopular subject in Great Britain. In the latter part of the Boer war, however, discussion of it could not be avoided. Recruiting had been slow and a meeting held privately at the town house of the Duke of WELLINGTON in the Winter of 1901-2 was attended by some of the Cabinet Ministers and others of influence. It was not found necessary at that time to take extreme measures, but the value, if not of general conscription in time of war, at least of enforced military service after the plan of Continental countries, has since been often debated.

ROBERTSON NICOLL is frankly of the opinion that while the upper classes and the lower classes have been doing their duty since the war began "a certain element in the middle classes has not." There is no doubt that Englishmen of all classes will be called upon to do their full duty while the war lasts. The significance of ROBERTSON NICOLL'S remarks may be political. He may have been intrusted with the job of putting out a "feeler," or he may have talked less for English than for foreign ears. Lord KITCHENER'S latest statement of the progress of war preparations indicated that he will have an enormous force ready for the field in a few months. But he admitted that many more troops than were now in sight might be required. Certainly many English people have been living "in "an atmosphere so foreign to war that "it takes time for the military situation to be fully understood."

TAMMANY IN CONGRESS.

When Tammany controls Congress the true American will weep for his country. Mr. CHARLES D. HILLES, boldly defying the election figures, says that this era is upon us. Tammany's twenty votes will hold the balance of power. If the President does not do as it wishes, Tammany will decide the fate of his measures; it will hold Congress in the hollow of its hand. It will stride through the halls of Congress waving a lash, and if it does not get some jobs in the Custom House it will hold up the appropriation bills and paralyze the Government or starve it into submission. We think we do not go too far in saying that this state of affairs will be regrettable.

However, the danger may be averted. Who is going to show the Tammany Congressmen the way to the Capitol, how are they going to find the caucus room without a guide? How are they to get themselves introduced to the other Congressmen? Before they can bring about the proper state of abject terror they must make their victims understand who they are. At the present time the average Tammany Congressman's relative position to the rest of the Congressmen resembles that of a lightning-bug to the solar system. His name appears on roll-calls, where he votes as he is instructed to vote, but to the rest of the House he is a typographical expression in the Congressional Directory. The House goes on its way in ignorance of his presence, and the expert practitioners who rule the political organization of the House never think of him as an integer. Their astonishment when they learn that he is about to compass their downfall will be tempered by a curiosity concerning who he is and how he is going to do it.

In New York he may be an object of awe, but surrounded by the old wolves of Congress he is a babe in the wood. Every organization has its own leaders and rules of the game, and the House is no exception. It is not impossible to fight the machine and break it, but it is a man's job and can only be done by one who knows the ropes and the subterranean passages and the hidden springs. A novice who tried it would be broken and tossed out of the way like a splinter. Not a single Tammany man, unless FITZGERALD is counted as a Tammany man, would understand how to get in the way of the locomotive if he wanted to; and FITZGERALD knows too much to have any such suicidal impulse.

DOMESTIC SCIENCE FOR WOMEN.

A letter to The London Times describes a situation in England that also exists, although in a less degree, in the United States. The writer is discussing the increase in the numbers of unemployed women due to the business conditions brought about by the war. Many of these women who formerly occupied clerical positions never were particularly fitted for them, she says, but nothing save the severest compulsion would induce them to take what they consider the step downward to domestic service.

The salient feature of the present crisis is the existence of a large body of slightly trained women workers who have lost their positions, and, owing to their imperfect equipment, have but a poor chance of finding others while the present depression continues. The hope is expressed that a committee already formed for the relief of clerical workers will not confine itself to relief work, which is always expensive and tends to stereotype the conditions it is designed to relieve, but will instead undertake a system of training with the aim of widening the area and dignifying the position of housework among the professions. The English-speaking races, as Mr. HENRY ARTHUR JONES has observed, delight in changing the word for a disagreeable fact, and often find the fact much pleasanter in consequence. Therefore read domestic science in place of housework, and something will be gained for the worker.

Moreover, the war will unquestionably bring many back to simpler modes of living and "the suffering it "entails will not be wasted if, "through it, the middle class woman "regains her kingdom, becoming "really the mistress of her home and "not the slave either of social exi- "gencies or the caprices of other "women whom she is obliged to em- "ploy for duties of which she herself "is entirely ignorant." Even if the training benevolently given in domestic science does not lead to its adoption as a profession, good will come of it in the indispensable affairs of daily life.

Perhaps just such a letter could not have been written in our own country. We never speak, for instance, of a "middle class." Our pleasanter word for that is "suburbanites." But we have our young clerks and stenographers who are out of work, and there is plenty of need that does not get even whispered to the charitable organizations. Why not, then, start a free course of domestic science for the unemployed, with something in the way of aid to positions after a certain amount of training? If the Belgians should be satisfactorily provided for, this might follow to fill the void left by all the completed and forwarded ten-inch-wide and two-yard-long gray woolen mufflers.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Improbability a Claim to Acceptance.

Quite the best "story" of all that have been printed about the European war was the short one printed yesterday about the commander of a Russian picket boat, who, seeing that a big cruiser of his navy was about to run on a submerged mine, and there being no time to warn the enormously more valuable vessel away, drove his own upon the mine, exploded it, and, with all of his crew except one, was killed.

The tale, of course, tries close to the breaking point the credulity even of those most anxious to believe its truth. Others, vastly more numerous, will dismiss it as an obvious invention, and they may, of course, be right in holding that no such episode ever happened. That it couldn't happen, however, is very far from certain. There probably is not a navy in the world that lacks men capable of such heroic self-sacrifice as this, and about the only question really at issue is whether exactly the circumstances required to create an opportunity for doing what the Russian sailors are reported to have done could and did present themselves on the occasion somewhat too vaguely described in the dispatches. Doubt on that point is permissible.

On the other hand, the very improbability of the story in a way lends to it a certain probability, for liars, whether professional or amateur, usually have sense enough to keep within the limits of the plausible. They do not take needless chances with their reputations, and, of course, when making up a story, it is always needless deliberately to invite disbelief. Even the writers of avowed fiction try to keep from approaching the impossible too closely, and this they do though they may be writing a fairy story, for fairy stories, too, must observe the conventions of their class.

Had the tale of the picket boat been told of Japanese sailors it would have been more easy to believe, for we have all heard like things of the Japanese before. Told of Europeans it is more difficult to accept, but one can still put in a timid word of protest against its too hasty rejection.

A Question Uselessly Complicated.

Gen. WINGATE was exactly right when he contributed to the discussion of the "teacher mother" question in the Board of Education the statement that the one point worthy of consideration was the relative efficiency of these much discussed women. The public schools are conducted for a single purpose—that of giving instruction to the pupils. Their object is not to promote the private and personal interests of either the married or the unmarried teachers, and the undenied fact that motherhood is "sacred" and mothers worthy of honor has no relevancy to the inquiry as to whether they should or should not get the leaves of absence they are demanding, or whether they should or should not find their old places waiting for them when they are ready and fit to resume work.

The problem to be settled is the effect of such absences upon the schools. It would be less troublesome if it had not been needlessly complicated by dragging in a lot of irrelevancies, and had it been kept in its properly simple form we might have had much more of definite information on which to base a decision.

Some of the arguments against the teacher mothers are weighty, especially that which relates to the superiority of continuous service to service interrupted by long absences and exposed to strong distractions.

The Board of Education has had the courage to antagonize the sentimentalists, but it is not, as has been asserted, without any support from the public or the press. This paper, at least, has often taken the position that the board had a good case, and that its carefully reached decision should be respected.

Immunity Rather Expensive.

From The Hague and by way of London—the route must be taken into consideration—comes the report that little, almost forgotten, Luxemburg is also having her troubles as a result of the war. Of course they are mild—almost nothing—as compared with those of her martyred neighbor, Belgium, but it is declared that the inhabitants of the submissive duchy are not finding the rewards of their docility great enough to make them happy in their state of helplessness, or even resigned to it.

This contradicts other tales that have reached us over other roads—tales that may have been told for a purpose, just as this one may have been. The chief grievance of Luxemburg, apparently, is that it is not allowed to know what is happening. Its news is even more severely censored than is that of the Germans at home, and it is not as well endured because no question of patriotism is involved in the enforced toleration. Then the industries of Luxemburg are suffering severely by exclusion from all its accustomed markets.

Possibly there enters into the discontent felt by the people of Luxemburg something of bitter envy of their heroic neighbors, who, though their losses have been enormous and their sufferings frightful, yet have excited the wonder and admiration of a world hitherto inclined to estimate them lightly. "Belgian" is a proud name, now, while Luxemburg has lost what little of respect it ever had. It is not even a magnificent victim.

GERMAN AGGRESSION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

While absorbed in Dr. Thomas Hall's great work on "Ethics Within Organized Christianity," the postman brought me a copy of your paper, in which my illustrious friend and moralist praises the Government of Germany for having during forty-four years resisted every temptation to aggressive act of war. No one speaks ex-cathedra more weightily than Dr. Hall when philosophic theology in his theme, but when he descends to the forum of mundane modern history and makes a brief for the Berlin War Department, permit me to point out in the spirit of Christian meekness that his statement needs gentle modification. Dr. Hall is a man of frankness and courage, and no quibble need be raised over the distinction between war and an act of a warlike nature. When a man approaches me in a menacing manner it is my duty to kill him—and so with nations. This point in Christian ethics being admitted, let me refresh the memory of those who do me the honor of reading thus far.

About thirty years ago Germany seized large tracts of territory in Southwest Africa, and her troops spent several years in suppressing native uprisings. If these natives ever provoked the original act of German aggression history sayeth not. In German New Guinea the story of German aggression and devastation is an equally dreary chronicle of colonial failure. When I visited that section of the empire in 1906 there was not a single station where the natives were not in a state of suppressed war against the dominant power.

In 1896 a dependency of Great Britain was in commotion over the Jameson Raid—rebellion was in the air and troops were mobilized for the Cape.

Official Germany then sent a cable to President Kruger of the Transvaal intimating that the rebels might find support against England by applying to Potsdam. Maybe this was the act of friendship?

In 1897 official Germany, without any preliminary notice, raided the coast of China, seized the Town and Bay of Kiao-Chau, and proclaimed a quasi protectorate over a province about as large as France in both area and population. This was the Province of Shantung, sacred as the soil of Confucius. This act of war was executed in a time of profound peace. There was no provocation on the part of China other than a provocation that would justify the invasion of the United States by every country of Europe. Two German missionaries had been killed, and, so far from marveling that the Chinese had killed so few, Germany made this the pretext for her war of aggression. No wonder that William II. exclaimed in holy rapture: "If my missionaries hold out I shall own the earth!"

In 1898 the United States and Spain were at war, and the United States fleet under Admiral Dewey entered Manila Bay when it was strewn with mines, shot to pieces all there was of Spain on the water, and commanded all there was of Spain on land at Manila. Germany had no interest in this war—least of all in the Philippines—yet she sent to Manila a stronger body of warships than all other European countries put together, and employed this force in annoying the American Admiral and committing acts provocative of war. Germany has published many columns to prove that her visit to Manila was from pure courtesy, and this proof is conclusive to those who see in the destruction of Louvain and Rheims the hand of Kultur and "Fortschritt." Nor am I speaking at random, for I was in Manila Bay in 1898 and at Pretoria in 1896, and in both places I heard the same prayer from the lips of exasperated German merchants: "Ach! if our damned Government would only mind its own business and leave us alone!"

Dr. Hall is right in praising the good things of the Fatherland—municipal efficiency, universal military service, Munich beer, and a host of other good things—but to say that German officers have not been thirsting for a chance to pillage London is to say that the chicken takes but platonic interest in the fat worm. For thirty years the German mind has been systematically and most scientifically turned toward the British Empire as the objective of German ambition. Schoolchildren, officials, officers, and patriots generally are from day to day encouraged from the headquarters of German intellectual initiative to support every variety of geographic, colonial, and navy league society, where the strong voice is that of the leading local official, who knows that a Red Eagle decoration of the fourth class will crown his success as a preacher of the great cross-Channel crusade.

The need of the Belgian refugees for clothing of every description is hardly conceivable. With the approach of Winter, millions will suffer from cold unless relieved. It is probable at this time that many Americans have given all the money they can afford, but there must be thousands who have used clothing which they can spare. Every such article for men, women, or children of any age or size is urgently needed by some unfortunate Belgian, whom a ruthless war has beggared and driven into exile. I have just returned from Europe and have made arrangements for the distribution of such donations among the refugees, through the Belgian Consulate.

Will you not, therefore, aid me in appealing to the American public for old clothes of all kinds in no matter how small quantities—provided only they are clean and whole? Articles sent to the Belgian Consulate, 25 Madison Avenue, New York City, or to me, at Roslyn, L. I., will be gratefully received and forwarded for distribution.

REGARDING OUR NEUTRALITY

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The newspapers announce that Switzerland may protest against the breach of Belgium's neutrality by Germany. If Switzerland does this without the cooperation of the United States I for one shall feel ashamed of my country and doubtful as to her mission in the world.

It was probably right that we should stand aside as neutrals at the beginning of the war. It seemed the only conscientious and wise course for us to take in that sudden emergency. But one cannot regard the President's first proclamation as the be-all and the end-all of America's policy during this world war. As the issues of the war declare themselves we must face them. If it be a breach of our own neutrality to protest against Germany's declaration that she will not be bound by treaties, then our neutrality is a suicidal thing, it consents to the death of all neutrality.

Is the United States, after signing treaties with Germany which were to protect the rights of small nations, going to stand aside while the small nations are eaten up? We so stand today. Bombs thrown upon innocent women and children in Antwerp do not move us from our position of dignified neutrality. The destruction of Louvain does not move us. The violation of the treaties signed by the Germans at The Hague with us does not move us. I say, then, may God raise up some other neutral nation that will protest in a manly way against these things. It is not size that counts, but courage.

Is it not time that we all acknowledge openly what every American knows in his heart, namely, that France and England are fighting our battles? By their blood they are saving our institutions. Any real neutrality of feeling on our part toward this controversy would be monstrous. And any formal, technical, Governmental neutrality, if pushed to a point where it means national self-effacement in the presence of insult, is monstrous also.

When Germany trampled upon Belgium she trampled upon all neutrals, and her Chancellor proclaimed it as her policy to do so. Events have led us into "entangling alliances" with European nations. We have abandoned the counsels of Washington, and I think rightly abandoned them. The conditions of the whole world compelled us to do so. We have entered into Hague conferences and peace conferences and humanitarian alliances. But being in, let us so act as to show that our signature to a treaty means something. We can keep out of such things in the future if we prefer, but let us not slink out of them.

So far as any one may judge from the newspapers the reasoning of the Administration seems to be that we are not morally bound to protest because The Hague treaty turns out upon close inspection not to be legally binding upon us. Technical objections are being raised in order to clear us of a moral obligation. This is a disquieting feature of the case. We ought not to want to get out of treaty obligations by any such reasoning as is here suggested; nor, in the great and in the large will it be possible for us to do so. The world will remember only the things which we morally promised, and the things which we did or did not perform.

New York's Early History.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Abram Wakeman, Secretary of the Lower Wall Street Association, is eminently right in his contention that the New York City histories already published leave much to be desired, but he is wrong in assuming that the proposed offer of $5,000 for a short history of the city would remedy matters. Such a history could be written, but the writer would merely condense from those already published. He could not afford to make the widespread, original research necessary to secure accuracy.

New York is soon to be the greatest city the world has ever seen, and its history is stirring and romantic. It deserves good and careful writing. But before that can be done the foundation must be prepared. All the necessary materials must be collected. That was what his Honor, the late Mayor Gaynor, proposed. He consulted me about the matter, as I had done the work of collecting the materials for Brooklyn Early History, and with his approval I prepared a petition to the Board of Estimate of the City of New York.

Had it not been for the unfortunate shooting of Mayor Gaynor the work would long ago been under way. The amount asked for is $20,000 per annum for ten years, the merest trifle when the expenditure of the city for other matters is considered, and when it is remembered that copyists, comparers, translators, and photographers must be employed, and that the research must be carried on in Canada, England, Holland, and France as well as here.

The petition has been before the Board of Estimate since June 10, 1912, but nothing definite has been done about it. The petitioners have been investigated by representatives of the Bureau of Municipal Research and of the Controller's office, and I am informed that the reports were favorable. But every year of delay makes the work more difficult to do because of the loss, theft, and destruction of the priceless materials.

Secretary of New York City Early History Petitioners.

Appeals by ex-Prisoners.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

From a number of sources the attention of the Prison Association has been called recently to appeals to individuals for financial help by alleged released and discharged prisoners. Investigation by the Prison Association has shown in a number of instances that the appeals have been deliberately planned to obtain money with false stories and misrepresentations.

The Prison Association of New York, 135 East Fifteenth Street, is glad to do whatever it can for released prisoners, and maintains a trained staff for that purpose. It has close relations with the State and city correctional authorities. I suggest, therefore, that for the protection of the public and for the real help of worthy released prisoners, the application for aid be referred to the Prison Association, or that inquiry be made of the association as to information that the association has.

The letter is written solely to prevent deliberate exploitation of the public by unprincipled ex-prisoners, and offers a method of helping worthy ex-prisoners.

O. F. LEWIS,

Home for Destitute in Brussels.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The American ladies living in Brussels have opened a home for destitute women and through their Treasurer, Miss V. Louise Meert, formerly of New York, are appealing for funds to support the home.

This home has a definite purpose and will certainly appeal to every one. Checks for any amount will be welcome. They should be sent to Hartman National Bank, 527 Fifth Avenue, New York City, account Brussels fund, V. Louise Meert, Treasurer, or to V. E. Meert, 546 Fifth Avenue.

The Belgians are innocent victims of this war. They are in a terrible plight and need our help. This home will do its share and the American ladies will be with it till the end of the war.

ART NOTES.

Childe Hassam's Works on View in Montross Galleries.

At the Montross Galleries is an exhibition of works by Childe Hassam not before shown to the public, although a number of them were painted many a year ago, and the oldest are not the least charming. Number one in the catalogue is a view of Capri. It was painted in the nineties, and age has not dulled its infinite variety; there is a little balcony and some cliffs and blue water and everything freshly and eagerly observed. In the later paintings something of the eagerness is left out. The color has grown more beautiful; nothing could be more poignant than the color in "The Beryl Gorge" not only in the sea and rock, but in the cool flesh tones of the long figure. But why this sudden simplicity, this primitive disregard of an elbow joint in the arm thrust back of the slim waist? In painting when primitive meets primitive everything is all right, but when primitive meets a wizard in technique a doubt is set up, and everything is spoiled.

Mr. Hassam shows in a number of his recent pictures a tendency to fall between his simplicity and his wizardry. His "Self Portrait" is pink and green and an excellent likeness, but it fails to do justice to the force that is somewhere back of those keen observing eyes. The "West Indian Girl" that faces you as you enter is a kind of pattern of girl and peaches and grapes, not a pattern that grips the attention and keeps it from wandering to the sunnier "Rose Hawthorne" near by, but holding in its scheming a suggestion that the artist is bidding realism avaunt. The "County Fair Still Life" and "New England Peaches and Grapes" are Cos Cob fruits, but they recall the paintings by Monet on the panels of M. Durand-Ruel's Paris apartment—the peaches roll about on the table-cloth with the same considered carelessness, they have a similar frankness of color, and yet—would it be said that they were painted by a man who knew not Cezanne? Monet knew Cezanne, but he never gave a hint of it in his painting; he was after a different problem.

In a few of these pictures by Mr. Hassam you seem to be conscious of the absence of the problem. That sometimes is an element of greatness, but only where the solution has been so triumphant as to clear the problem out of the way of the spectator. A fine picture never was painted without a definite pictorial problem and no one can observe Mr. Hassam's work as a whole and not feel that his has been at times the struggle sharp and hard that goes to the making of art. This exhibition lasts until Nov. 28, which gives an opportunity for a more leisurely review and a later specific notice.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In view of the misleading character of the early election reports on the prohibition vote, the fragmentary manner in which the corrected returns were published, and the consequent general editorial comment on the "defeat" of prohibition, I wish to call attention to the fact that the four States which voted dry last week, viz., Arizona, Colorado, Oregon, and Washington, with Virginia, which voted in September, make five States voting dry out of seven voting on the question this year, or more than half the nine States which, prior to 1914, represented the net result of sixty years' work since Maine first banished the liquor traffic. The movement for prohibition is proceeding about as fast as it can be taken care of.

EVICTED.

The curtains from the sashes have been stripped;
Our boxes and our crates lie on the lawn—
Great sluggards, waiting for the moving van
To bear them somewhere, somewhere, but not home.
The chimney looks more gaunt against the sky
Than yesterday, when smoke from our old range
Stole hopefully toward Heaven. The flowers droop
In our poor garden—rose and mignonette
Unwatered many hours. My wife's machine,
That sang her busy music day by day,
Stands on the walk beside me, silent, shut.
The baby's crib—what place it soon must fill
I scarcely know—I dare not even guess.
Hither we came, a blithe, new-mated pair,
To make a little home for our new life.
We worked and paid a little at a time—
For many months—a little at a time—
And thought we owned a fortune when at last
The whole was ours. She took me to her breast
And told me none was happier than we
In all the world. They find the joy of home
Who build or buy it out of poverty.
At precious cost, by their own self-denial!
Such was our joy, poor, simple, striving fools—
And one more joy we knew before we failed—
Before the days had crippled our delight,
And Pride and Joy went limping from our door—
For Life bent low and brought our little son!
Illness and debt and mortgages that grow
Can fatten on the hope of all young things,
Else had they surely made a Passover
For us, and seen a mark upon the door
That meant, "Stand back! Ye shall not enter here!
Here are the chosen!" Chosen? Yea, to lose
All save ourselves, our souls, and what they cost!
Here will the grass we cut grow deep and die,
Burnt, weedy, wandering; and the swallows here
Build in the chilly chimney their new nests,
Till they by stronger folk are dispossessed;
Here the bleak windows yawn into the sun,
And gape at the cool moon through empty hours.
But none shall come to cross this dusty floor,
Or climb the stairs with hurrying human feet
More glad than ours when first we entered in—
More sad than ours as we go out today.
What was our home is now a house for sale.

CITY COLLEGE PICKS DR. MEZES AS HEAD

President of University of Texas Selected as the Successor of Dr. Finley.

HIGH PRAISE FROM HOUSTON

Dr. Sidney Edward Mezes, President since 1908 of the University of Texas, has accepted the Presidency of the College of the City of New York. The announcement was made yesterday by the Trustees.

The college has been without a President since Dr. John H. Finley resigned to become State Commissioner of Education. Dr. Finley was inaugurated as Commissioner of Education and President of the University of the State of New York on Jan. 3. Dr. Adolph Werner, Professor of German, has been acting head of the college since then.

Dr. Mezes was selected on recommendations from President Emeritus Eliot of Harvard, Dr. Abraham Flexner of this city, President Benjamin Ide Wheeler of the University of California, President Van Hise of the University of Wisconsin, and other noted educators.

Dr. Mezes was born at Belomont, Cal., on Sept. 23, 1863, and was graduated from the University of California in 1884. He received an A. B. degree from Harvard in 1890, an A. M. in 1891, and a Ph. D. in 1893. He received LL. D. degrees from Southwestern University in 1912 and from the University of California in 1913.

He was an assistant professor of philosophy from 1894 to 1897 in the University of Texas, associate professor from 1897 to 1900, and professor from 1900 to 1908. He is the author of "Ethics, Descriptive and Explanatory," published in 1901. He has contributed to magazines many articles on philosophy, ethics, and education. He married in 1898 Miss Annie C. Hunter of Austin, Texas. He is a brother-in-law of Col. E. M. House. Dr. Mezes succeeded Secretary of Agriculture Houston as President of the University of Texas.

Praise from Secretary Houston.

"I have known Dr. Sidney E. Mezes intimately for more than twenty years. I knew him as a graduate student of philosophy in Harvard, and he and I went to the University of Texas the same day nearly twenty years ago.

"Dr. Mezes was the most clear-thinking, broad-minded man among my associates, and I have no hesitation in saying that I have not worked with any college or university man who was more satisfactory in any respect than Dr. Mezes was.

"When I resigned my professorship and Deanship of the Faculty to accept the Presidency of the State College, I recommended the appointment of Dr. Mezes as Dean. He received the appointment and made an unusual success. He developed a keen interest in details, managed the student body with marked success, making the students his friends, and commanded the affectionate support of the Faculty.

"When I went back to the university as President Dr. Mezes still served as Dean and Professor of Philosophy. When I resigned the Presidency to go to St. Louis, Dr. Mezes was elected to succeed me. He has made a wonderful success in that capacity. The institution has now about 3,000 students, and is intimately in touch with the people of the State, the school system, and has the good-will of the public men. He has been as wise in his contact with public men as he has in his contact with the Faculty and the student body.

Was an Excellent Teacher.

"Dr. Mezes was an excellent teacher and one of the foremost scholars in his specialty. His writings have been of a high order. His book on ethics I regard as one of the best in the field. Dr. Mezes is a man of excellent personality, and has a distinguished bearing. He is quiet and effective. He is not what you would call a show man. He speaks clearly and well but is not an orator in the popular sense. He is really the urban type of man.

He has traveled extensively and speaks German, French, and Spanish.

I think that Dr. Mezes's experience with a great State university would enable him to grasp your problems and assist you materially in extending the service of the City College to the adult population of the city. In many respects the problems of a city college are similar to those of a State university. One of your great tasks is to serve the ambitious young man who has not had the best opportunities for training and who is anxious to fit himself for his day's work. I think you will find Dr. Mezes an exceedingly experienced and competent adviser along these lines. I knew him so intimately and advised with him so frequently that I have no doubt of his ability to assist you.

Concerning the selection of Dr. Mezes, Dr. Abraham Flexner said last night:

"The Trustees of the College of the City of New York, in choosing Dr. Mezes, have performed an important public service in the most satisfactory manner. Ignoring all local and personal considerations, they have frankly gone into the open field and chosen the strongest available man. They have thus set an example that ought to be followed through the educational system.

"Dr. Mezes is emphatically an educator of modern type, well trained, a man of affairs who would be distinguished in any vocation. The city is to be congratulated on his selection."

CITY EFFICIENCY COSTLY.

Aldermen Likely to Pare Down Such Appropriations in Budget.

The Finance Committee of the Board of Aldermen, which is holding public hearings on the 1915 tax budget, heard yesterday representatives of the Fire, Health, Law, Tax Departments, the Commissioner of Accounts, and Bellevue and Allied Hospitals.

The committee was much interested in the fact that $50,000 had been appropriated for efficiency engineers in the Commissioner of Accounts office, and Benjamin Welton, one of the engineers, was asked to explain what work they performed. He said that for the past six months about half of the force had been busy in Richmond studying the sewer and highway organizations. A report they had submitted to the Board of Estimate was not adopted.

Health Commissioner Goldwater and Joseph Hamnitt of the Bureau of Fire Prevention gave it as their opinion that it was not necessary to hire outside efficiency experts, as there were plenty of men in their own departments to do the work. It is likely that the Aldermen will pare down the efficiency appropriation materially.

Salary increases and decreases in the budget were also taken up. The schedules show there were 410 increases of salaries and 182 decreases, and that the former amounted to $79,175 and the latter to $70,120. The total increases in all salaries that were originally $3,000 or more amounted to $7,000, and of this George L. Tirrell and Tilden Adamson, Chiefs of the bureaus in the Board of Estimate, received $3,000. The

RED CROSS SENDS AID TO BELGIANS

JAPAN'S HUMANE WORK

Sending Succor to Wounded in Europe—Yesterday's Gifts to Various Funds.

It was announced at the Red Cross offices that the Norwegian steamer Thelma, chartered by John Wanamaker, had sailed from Philadelphia yesterday with food for Belgium. The contributions that made this relief ship possible came through the Red Cross in a Belgian relief campaign conducted by the newspapers of Philadelphia. The Thelma carries about 2,000 tons of food. The Thelma's cargo is consigned to Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the American Minister to the Netherlands.

Interesting letters from Baron Ozawa and H. S. Tsuru, President and Secretary of the Japanese Red Cross, have been received here. The letters tell of the efforts of the Japanese Red Cross, which is the most richly endowed Red Cross organization in the world. Baron Ozawa said the Japanese have sent surgeons and nurses to Russia, France, and England, and hospital supplies to Belgium and Servia. They have equipped two hospital ships which have been caring for the sick and wounded of both the German and Japanese forces.

The proclamation of President Wilson designating Oct. 4 as Peace Sunday, a day of prayer for peace, was observed in Japan as well as in the United States.

Yesterday's contributions to the Red Cross Fund in New York amounted to $7321.60, which brought the total to $341,483.07. All contributions to the Red Cross should be sent to Jacob H. Schiff, Treasurer, 130 East Twenty-second Street, or 52 William Street.

Yesterday's contributions, cents omitted, were:

DANCERS IN COTTON COSTUMES AT BALL

GOWNS OF PERIOD OF 1860

A Scenic Log Cabin with Two Negro "Mammies"—Officials of the Southern Society in Boxes.

The Cotton Ball, given under the auspices of the New York Southern Society, attracted a large assembly last night at the Waldorf-Astoria. The object of the ball was to augment a fund for the relief of the Southerners in need and to increase the use and popularity of cotton fabrics.

While cotton costumes were not obligatory, the majority of women appeared in them, and the effect was brilliant, many novel dresses being worn, with originality shown in the fashioning of subdued and vivid colors of cotton fabrics. When the boxes were filled and the floor of the grand ballroom crowded with dancers, the color scheme transcended the sheen of silks and satins of the regulation evening dress. Many jewels were worn, which heightened the display.

The background added much to the parade of cotton fabrics, especially to the quaint cotton crêpe gowns of the 1860 period, such as was worn by Miss Mary L. Duke, daughter of Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke, who was among the box holders. The two upper tiers of boxes were draped with white cotton fabric, and the boxes on the floor level were festooned with clusters of corn on the ear and bunches of Autumnal leaves, while shocks of corn, seared by the frost, and bales of cotton were grouped here and there between the boxes. Festoons of cotton bolls were hung at the entrance to the ballroom.

A unique feature of the decorations, most of which had been sent from North Carolina, was a scenic log cabin, erected at the south end of the ballroom, before which stood two typical negro "mammies" of the South. About them were baskets of cotton bolls, husking ears, and fodder in the shock.

The men wore white cotton gloves and cotton bolls as boutonniers, and many of the women and girls had ornaments of cotton in their hair.

A negro band played syncopated time for the dancers, and between times there was an exhibition of special dances in the centre of the ballroom, which was roped off with white standards and festoons of cotton. Miss Donna Bain gave a solo dance called "in the Land of Cotton"; Miss Wilma Wynn and John Clay danced the "Cotton Trot to Dixie," and Miss Bain, in costume, and Miss Ruth McCarthy gave an 1860 polka. On the back of the programmes was a poem written especially for the ball by Helen S. Woodruff.

Two boxes were reserved for the officials of the Southern Society and the visiting officers of the army and navy. There was a delegation of a hundred men from Governors Island and Fort Hamilton, and a large representation from the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Many people came from Washington, D. C., and Baltimore, Md., and other points in the South to attend the ball. A Southern supper was served at midnight.

There were many committees in charge, and a large Reception Committee, although there was no formal receiving line. Mrs. H. Snowden Marshall, Chairman of the Decoration Committee, wore a gown of white cotton tarletan, made with the old-fashioned hoop skirt and trimmed with scarlet frilling, being topped with a small poke bonnet. Mrs. Theodore H. Price, Chairman of the Costumes Committee, was in blue tarletan, with a ruffled skirt and a bodice of white cotton velvet. Mrs. Wilbur Mathews, Chairman of the Music Committee, appeared in a gown of white tarletan, with basque of blue and gold brocade. Mrs. R. C. Taylor wore a gown of white cotton net, with a ruffled skirt edged with point applique and the bodice was trimmed with an old-fashioned lace bertha.

Mrs. Lorenzo Semple chose her costume from the 1870 period, when bustles were just becoming popular. It was of white lace over pink, with small ruchings running up and down the trained skirt, with a sleeveless bodice and straps over the shoulders. She also wore a set of turquois necklace and long earrings that belonged to her great-grandmother. Mrs. Lewis B. Woodruff was in an 1860 costume, of white organdie, with garlands of pink and blue rosebuds. Three misses, waterfalls, bustles, crinolines, and pantalettes added much to the scene of old-time Southern festivities.

The Secretary of the Treasury, William G. McAdoo, was Honorary Chairman of the General Committee and Mrs. Algernon S. Sullivan was Honorary Chairman of the Committee of Women, which included many prominent Northern and Southern women.

Mrs. W. W. Fuller, Mrs. William P. Hamilton, Mrs. Herbert L. Satterlee, Mrs. Stephen L. Snowden, Mrs. Harman M. Biggs, Mrs. Winfield Fuller, Mrs. William H. Harris, Mrs. Lorenzo Semple, Mrs. Charles H. Senff, S. R. Bertron, R. B. Duke, Walter S. Thomson and George McFadden Jr., of Philadelphia; Mrs. Frank G. Burke, Mrs. E. E. Meacham, Rufus L. Patterson, Paul Pflieger, Thomas F. Ryan, R. K. Smith, W. J. Steel, and Henry Walters were among the boxholders.

The list of patronesses included several hundred names.

AID FOR WIDOWED MOTHERS.

Festival at Delmonico's Nets $7,000 —Gold in Melting Pot.

The Widowed Mothers' Fund Association Festival at Delmonico's closed last evening after two days, and $7,000 was realized. Mrs. Charles Oppenheim, sitting in the black mystery cauldron, wearing a peaked black hat, disposed of most of her black mysteries; Miss Marion Einstein's flower booth, with its birds and autumn leaf decorations, made much money and the children's "Mme. Jarley's Wax Works," which was given in the afternoon, was so crowded that there was "standing room only," before it was half over.

Mrs. Frederick Nathan gathered in large quantities of old gold and silver in her melting pot and a dancing booth was a unique feature. It was in charge of Mrs. Harry Kraft and Miss Pauline Untermeyer, and any one who had a dancing problem to solve brought it to Mr. and Mrs. Rowley Downes, professionals, who gave free advice in everything relating to the new dances.

H. A. Hitchcock Weds Miss Miller.

The marriage of Harry A. Hitchcock of 1 Gramercy Park and Miss Alice Miller, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs Thomas A. Miller, took place at 8:30 o'clock last night at the home of the bride's parents, 102 West Ninety-third Street. There were no attendants, and none except relatives were present. The Rev. Henry E. Cobb of the West End Collegiate Church performed the ceremony. Mr. Hitchcock is with the publishing firm of McBride, Nast & Co.

FINLEY—COTTON.

Mr. and Mrs. William Finley of Westerleigh, West New Brighton, S. I., announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Eleanor M. Finley, to Frank J. Cotton of Astoria, L. I., formerly of Dublin, Ireland. No date has been set for the wedding.

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

A Programme of Tschaikowsky — Mr. Schulz Soloist.

Mr. Stransky evidently judged well the tastes of the present audiences of the Philharmonic Society when he arranged the programme of last evening's concert all from the works of Tschaikowsky. The audience was large and let no opportunity go by of applauding the music and the performance. Tschaikowsky is not a diet that can be lived on exclusively for a long period. It may be that some even of the enthusiasts found before the "Capriccio Italien" at the end of the programme was finished that there might be too much Tschaikowsky in an "all Tschaikowsky" programme. In fact the composers are few of whom a similar thing cannot be said. Mr. Stransky, however, devised his programme with an eye, or an ear, for contrast. The familiar "Pathetic" Symphony was the principal number; it was preceded by the "Romeo and Juliet" overture and followed by the "Variations on a Rococo Theme," for violoncello, played by Mr. Leo Schulz, devised and the "Capriccio Italien," in which the Russian let himself willingly be beguiled by the spirit of Italy, and of several works that are fruits of his Italian sojourn.

The "Pathetic" Symphony has been one of the most frequently played of the Philharmonic's repertory in the last decade, and it had the same experience here as in some other capitals. It is a work that lends itself to "effects;" it is made up of effects, and conductors, and doubtless, orchestras, delight in it for this reason. Yet it has had probably an undue proportion of performances, for it is not Tschaikowsky's best symphony. It brought forward some of the orchestra's best qualities last evening. Mr. Stransky conducted with zeal and obvious sympathy, and the orchestra brought off all the effects with unfailing precision. They are for the most part not difficult, but good playing by skillful men naturally enhances them, as it did last evening.

Mr. Schulz has not seldom appeared as solo performer with the orchestra of which he is one of the chief ornaments. Florid variations are not what the violonce o is best adapted for; the "rococo theme" is poor and the variation little better than ingenuous. Mr. Schulz mastered them all, but not even his skill could make them seem very much worth while, or very exhilarating. His big rich and virile tone was heard at its best, so were his skill and precision in the florid technique of the instrument.

FRANCIS ROGERS'S RECITAL.

The Little Theatre gave Mr. Francis Rogers an opportunity to be heard to the best advantage in his song recital there yesterday afternoon. Its small space and intimate surroundings were favorable to both his voice and his diction, which last was exceptionally clear and finished in Italian, German, and English, and indeed was an admirable example of what such things should be. Mr. Rogers was in excellent voice, and his singing denoted how a serious musician seeking for better things, aiming at a higher ideal, and intelligently applying himself, without the thoughts of having attained all, can find what he seeks.

Mr. Rogers's style is freer, more expressive, more varied, and truly musical than ever before. His voice sounded yesterday at its best in richness and in quality. He uses now head tones with skill and judgment, without excess; and in such songs as the old French "L'Amour de Moi" and Cornelius's "Ein Ton," both of which he had to repeat, gained beautiful effects therewith. He treated the "divisions," the florid passages, in Handel's "Si tra i Ceppi" with freedom and dexterity; and there was splendid vigor in his "Vive Henri IV," another old French song. In the beautiful song "If thou thy heart will give me," attributed by some to Bach, he sang with much tenderness. In Brahms's "An die Nachtigal" he was less successful in finding expression for the poetical ecstasy of the music than for the Russian sentiments of the same composer's "Liebliche Wangen."

Striking numbers of a programme of unusual interest were three songs by Moussargsky; one at least had beauty, the "Cradle Song of the Peasant," expressing the pain, sorrow, and hopelessness of the Russian peasant's lot. Of an interest more psychopathic than strictly musical is the "Love Song of the Idiot," a strange babble of importunity in unceasing five-four rhythm. The last, "Field Marshal's Death," is a graphic picture appropriate to present events, sung with graphic power. Mr. Rogers's stone played Mr. Rogers's accompaniments with accomplished skill, and all from memory.

Mrs. Edward S. Steinam was matron of honor for her sister-in-law, and the ushers were David Kubie, George Bernheimer, Samuel Strauss, and Edward Levy.

A reception and dinner followed the ceremony. After a trip to Havana, Mr. and Mrs. Kubie will live in New York.

SUFFRAGE CONGRESS SPLIT ON BLACKLIST

NON-PARTISANSHIP UPHELD

"Seven Campaign States" for Dr. Shaw's Re-election—She Rejects President Emeritus Proposal.

Special to The New York Times.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 12.—The black list and States rights brought forth a storm in the Convention of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association this afternoon that was furious at times. The trouble was provoked by the report of Mrs. Medill McCormick on the question of the publication of the list during the recent campaign.

After declaring that a handful of men controlled the action of Congress, Mrs. McCormick, at the head of the Congressional Committee, said that if the publication had done no other good it had worked a wonder in "smoking out" Minority Leader Mann.

Mrs. Grace Wilber Trout, leading the anti-Shaw forces, saw only a crystallization of sentiment against suffrage in such tactics as the publication of the black list.

It was left to Miss Kate Gordon of New Orleans, leader for States rights suffrage, to question the authority of the Congressional Committee to publish information about Congressmen, this being a matter solely for the States to determine, she said.

Mrs. Crowley of Massachusetts sought to attack the committee for making the publication. She said it came at a time when it was resented by the friends of Senator Lodge, and killed the chances to get the suffrage plank in the Republican platform of Massachusetts.

When a delegate sought to show that Minority Leader Mann deserved a better fate on account of his record on the passage of the White Slave act and the Childs act, Mrs. McCormick, a daughter of Mark Hanna, said that he tried to stifle each in committee, but came out in the end for the measures, as was his custom.

Mrs. McCormick said the committee began its work among members of Congress with efforts to obtain the passage of what the suffragists designated the "Susan B. Anthony Federal Amendment," framed by Miss Anthony, and first introduced in Congress in 1893. It provided that no citizen should be deprived of the elective franchise because of sex.

"After working among members of Congress in the interests of this amendment," said Mrs. McCormick, "and after we had thoroughly canvassed both House and Senate, we realized there was no hope of effecting its passage or making it effective without more pressure behind it. This amendment, even if it were passed by a three-fourths majority, would still have to be ratified by thirty-six States to make it effective.

"We then realized that we would be obliged to have more women enfranchised by amendments of their State Legislatures so that they could bring more pressure to bear upon their representatives in Congress. After much deliberation we considered it would be best, in order to make effective ultimately the Susan B. Anthony amendment, to bend our efforts toward the passage of the Shafroth amendment, which would have the question of woman suffrage submitted to voters of each State by initiative petition."

Mrs. Antoinette Funk asserted that her experience and her study of the various State Constitutions had convinced her that it would be almost impossible to obtain woman suffrage entirely through State action, because of the various difficulties surrounding the passage of amendments to State Constitutions.

A resolution "reaffirming the historic policy of political non-partisanship" of the association was accepted almost unanimously.

The resolution defining the policy occasioned spirited debate. This asserted "that our non-partisan policy requires that the attitude of the National Association toward an individual member of Congress or candidate for office for shall be determined by his individual attitude or record on woman suffrage and not by the attitude or record of the party to which he may belong."

The resolution was adopted by a vote of 42 to 15.

In a symposium tonight on the fight for the ballot the "seven campaign States" where suffrage was an issue at last election representatives of the suffrage organization of Montana and Nevada, where amendments were successful, and of Missouri, Ohio, North and South Dakota and Nebraska, where they lost, told of their successes and their purposes for the future.

Mrs. Anna H. Martin, speaking for Nevada, declared her State was the "most male State" in the Union, the 1910 census showing two men to every woman. The suffrage victory, she said, indicated that the men had realized their need of women in helping to direct governmental affairs.

The suffrage victory in Montana was attributed by Miss Stewart to thorough organization in each county and precinct of the State, and to concentrated, harmonious work by both leaders and the rank and file.

A resolution signed by the delegates of the "seven campaign States" expressing appreciation of the work of Dr. Anna Howard Shaw was presented to the President of the national organization. The resolution closed with this statement: "Your services, in our estimation, are invaluable, and cannot be dispensed with, and we desire to express our loyalty and gratitude."

The expression was taken to indicate that Dr. Shaw probably would have the support of the campaign States for re-election.

Dr. Shaw, in a statement given out today, formally rejected the proposition of the caucus of a number of leaders, held last night, that she accept the position of President Emeritus of the organization in order that she might devote her entire time to campaigning for the cause.

"I shall accept the nomination for President of the National American Woman Suffrage Association if it is tendered to me by the convention now meeting here," said Dr. Shaw, "but under no circumstances will I consent to act as President emeritus."

Mrs. Desha Breckenridge, of Kentucky, who had been slated for President by the caucus, stated that she would refuse to become a candidate for President of the association if Dr. Shaw rejected the caucus proposition.

CLUBWOMEN FOR SUFFRAGE.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Nov. 12.—After one of the warmest sessions ever held by the State Federation of Women's Clubs, the delegates in session here today declared in favor of woman suffrage by a vote of 227 to 72.

Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge led the anti-suffragists, and Mrs. Frank J. Shuler, who presided, allowed every anti-suffragist an opportunity to be heard before the roll was called. After the announcement of the vote Mrs.

STEAL A MARCH ON EXCHANGE BROKERS

STERLING DOWN TO NORMAL

Sensational Drop Extends to Francs and Marks—Gold Pool's Occupation Gone for the Present.

Foreign exchange rates took a decided tumble yesterday, which carried demand sterling to the lowest point since the beginning of the European war and to substantially a normal basis for this time of the year.

This sensational drop followed and was attributed to an announcement by J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., as managers of the city loan syndicate, that the ninth installment on account of the $100,000,000 pool, amounting to $14,278,750, which was called for yesterday, would be payable in Clearing House checks, instead of in gold or foreign exchange. This meant that the managers had already accumulated enough exchange to provide for the entire requirement on account of the city's maturing obligations for the rest of November.

It had been known for a week that the call was to be made, and foreign exchange brokers had loaded up with large amounts of exchange, which they expected to sell to the syndicate. In the meantime bills have been coming into the market at a lively rate recently on account of purchases of war supplies by the European nations, and on Wednesday demand sterling got down to about $4.89, a whole point below the gold export basis.

When the announcement came yesterday that the city loan syndicate had all the exchange it needed for the ninth installment the brokers were left with their exchange accumulations and without the expected market for them. Heavy offerings were made at rapidly declining prices and for a time absolutely no buyers could be found. From a fraction above $4.89 on Wednesday, demand fell to $4.86⅝. Its highest for the day was $4.86⅛, and it closed at $4.87⅜. Cables ranged from $4.89⅛ down to $4.87⅛ and closed at $4.88.

In sympathy with this movement, and as a result of the purchase of war supplies, checks on Paris declined rapidly. On Wednesday a dollar would buy 5.13½ francs; yesterday it would buy 5.15. Berlin exchange, which has been declining for some time, made a new low record at 86, closing at 86⅜, as against a normal rate of about 95.

Expect Exchange from Canada.

In using their accumulated exchange at this time the managers of the city loan syndicate looked forward to a new source of exchange for their own needs in the near future. This is an advance of $50,000,000 to be made by Great Britain to Canada to cover the cost of arming and equipping the Canadian troops going to the front. Canadian exchange operations are carried on mainly through the New York market, her leading banks having branches here, and New York being the best market in which to sell exchange. An additional reason for Canada's exchange, created by the credit established for her in London, coming into this market, is that to a large extent the very supplies for which she is receiving it were bought in the United States, naturally through the New York market. With this prospective supply of large amounts of London exchange it was felt that rates would continue low.

Of approximately $80,000,000 to be paid by the city abroad, the nine installments so far called will provide for $65,827,708, leaving only about $13,300,000, which will mature in December. The prospects are that this amount also will be provided without shipping gold, and it is expected that as a result of settlement through the purchase of exchange below the gold export point the city will receive a substantial rebate against the amount charged to it in the original agreement for the cost of exchange. The agreement provided that the syndicate should make such profit as it could through the exchange transactions, but that in case these profits exceeded 2 per cent. the excess should be returned to the city.

The question was raised yesterday whether there would be any further need of the $100,000,000 gold pool, which was subscribed by banks throughout the country for the purpose of creating and selling exchange by means of gold shipments to Ottawa for the account of the Bank of England. When this pool was formed the dislocation of the foreign exchange market was at its height and there were even fears that the $100,000,000 fund would prove insufficient to control and bring down the abnormal rates then prevailing. The pool shipped $16,000,000 to Ottawa, not even waiting for the subscriptions from the interior to be paid, but obtaining advances from nine New York banks. It called for 25 per cent. payment on the subscriptions as a starter, but it has never made a second shipment and it has not used up the credit of $100,000,000 first established. It has distributed but $2,500,000 from the proceeds of its sales of exchange and it is generally understood that these sales have not yet reached $5,000,000. Of course, it is selling no exchange now, as the rate is below the gold export point, and the general opinion yesterday was that it would stay there.

The other $15,000,000 paid in is lying idle, earning no interest, and the pool still has a credit in London of at least $4,000,000. Against this exchange will probably have to be sold, even if at a loss, as the pool has no agreement calling for the return of any part of the gold shipped in case it should not be needed.

The gold pool, however, will not be wound up at present for a variety of reasons. Its influence in helping to bring rates down has been largely psychological, and this effect will continue while it lasts if any attempts should be made to boost rates. There are also considerable amounts of finance bills to mature soon in London, and while conditions there have become much easier lately, nothing can be predicted definitely as to the extent to which these bills will be renewed or extended. Finally, there is always the question of what will happen if London gets a chance to unload its American securities through the opening of the Stock Exchange or otherwise.

The rate of $4.85⅝ for demand sterling that was reached yesterday is agreed to be practically normal by comparison with the rates on the same date in several years past and with the high and low rates for November for the same period, shown in this table:

	Demand Sterling, Nov. 12.	November. High.	Low.
1914	$4.8515	$4.8533	$4.8490
1913	4.8535	4.8570	4.8456
1912	4.8700	4.8700	4.8613
1911	4.8555	4.8615	4.8540
1910	4.8720	4.8720	4.8705
1908	4.8620	4.8650	4.8600

In some years the rate was lower and in others higher than that yesterday.

Brooklyn Edison Company Fined.

A fine of $500 was imposed yesterday upon the Edison Electric Illuminating Company of Brooklyn in the Court of Special Sessions for violation of the smoke and cinder ordinance at its plant in Pearl Street, that borough. It was represented that the company had not installed devices to do away with smoke and cinders until three years after the first complaint had been made.

MLLE. DORZIAT ON SUFFRAGE

Actress Says Horrors of War Have Opened Eyes of French Women.

Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat, leading woman with "The Hawk," now playing at the Shubert Theatre, yesterday afternoon in an address to members of the Women's Political Union congratulated American women on their victories in the fight for equal suffrage.

"You American women have the glory of partly obtaining equal suffrage," she said, "and that glory is fairly deserved. In France we have followed your efforts with admiration and enthusiasm since the very beginning. The great majority of Frenchwomen were not ready until these last few months to answer the eloquent appeal of their sisters in America. But the horrid events which are now occurring are opening the eyes of the most obstinate, and this mad war, with its train of horrors and misery and awful consequences, has already made more converts to the feminist cause than all the manifestations of these last years.

"I can't help thinking of my unhappy country that is now expiating so cruelly the mistakes of fifteen years of crazy and selfish politicians. Don't you think that the women who are giving their sons and husbands for their country have a right to judge those who assume the responsibility of government? It is impossible to stop the war—it will last to the end—earnestly and fiercely fought by both sides. When it is finished, when one generation of our finest men are completely destroyed or disabled, we will find that the women will prove of such vital assistance in helping restore and build up a new country out of the ruins, I am sure the men themselves will ask the women to come with them and help them. That will be the beginning of an era of peace."

PLANNED TO DIE WITH WIFE.

Bahrenberg Sent Her Confession to Her Mother and His Brother.

The suit of Frederick W. Bahrenberg, a retired wine importer, for the annulment of his marriage to Felice Robinson Bahrenberg, a vaudeville actress, was continued yesterday before Supreme Court Justice Blanchard. Mr. Bahrenberg testified that before her marriage his wife confessed to him previous attachments and that she had been married to a man named Farrington. Bahrenberg says his wife concealed many acts of her past life, particularly the fact that the ceremony she went through with Farrington was not a legal marriage.

Mr. Bahrenberg said he and his wife took a honeymoon trip to Panama. Mrs. Bahrenberg was very ill on the voyage, and confessed that she had never been married to Farrington. He said that this affected him so much that he and his wife agreed to commit suicide by jumping overboard. But first Mrs. Bahrenberg was to write out her full confession. A copy was to be sent to Mrs. Bahrenberg's mother and another copy to Mr. Bahrenberg's brother.

"We posted these letters at Kingston, Jamaica," Mr. Bahrenberg said, "because we never expected to reach Panama alive."

Mr. Bahrenberg said his wife made the confession voluntarily, and then he said:

"Her confession affected me deeply, and I began drinking a good deal. I made an apartment ready for my wife at 596 Riverside Drive. I was taken ill and went to a sanitarium, where I stayed ten months. While there I made an attempt to kill myself."

Mrs. Bahrenberg, a tall, thin, dark-haired woman, testified that her husband beat her on board the ship and wanted her to commit suicide alone. The case will go on today.

SEEK RICH MEN AS WARDENS

Talk of T. M. Osborne and V. Everit Macy for Sing Sing.

V. Everit Macy of Westchester, a Progressive, and Thomas Mott Osborne of Auburn, a Democrat, were talked of yesterday as possible successors to Thomas J. McCormick, the deposed Warden of Sing Sing. Prisons Supt. Riley favors Mr. Osborne, who has made close inside study of prison life and who is warmly devoted to prison reforms.

Gov.-elect Whitman said yesterday he had known Mr. Osborne for a good many years, that he admired him greatly, and felt that what he had done at Auburn Prison in the interest of reform had been a great service to the State. Mr. Osborne has been strongly recommended for the position by O. F. Lewis, Secretary of the Prison Association; Prof. George W. Kirchwey of Columbia University, and E. S. Whitin, member of the National Committee on Prison Labor.

"Mr. Osborne is a wealthy man and it would be a great sacrifice for him to give up his home in Auburn and take up residence in Sing Sing," said Mr. Lewis yesterday. "But Mr. Osborne is interested in prison reform, and he has told me that he would accept the appointment if it was tendered to him."

V. Everit Macy was elected Superintendent of the Poor in Westchester on the Progressive ticket two years ago. He is a friend of Gov.-elect Whitman. He is a man of wealth.

"I think the appointment of Mr. Macy would be an exceedingly good one," said Mr. Whitman yesterday. "I doubt, however, whether he would take it."

William R. Willcox, former Chairman of the Public Service Commission, called on Mr. Whitman yesterday. Mr. Willcox said it was just a friendly social visit. However, there was some discussion on appointments and the proposed reorganization of the Public Service Commissions.

STOLE THE BISHOP'S CAKE.

Thief Got a Watch Also at Long Island Church Supper.

Bishop Frederick Burgess, who lives in the See house on the grounds of the Cathedral of the Incarnation at Garden City, L. I., likes cake, especially layer cake with frosting on the top. But the Bishop did not finish his supper last evening by cutting a fine cake made for him by one of the women of St. Joseph's Episcopal Church of Queens, L. I., because the cake was stolen.

Many of the women of the church, of which the Rev. H. W. R. Stafford is rector, gathered on Wednesday afternoon in the guild room of the church on Franklin Avenue, Queens, for a supper. One of the cakes supplied for the occasion was so fine that it was suggested that it should be set aside for the Bishop.

The cake was put upon a shelf beside an open window. During the progress of the supper a woman screamed, and all eyes followed her gaze to the cake. They saw it disappearing through the window. An arm was encircling it lovingly. And in the thief's hand was clutched a watch belonging to John Gallister, which had been put on the shelf beside the cake.

BURIED ALIVE FOUR DAYS.

Two Miners Ate Boot Leather and Were Well When Rescued.

POTTSVILLE, Penn., Nov. 12.—John Evans and William Schreiner, coal miners who had been imprisoned for four days behind a huge fall of coal in a mine in which they were working, were rescued alive this morning.

Rescuers felt sure the men could get enough air to keep them alive for days and, working in a limited space, forces of miners dug desperately in the effort to reach their imprisoned comrades, never halting for a minute. Hundreds of persons stood around the mine while the work was in progress and there was little sleep in the two mining villages in which they lived while the fate of the miners hung in the balance.

The men were found huddled together in a blind heading. They had been without food and water but were in good condition and able to walk. They said they chewed their boots to stave off the pangs of hunger and were able to keep track of time by removing the crystals from their watches.

Brokers Put In More Wires to Handle Out-of-Town Business —The Day's Advances.

The Committee of Five of the Stock Exchange officially sanctioned yesterday free publication of prices and amount of transactions in unlisted securities. The result of the removal of this embargo on quotations, which had existed since the exchanges closed on July 30, was a substantial increase of business on the Curb.

Not only was there evidence of broad demand for stocks after brokers began to send quotations by wire to customers and correspondents, but several firms made preparations to increase their trading facilities. One house ordered in four more private wires to other cities and larger telephone service was arranged for by a number of Curb firms.

The Curb authorities permitted business to be conducted in the old way, although it was announced after a meeting of the Board of Representatives that the official opening would not take place until next Monday. This statement was issued by Chairman E. R. McCormick of the Curb Association:

It has been decided that the improvement in the general financial situation has removed the necessity for restrictions over trading in unlisted stocks, therefore, you are hereby notified that the New York Curb market will officially resume business on Monday, Nov. 16, 1914, at 10 o'clock A. M.

This action on the part of the Chairman of the New York Curb Market Association has received the approval and sanction of the Committee of Five of the New York Stock Exchange

The Standard Oil stocks were the favorites of Broad Street traders yesterday, but there was practically normal interest in the mining and industrial stocks and bonds. Higher prices were made by the majority of issues reported upon, with marked strength in the oil group.

Announcement that Atlantic Refining had declared a dividend of $5 a share, the first since the Oil Trust was dissolved, stimulated dealings in the noon hour and thereafter. At the close an advance for the day of 48 points in the bid price for Atlantic Refining was reported, with increases extending from 5 to 25 points in Prairie, Solar Refining, Standard of California, Standard of Indiana, Standard of Ohio, and Standard of Kentucky.

The day's increase of trading activity was by no means confined to the curb. Buying of stock and bonds through the Stock Exchange Clearing House continued at a rate that has encouraged the Stock Exchange authorities to believe that a substantial purchasing power is being held back by inability to do business on the Exchange.

A demonstration of the demand for listed stocks was given by the dealings in New Street, where prices scored good gains. The improvement displayed during the day in the "outlaw" market followed rises recorded during the week and put quotations from 2 to 8 points above low figures quoted since the war began.

Stock.	Gain.	Stock.	Gain.
Amal. Copper	1	N. Y., N. H. & H.	½

The evident interest shown in the securities market aroused renewed discussion in financial circles of the possibility of an early reopening of the Stock Exchange. Reports were heard that prominent bankers had met to discuss the situation, but inquiries were met with the reply that nothing had yet been done toward reopening.

To enjoy the country and live in the city is one of the advantages of the automobile owner.

At this time of the year, when conditions are ideal for motoring, the pleasure derived from a car is doubled.

Those not so fortunate as to own a car will find in the Automobile Exchange of The New York Times (next to last page) various announcements of automobiles for rent.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Noteworthy Improvement—Open Trading Resumed in Unlisted Securities.

No other single day since the Stock Exchange was forced to close at the end of July on account of the war panic which swept over Europe brought proof as tangible as that afforded yesterday that the disorganization then brought about was coming to an end. It was a mere coincidence that open trading in unlisted securities was permitted on the very day when foreign exchange rates resumed a normal level, but the concurrence of those events yesterday combined to throw into high relief the very great improvement which has come about in the financial situation. The decline in exchange was so abrupt as to lead the market to assume the likelihood of a temporary rebound, but it was recognized that a very great change for the better had occurred and it was felt that the permanency of this change was reasonably well assured.

It was the news in connection with the latest call made upon the subscribers to the New York City note syndicate that payment could be made in Clearing House funds instead of in gold or in exchange which brought to light the fact that provision for this $14,000,000 installment had been made by the syndicate managers through the exchange market. That meant that to cover this sum no gold would have to be sent abroad. Further, the bankers had been able to accumulate a large amount of exchange which enable them not only to provide for the city's obligations, but also to sell a large amount of exchange for other purposes. The offerings were increased largely beyond the current demand for remittances by the attempted resale of a good deal of exchange which dealers had accumulated in anticipation of disposing of it to the subscribers to the city syndicate. How radically the exchange market improved is indicated by the fact that demand sterling sold as low as 4.86¾, which is a lower rate than that quoted at the same date in two out of the last five years. The day's decline carried sterling exchange far below the gold export point, and if the decline holds it will mean that we will be practically free of any new demands upon our gold supply.

That in itself is a great step in advance. Its collateral consequences hardly appear less important. The one serious obstacle which has appeared to exist in the way of resuming Stock Exchange trading has been the possibility that a large amount of foreign held American securities would be sold in this market and the proceeds sent abroad in the shape of gold exports. With the exchange market once solidly established at a level at which it would be much cheaper to buy bills of exchange than to send out gold the principal, if not the only serious difficulty in the way of reopening the Stock Exchange would be done away with. It has been many times suggested in Wall Street discussion since the Stock Exchange closed that a syndicate for the protection of the stock market should be organized whenever reopening was decided upon, and this suggestion was put in concrete form yesterday before the Investment Bankers' Association, who are now in convention at Philadelphia. The suggestion as proposed by the President of the association was that a syndicate in the amount of $250,000,000 be organized to purchase stocks and bonds. Whatever prospective necessity there was for such an arrangement was lessened by yesterday's developments.

In the curb trading final prices were in many instances higher than the opening quotations, and in some important issues higher than the closing prices of July 30. It is a matter of common knowledge that street trading in listed securities has increased and lately that market has shown unmistakable reflection of improvement in financial sentiment. Practically all of the stocks sufficiently active to be generally quoted in that market have risen considerably in recent days. The average closing bid price of twenty-eight stocks showed yesterday a net advance of ⅞ over the average closing bid price of the previous day.

Each day lately has brought some additional evidence of the easing money situation. A number of call loans were made yesterday at 5½ per cent. and exceptional loans were made as low as 5 per cent. Time loans have receded substantially under 6 per cent. and the best grades of commercial paper are now being quoted as low as 5½ per cent. In this movement the approaching establishment of the Federal Reserve Banks is no doubt playing a considerable part.

Preparations for the establishment of the new system are proceeding smoothly and today or tomorrow announcement is expected of the rate at which paper may be rediscounted with the Federal Reserve Banks. It seems plain that banks in the reserve centres will continue to make loans to correspondent banks throughout the country, but this business can hereafter be transacted with greater ease, owing to the reliance that can be placed upon the ability of the lending banks to rediscount bills which they have purchased, should occasion for doing so arise. But that will be only one of the advantages growing out of the new banking system which needs but to be conservatively and skillfully handled to bestow very great benefits upon the business of the country.

HAS A ROCK ISLAND PLAN.

Amster Outlines His Views on Stock Distribution.

N. L. Amster made this statement yesterday to outline his position in respect to the proposed distribution of Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific Railway stock to the holders of Rock Island Railroad collateral trust bonds:

"The all-important point facing us (collateral bondholders, who are practically the stockholders,) is to get our stock without any 'ifs or ands,' and this can only be made feasible through instructing the Trustee to buy in the pledged stock at the foreclosure sale for the mortgage, and that the Trustee, and not the committee, distribute same among the bondholders upon presentation of their bonds plus cash covering our pro rata of Trustee and foreclosure expenses. In this way even those absent from the States, or who may not hear in time of this hasty foreclosure sale, would eventually receive their pro rata of the stock.

"The security involved in this foreclosure is different from the usual—this is not physical property, incapable of being split up, but stock certificates, capable of division into as many units as necessary. All my efforts have been, and are still, directed toward a fair and equal distribution of the equity back of our bonds without any 'strings' attached.

"I wish to state that there is absolutely no truth to the statements recently appearing in the press or otherwise, claiming that I have agreed to the Wallace Committee's plans or to deposit my bonds. There is only one condition under which I would cooperate with the Wallace Committee, and that is that all bondholders, whether deposited or not deposited, be treated equally and alike."

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

Call money: New loans, 5@6 per cent., according to terms; standing loans, 6@8 per cent.

Time money, 5¾@5½ per cent. for sixty days to six months. Mercantile paper was quoted at 5½@6¼ per cent. for the best names.

CALL IN $100,000,000 RESERVE DEPOSITS

Members Notified That New York Bank Will Be Ready on Monday.

URGED TO REMIT IN GOLD

Discount Rate on Commercial Paper Not Yet Determined by Board.

Benjamin Strong, Jr., Governor of the Federal Reserve Bank, sent letters last night to the 480 member banks notifying them that it would be ready to receive reserve deposits next Monday. The deposits will aggregate from $100,000,000 to $125,000,000.

It is impossible to determine the exact amounts in advance, as they are based on the deposits held by the member banks at the beginning of business next Monday. The member banks in this city are required to deposit with the Federal Reserve Bank seven-eighteenths of their total legal reserves, those in reserve cities three-fifteenths, and the others two-twelfths. The rest of the reserves are to be held partly in the vaults of the banks and partly in either their vaults or the Federal Reserve Bank at their option.

In his letter Gov. Strong recommends that the member banks transfer, at the time of making the deposit of their required reserves, as large a part of their optional reserves as may be convenient, thus avoiding the trouble of making daily transfers to and from the account as a result of the fluctuating deposits in the member banks. Members may draw at pleasure against their excess and optional reserve balances.

The large member banks in this city, it is announced, have signified their intention of transferring their reserves in gold coin or gold certificates of large denomination from their own vaults and all members are urged to deposit large certificates out of their vault reserves.

Every effort is being made by the Federal Reserve Board and by the Directors of the bank here to have the banks make their payments in gold or gold certificates. The legal requirement merely for the deposit of lawful money and the Reserve Bank may also receive, up to 50 per cent. of the amount payable, commercial paper eligible for rediscount under the regulations issued by the Federal Reserve Board on Wednesday last.

The Board has not yet passed on the discount rates proposed by the governors of the twelve Reserve Banks, so that in the circular letter sent out last night it was impossible to name the terms on which commercial paper would be received in payment of reserve deposits. The letter said that the Reserve Bank would receive from them as reserve eligible paper to an amount to be determined later. Member banks desiring to rediscount paper as a part of their reserve deposits were asked to indicate the probable amounts desired when transmitting their cash deposits. A circular on this subject, it was stated, announcing the rate of discount established and the nature of the indorsements required, would be issued soon.

For handling the payments to begin on Monday the five men banks have been called on to lend fifty experts from their forces. About forty of these will be used at the Federal Reserve Bank to take in the money sent there and ten at the Clearing House to receive the large payments from city banks. They will be kept busy later transferring to the Clearing House the money turned in at the bank.

DISCOUNT RATES TO BE HIGH.

Reserve Board Will Act Today — Stock Exchange Reopening to Wait.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—The Federal Reserve Board is to take up tomorrow morning the question of discount rates for the twelve regional banks, although announcement of the terms decided upon may not be made until the opening of the banks on Monday. The board was in session until a late hour this evening, going over the final details. The initial rates will be high.

Although Secretary McAdoo has made no official statement on the subject, it was learned today that he had no intention of disturbing at this time the $78,000,000 of Government funds on deposit with national banks. Under the Federal Reserve act the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to transfer these deposits to the regional banks. Mr. McAdoo has no wish to add to possible difficulties which may attend the inauguration of the new system and so will not withdraw Government funds until it is certain that their loss will not embarrass the holders.

At its meeting this morning the board acted favorably upon applications of Charleston, S. C., and Birmingham, Ala., to be made reserve cities. The former was designated as a reserve city in the National Bank act. At the same time the board rejected similar applications from Tulsa, Okla., with 18,000 inhabitants, and Joplin, Mo., with 32,000. It has been decided that in future no cities with less than 100,000 population will be approved as reserve cities.

Discussion of the loan situation in New York City, with respect to the possible reopening of the Stock Exchange, has been tacitly put over until the problems connected with the opening and requiring immediate action have been cleared up. The board understands that under no circumstances will London attempt to resume dealings on its Exchanges until after Jan. 1, and unofficially it is the feeling here that if the London Exchange, with practically all of the facilities of the British Government back of it, cannot see its way to reopening this year, it is out of the question to think of resuming business in New York.

Loans on Stock Exchange collateral and other securities made by members of the New York Clearing House have been greatly reduced since July 30. The total still outstanding is understood to be about $200,000,000. This figure takes account of large sums loaned to firms not members of the Stock Exchange but holding stocks and bonds which were used for collateral for loans. The sentiment at the Treasury is that to reopen the New York Stock Exchange soon might invite disaster. An understanding has not yet been reached with Sir George Paish for common action by bankers and brokers in New York and London to avoid a shock from liquidation of European holdings of American securities when trading is resumed.

Retires More Emergency Cash.

The National Bank of Commerce retired at the Sub-Treasury yesterday $3,200,000 of emergency currency, making $11,200,000 that it has retired altogether. The total retirements by New York banks up to date aggregate $47,291,370 out of about $133,000,000 taken out by them.

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

Exporters took advantage of an early break in wheat yesterday to buy heavily again, although transactions were not equal to those of Wednesday, when about 2,000,000 bushels were taken. The business worked yesterday probably aggregated a little in excess of a million bushels. It was stimulated by the fact that prices broke a cent a bushel during the forenoon from the effects of liquidation and a lack of new outside support. The cash market here was firm, being quoted nominally c. i. f. Buffalo basis as follows: No. 2 red, $1.17¼; No. 2 hard Winter, $1.17¼; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.19½, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.23½.

The second day's trading in wheat on the Consolidated Exchange was even more active than the first day, when upward of half a million bushels for May delivery were said to have been negotiated. The attendance of brokers was again large. Opening at $1.31 1-16, May sold as high as $1.31⅜, as low as $1.30 3-16, and closed at $1.31⅛@$1.31⅛ bid.

CORN.

The movement in corn was very similar to that in wheat, as the market advanced half a cent early, lost it, and then sold up practically a cent a bushel in the afternoon on reports that 200,000 bushels had been taken for export. Final prices of the day were ⅝c to ¾c net higher and practically top. No. 2 yellow corn in the local market was quoted at 85¾c, cost, insurance, and freight, to arrive, and Argentine prime at 78c, nominal, delivered.

OATS.

The market for oats opened steady, and after a decline to the previous night's level advanced about ⅝c per bushel, closing at top and ½c net higher. Here cash oats were steady and unchanged as follows: Standard, 54@54½c; No. 2 white, 54½@55c; No. 3 white, 53¾@54c; No. 4 white, 53@53½c; fancy clipped white, 55½@56½c; ordinary clipped white, 53½@54½c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

After opening higher on predictions of a smaller hog movement next week and commission house buying, provisions sagged off at midday in sympathy with grain. Buying was again resumed in the last hour, and prices responded quickly, sharing the late strength in grain, with final quotations top for the day. The arrivals at Kansas City were 18,000 hogs and at Omaha 9,100.

COTTONSEED OIL.

At the outset cottonseed oil showed considerable heaviness and declined quite sharply because of January liquidation and a small demand from consumers. At the lowest levels shorts bought freely, however, and as crude offerings did not develop the volume expected the market gradually hardened, becoming quite firm near the close, with final prices generally but 1 to 2 points net lower.

COTTON.

A special meeting of the Board of Managers of the New York Cotton Exchange will be held at 10:30 o'clock this morning to consider the date of reopening. It had been generally expected that the date would be fixed during the day, and the floor of the Exchange was well filled with members waiting for the official announcement, but there appeared to be some delay in hearing from the attorneys who have been in charge of the legal phases of the agreements with the banking interests which are financing the cotton operations, and it was not until late in the day that the announcement of the special meeting was made.

The removal of the restriction against new selling in the Liverpool market was followed by a decline of 6½ points in May-June contracts there this morning, or by within half a point of fixed minimum of 4.25d.

The market, as officially quoted at New Orleans, was 1-16c lower, but other markets were unchanged to 5-16c higher, with Houston relatively firm, while both Memphis and New Orleans reported a good spot demand, particularly for the lower grades, which are said to be of good color and staple this season.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was again more or less unsettled. The easier tendency of war risks seemed in favor of importers, but so far as could be learned there was very little business with Brazil, while the local spot market remained quiet and without quotable change at 6¾c for Rio 7s and 10¼c for Santos 4s.

Sales of 30,500 bags were reported through the voluntary committee, including exchanges of December to July at 130 points. December contracts closed at 5.40 to 5.45c, March at 5.75 to 5.80c, May at 5.95 to 5.99c, and July at 6.70 to 6.75c. Liquidation of the old interest has become a little more active with the approach of the first December day, and local traders are somewhat more optimistic with reference to the possibility of reopening the market.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER.—Receipts yesterday, 5,445 pkgs. Demand less active and the market is very much quieter for all grades of fresh creamery. Prices without quotable change, but tone barely steady. Held creamery well sustained. Process and ladles firm. Packing stock doing better. EGGS.—Receipts yesterday, 3,357 cases. The general market is quieter. There is still a shortage of uniformly fancy new laid eggs and these are nominally firm, with prompt sale for the few lots obtainable at firm prices. The range of sales shows no quotable change. Storage eggs are not moving at all freely, and the tone is somewhat unsettled. Fresh gathered, extra fine, per dozen, 39@41c; extra firsts, 37@38c; firsts, 34@36c; seconds, 27@32c; fresh and Fall gathered, undergrades, 23@26c; fresh gathered, dirties, No. 1, 28@29c; No. 2 and poorer, 18@22c; checks, good to prime, dry, 21@22c; undergrades, 14@20c; refrigerator, special marks, fancy, charges paid, 26c; firsts, charges paid, 24½@25½c; seconds, charges paid, 23@24c; undergrades, 18@22c; State, Pennsylvania, and near by, henery whites, fancy large, new laid, 55c; defective, 40@52c; gathered whites, as to size and quality, 35@52c; Western, gathered whites, 32@48c; State, Pennsylvania, and near by, henery browns, 40@42c; gathered brown and mixed colors, 36@40c; near by, refrigerator, whites, 21@32c.

NEW COTTON RULES OPPOSED BY BROKERS

Anti-Future Regulations Will Greatly Hamper Trading, They Declare at Hearing.

MAY PUT OFF REOPENING

Expected That Some Changes Will Be Made, But Law Will Prevent Hedging Through Liverpool.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Representatives of the New York Cotton Exchange offered numerous objections here today to the proposed regulations of cotton trading as drawn up by the Treasury and Agricultural Departments under the provisions of the Cotton Futures act of Aug. 18. A hearing for the benefit of producers, merchants, and bankers was held at the New National Museum by W. G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, and D. F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture, both of whom were present at the opening. The attendance of persons who will be affected by the regulations was much smaller than had been expected, only three brokers taking part in the discussion, although 12,000 notices were sent to the trade.

Robert C. Cairns of Gwathmey & Co., A. B. Gwathmey, Jr., and E. K. Cone, President of the New York Cotton Exchange criticised a number of the proposed regulations, and asked for an interpretation of a number of others. It was evident that the brokers did not understand the law and that counsel for the departments did not understand the practices of the Cotton Exchanges, so that little apparent progress was made in clearing up the points at issue. The cotton men promised to reduce their objections to writing after further discussion of the law with fellow-brokers, and it is probable that a number of changes will be made.

President Cone said during the recess that fully 350,00 bales of cotton were now under contract with Liverpool, and that these could not be liquidated under the prevailing conditions. He and his fellow-brokers were apprehensive as to the effect of the new law on these contracts in the event of the existing situation being prolonged beyond Feb. 18, 1915, when the new law becomes operative.

It was the opinion of the representatives of the two departments that where the actual contracts as made were disposed of then, prohibitive tax of 2 cents a pound called for would not be imposed, but that where the cotton was resold under new contracts the penalty would be exacted unless the seller made a contract in accordance with the requirements of the law. Most of this cotton was originally bought for January-February delivery and changed to May-June when the war broke out.

President Cone said that he expected the Cotton Exchange to be reopened for business within a few days, but that the terms of the new law were going to make trading difficult and would result in greatly reducing the volume of dealings.

Mr. Cairns, who spoke for the brokers, objected to requirements of contracts which would be exempt from the tax specifying that each bale would be deemed to weigh 500 pounds where weight was not given in the contract and providing that all tenders of cotton should give the full number of bales involved. He said that contracts could not specify weight, and that the old form of contract called for 50,000 pounds, meaning about 100 bales.

He also offered strong objections to the provision calling for the rejection of tinged, gin-cut, or water-packed cotton. Mr. Cairns said that at certain seasons it is almost impossible to prevent bailing of some damp and gin-cut cotton. He proposed as an alternative ruling that such cotton be accepted, but valued one grade lower. He also asked that contracts specifying weight allow for a variation of 1 per cent., as is the present custom.

Imposition of the penalty of 2 cents a pound on orders transmitted by a person within the United States for future cotton and executed on a foreign Exchange was objected to by Mr. Cairns as absurd. He said that this provision obviously was designed to prevent any trading through Liverpool and that it would throw a heavy burden on the American Exchanges by prohibiting the existing custom of buying contracts here and hedging against them in Liverpool. He said that this regulation would depress the price of contracts in this country, since Liverpool could not be expected to make contracts under the terms of the American law. Counsel said that this provision was a part of the law and could not be changed by the regulations.

It was promised that the regulation requiring Boards of Trade and Exchanges to keep a record of all transactions for inspection by the Internal Revenue officers would be changed to read "members of Boards of Trade and Exchanges." The Department officials who drew the regulations were not aware that the Exchange was not a party to sales made on the floor.

"We desire to open the Exchange and to get matters in shape to open soon," said Mr. Cairns. "There are certain things in these regulations which will keep us closed for a long time unless they are straightened out."

DENY LEHIGH MONOPOLY.

Counsel for Railroad and Coal Companies Sum Up in U. S. Court.

Major W. F. Wheaton, counsel for the Lehigh Valley Railroad, summing up yesterday in the Federal District Court described as ridiculous the Government's contention that the railroad had intended to suppress competition by its purchase of the stock of the coal companies.

E. H. Boles, general solicitor of the Lehigh Valley, denied that the figures would permit of any accusation of monopoly. Moreover, the ownership by the railroad of the stock of the coal company and Coxe Brothers & Co. did not violate the Sherman law, as they were not engaged in interstate commerce, but sold their coal at the mines. He asserted that the Coal Sales Company had seven healthy competitors and that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company had keen competition in its anthracite trade from other companies.

Judge Hough took the papers and reserved decision.

TO HELP FRENCH BROKERS.

Bank of France Offers to Release 40 Per Cent. of Contango Money.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—It is now officially announced that the Banque de France has made an offer to the agents de change to advance a sufficient amount to release 40 per cent. of the contango money locked up by reason of the postponed July settlement.

The arrangement is inspired by that made by the Bank of England with the Stock Exchange, except that the French bank asks for more guarantees than is the case in London.

Its offer has none the less been accepted in principle by the Bourse executive, but will not become effective until ratified by a special meeting of the Chambre Syndicale des Agents de Change.

The Coulisse (curb market) has authorized its Managing Committee to convert the whole of its guarantee funds, amounting to 11,000,000 francs in all, into the national defense bonds now being issued by the French Government.

AUSTRIA TO PAY OFF BONDS.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—Dispatches from the Austro-Hungarian Foreign Office to the embassy here today denied a rumor that a renewal of the Government's 6 per cent. treasury bonds was being made. The Foreign Secretary cabled, in part:

"Information from New York that the Austro-Hungarian Government is negotiating with banks in that city relative to a renewal of the 6 per cent. treasury bonds for $12,500,000 is absolutely false, as reimbursements of the second installment, payable Jan. 1, 1915, is provided."

VENICE, Nov. 12.—Extraordinary efforts are being put forward in Austria-Hungary to secure the successful flotation of new war loans. The Emperor himself has taken the unprecedented step of ordering a large sum of money from his private purse invested equally in the Austrian and Hungarian issues. Convents and other ecclesiastical foundations have agreed to take large allotments, and several municipalities are doing the same.

The agricultural associations in Hungary have united in an appeal to the agrarians to return some part of the great profits they have made from the war by participation in the new loans.

Meanwhile the general commercial situation is reported to be steadily growing worse and the newspapers are publishing daily lists of firms which have been placed under official supervision.

Austrian manufacturers are finding increasing difficulty in procuring raw materials from abroad. Neutral States constantly are restricting the classes of wares permitted to be exported.

Rumania has just added petroleum to the prohibited list. This creates a serious situation for Austria, since the Russian occupation of Galicia has interfered greatly with the working of the oil wells there. For weeks past it has been virtually impossible for private persons to obtain gasoline for automobiles.

The cholera cases are steadily increasing in number in Vienna. On Monday twenty-nine cases were reported.

CIGARETTE DUTIES

Importers of cigarettes who recently put into operation a new plan to secure lower duty on these articles are meeting with a rather discouraging reception at the hands of the local customs officials. From information received here by special agents of the Treasury Department abroad it appears that handlers of cigarettes in England have been importing large quantities of the goods from Turkey and other countries and entering them in bond in order to avoid the British duties.

The cigarettes have then been shipped from points in the United Kingdom to this country, invoiced at the market prices prevailing in Turkey, for example. As the market value for the cigarettes is higher in England than in Turkey, importers here for some time have been paying duty on the Turkish valuations. In addition the handlers of the goods in the British Isles saved the payment of British duties by entering the cigarettes in bond and then withdrawing them for exportation to this country.

Acting on information from abroad, the local customs authorities are now demanding that cigarettes brought to the United Kingdom, entered in bond, and then re-exported to the United States pay duty on the basis of the British market value rather than the Turkish price. Collector Malone is now exacting duty on the British market price, with the result that many appeals for reappraisement are being made by importers to the Board of United States General Appraisers.

One of these cases decided yesterday by Judge McClelland, sitting as a single General Appraiser, involved cigarettes shipped to importers in this city by Duncan & Co., Glasgow. The cigarettes, although of Turkish origin, were withdrawn from British bonded warehouses. They were invoiced at 72 shillings 6 pence per 1,000. Collector Malone exacted duty on the British selling prices current at the time of exportation. At the conclusion of a hearing yesterday, Judge McClelland affirmed the action of the customs officials, and holds that the cigarettes are properly dutiable at a valuation of 90 shillings per 1,000 cigarettes.

COTTON LOAN FUND IS CALLED ILLEGAL

VIOLATES ANTI-TRUST LAW

Criticises Attorney General for Calling Plan Valid in Advance of Actual Litigation.

John R. Dos Passos, the eminent lawyer, has written an elaborate opinion as to the legality of the Cotton Loan Fund of $135,000,000. He reviews all the points and he concludes upon all grounds against its legality. The opinion is summarized as follows:

First—He asserts that the Government of the United States can have no direct interest in this subject under its Constitution and law until a question arises as to whether the plan is valid under the anti-trust laws, and that it is premature and unprecedented for the Executive and Attorney General to give their views in advance of any actual litigation.

Second—He claims that the fund which is to be administered under the direction of a Central Committee to be composed of the individual members of the Federal Reserve Board cannot be carried out; that the members of the Reserve Board have no right to enter into this business, being confined to their duties specially defined by the act creating them, it having been explicitly provided that the five members, (outside of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Controller,) "shall devote their entire time to the business of the Federal Reserve Board," and that an attempt to administer the affairs of a financial private copartnership in which the Government is not and cannot be interested—would constitute an abandonment of their legitimate functions. So far, therefore, as they are concerned the plan must be abandoned, the opinion says.

Third—He states that the purpose of the Cotton Loan Fund is to sustain the price of cotton and to keep it from the public, which is interested in buying cotton as cheaply as possible; that it withdraws so much cotton from the market and fixes the minimum price at 6 cents a pound, and, therefore, is contrary to the Anti-trust laws. He cites the case of Joint Traffic Association, where the subject involved was an agreement between thirty-one railroads, which formed an association among themselves, the paper establishing it being designated as a gentlemen's agreement, wherein it was specifically provided that the agreement should never be construed to permit the violation of the Interstate Commerce Law, and it was further provided that the managers should co-operate with the Interstate Commerce Commission to secure stability and uniformity in rates.

It was sought, by introducing the government officials in the plan, to overcome all objections—just as here an attempt is made to use the members of the Federal Reserve Board. The clothes of respectability cannot conceal fundamental legal defects, and the Supreme Court of the United States held the plan illegal. Mr. Dos Passos further asserts that this Cotton Fund scheme would probably be illegal at common law as constituting the engrossing of necessaries.

Fourth—He is of the opinion that no national bank can subscribe to this fund; that it is a financial copartnership with all the features arising from such an association, and that it is in direct conflict in effect from an attempt on the part of the national banks to subscribe for stock in a corporation, the Class A subscribers receiving on payment of a subscription a participation certificate, which is transferable on the books of the committee specifying the terms under which the "owner will be entitled to share in the distribution of the moneys realized from the loans made from the fund created."

The Supreme Court of the United States has frequently held that national banks have no powers except those expressly conferred upon them, and that their purchase of shares in corporations, and consequently a participation in a scheme by which they part with money of the stockholders in an enterprise which is purely speculative, is illegal and prohibited. Besides the capital would be subjected to national taxation. He concludes that the scheme is both visionary and prohibitive, and that it is incapable of practical execution on its present lines.

COTTON 'CHANGE ALL READY.

Governors Expected to Announce Reopening Date Today.

All but minor details have been arranged for reopening the Cotton Exchange. Many members were on the floor yesterday, expecting announcement of the date, but the Governors did not act. It is believed that next Monday will be the day, as has been predicted for a fortnight, and that the Governing Committee will act today.

President Cone was in Washington yesterday and E. M. Weld, Chairman of the Conference Committee, was at home with a cold. Their absence was probably the reason the Governors did not meet.

Mr. Cone and a committee of members attended a conference of cotton men with the secretary of agriculture over the application of the new futures law to trading on the Exchanges.

It has been decided to put into operation the Government standards for grading cotton immediately in place of those previously employed.

As reflected by the market for Cotton Exchange seats the cotton business appeared yesterday to be looking up. The bid price rose from $7,500, a figure announced earlier in the week, to $8,000 with no offerings. The last sale was at $7,000 made last month.

Austria Wants Sumatra Tobacco.

The local tobacco importing trade that handles Sumatra stock is about to feel the effects of what war has not done. With this tobacco in none too large supply and the Amsterdam Fall inscriptions indefinitely postponed, there has been a great rush here on the part of the cigar manufacturers to cover themselves on this wrapper and similar activity on the part of the importers in an endeavor to buy more to sell to their customers. With the leading European markets disrupted by the war, there was a feeling that the selling would be more or less smooth for American importers who were trying to replenish their holdings, but a report has reached this city that the Austrian Regie, or Government tobacco syndicate, has entered the market for a large amount of Sumatra leaf, which will necessarily diminish the amount available for purchase for the American market. The failure of the war to kill the Austrian demand for this tobacco came as a big surprise to importers here.

Millinery Trade is Quiet.

There is not much doing in the local millinery trade at the moment, aside from a heavy run on eighteen-inch velvets in sand and putty shades. These goods are being made up into shapes for wear with the popular garments of the same shades. There is also some demand for red velvet in the same width. Large sailors are leading in the small business that is being done in shapes, and there is little prospect for a call for small shapes again until the weather gets cold enough to make fur hats the vogue. Just now there is no call at all for fur headgear, and even the demand for fur trimmings has fallen off. Feathers are also quiet, but there is quite a demand reported for boutonnière trimmings. Metal-edged ribbons are favored to some extent, but they are by no means as popular as they were earlier in the season.

BUSINESS WORLD

COMMERCIAL PAPER.

Yesterday 5¼@6¾ per cent. for the best names Wednesday 5¼@6¾.
The quotation is for six months' paper.

Some Queer Names for Things.

Dealers in dressmakers' supplies are not far removed this season, at least so far as names are concerned, from dealers in building supplies and fruits. Sand and putty silks are in great demand, and not far behind is the call for a shade known as graphite. To some the shade that was once biscuit is now plaster, which leaves cement about the only neglected item in the list. Also, to honor the fruit business, there is a shade of purple called grape, while others bear the name of apple green and plum. There is some talk, too, of changing tête de negre (or "nigger" brown) to chocolate, which ought to be encouraging to makers of sweets.

Holding Buyers to Orders.

Varied excuses are offered to dress-goods factors by buyers to explain a cancellation, but the selling agents are not disposed to accept them. In some cases, when the sellers insist on shipping goods after they have been canceled, the buyer will write a letter stating that the merchandise is delivered at the risk of the mill. This statement is made in the hope that the mill agent will be afraid to ship the goods because of the possibility of his customer failing. The hope, however, has not much chance of being realised under present circumstances, as the sellers believe that no house, unless able to ride out the storm, would thus set rumors afloat concerning its financial responsibility.

The Raw Silk Summary.

Reports from the Italian raw-silk market show it to be indifferent, there being very little demand for such silks at present. Prices quoted by the different reelers are far apart, producers of the better grades of silks being inclined to follow the decline with reluctance. The Yokohama market is reported quiet but steady in cables to H. L. Gwalter & Co. of this city. Sales for the week there amounted to 3,600 bales, stocks standing at 25,000 bales. Canton continues dull and featureless. Shanghai reports an improved demand for steam filatures, prices for which have advanced during the week. Tsatlee sorts are quiet but steady, and there is little life to the demand for tussahs. The sentiment is better in this market, and there has been a fairly active business this week in steam filatures. On the whole, prices are showing greater steadiness than for some time past.

First Uniform Cloth Order.

The first contract for uniform cloth has been placed in this market. The material is to be made up for the French Government and delivery will be made by the middle of next month. It is understood the amount involved is not very large, and the mills which have obtained the order have only part of their looms engaged on this business. The reason assigned for the action of the French Government in placing the order here instead of in England, where the mills are reported to be perfectly capable of taking care of such business, is said to have been the need of getting the goods quickly. Even the mills that received the contract are not, it is said, anticipating much further in this line because of the big advantage the English mills have both in point of number and low labor cost. A contract for army blankets is being completed by the mills which have received the order for uniform cloth.

Some Inquiry for Tartans.

A revival of interest in tartans is noted in the men's wear primary market. While the amount of this business in the aggregate is not large, it may be said to feature a demand which is otherwise very colorless and dull. Gray mixtures are thought well of for Spring, and it is predicted that further development may be expected along this line. In initial business for the Spring there is very little being done, and the effect of the popularity accorded beach cloths is beginning to be noted. Some clothiers who do a large business in the South report that, with very little loss or inconvenience, they could dispense entirely with the woolen end of their lines. The cold weather has induced a slight demand for overcoatings on the balmacaan order, but on the whole the market is very inactive.

Expect to Get Paris Models.

There is a feeling among wholesalers of millinery in this city that they stand a better chance of getting Spring models from Paris than do the makers of ready-to-wear garments. In fact, some of them anticipate no trouble at all in getting models and trimmings through. The only wonderment is regarding the kind and amount of colored materials and trimmings the French factories will be able to turn out, for it is said that there is practically the same trouble in getting adequate supplies of dyestuffs there that there has been here of late. In addition to this, the call made on the supply of labor short in those dyehouses which are not suffering from a lack of coloring materials. Some of the larger wholesale buyers are now on their way to Paris, and, barring a German siege, they expect to bring back a good complement of new French ideas in headgear.

Twenty Uniforms for Every Man.

In his search for foreign army contracts the selling agent for a woolen mill was told by an ex-Austrian army officer that Germany before the war started, had on hand twenty uniforms for every man which she was to place in the field in event of war. From this statement it would appear that the chances of getting an order from Germany are very slim. The mill representatives are beginning to think that they stand about an equal chance of obtaining business from the other belligerents, while none is said in Boston the first week in December. The object of the meeting is to secure such information and advice as will be helpful at this time to New England trade interests. A luncheon will be given, following which there will be addresses by several well-posted speakers, including the following: Edward E. Pratt, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; William A. Read, Latin American trade expert of the Pan-American Union; V. Gonzales of the National Association of Manufacturers, and W. S. Kies, head of the foreign department of the National City Bank. It is planned to follow the addresses with a general discussion of the South American trade situation.

Printcloths a Little Easier.

There was a fair demand for printcloths here yesterday, and a slight easiness developed in the prices asked for some constructions. There was a good demand for 39-inch 72-76s for near-by delivery at 5 cents, and some call for 38½-inch 60-48s for similar delivery at 3¾ cents. On 38½-inch 64-60s a large business was done at 3¾ cents for delivery through the remainder of this year and the first half of next, the goods coming from both the Eastern and Southern mills. Heavy buying of sheetings by the bag manufacturers was the feature of gray goods trading, however, they having taken several million yards yesterday for delivery during the first six months of next year. The prices at which the goods moved were on the basis of recent quotations. Closing printcloth prices were:

38½-in., 64-64s	3 15-16c	27-inch, 64-60s	2 9-16c

BUSINESS OUTLOOK BRIGHT TO BANKERS

$250,000,000 STOCK POOL

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—Optimism over the outlook in the financial, industrial and commercial world was expressed in reports and addresses at the opening session today of the convention of the Investment Bankers' Association of America. Despite the European war and the hardships thereby caused to American industry and finance, several of the speakers declared that the future held unusual promise, and that the low ebb of depression was past.

A proposal by the President of the organization, Charles B. Caldwell of Chicago, that a $250,000,000 pool be formed to take over the stocks and bonds that might be thrown on the market by panic-stricken investors caused considerable informal discussion, but action by the convention was deferred. Mr. Caldwell suggested that the pool be launched in connection with the opening of the Stock Exchanges throughout the country, and that it be subscribed by bankers and investors from coast to coast and managed by five or seven bankers selected from Boston, New York, Chicago, and Philadelphia. He declared that nothing would so reassure the country at large, secure the immediate opening of the Stock Exchanges, and aid in reviving confidence as the formation of such a pool.

"What could be more reassuring," said Mr. Caldwell, "than to have American bankers band together to purchase all American securities sent to us for sale from European investors, which because of the war would certainly follow the opening of our Stock Exchanges? Unless some such pool is formed our Stock Exchanges cannot open except in a limited way, and will do no good to the country at large for months to come."

A Brake on Progress.

"As long as the Stock Exchanges are closed capital issues and credits are held up and securities cannot be marketed. Cities, counties, States, and corporations are compelled to stop all improvements and additions, production is curtailed, and it all comes back on the workingman, whose services are no longer in demand. This curtailment of labor stops the usual wide distribution of money and hits hard at both the wholesale and retail merchant."

Discussing the new Federal Reserve Banking law, Rudolph Diamant of New York declared that the organization of the new system would redound to the benefit of the public at large and also to the investment bankers. He indorsed the securities pool as suggested by Mr. Caldwell, and added that "if we could buy up at bargain prices a large amount of American securities from foreign investors it would be a fine thing for this country."

Taking up the Reserve Banking law, Mr. Diamant said:

"It will have a tendency to stabilize interest rates and will go a long way toward eliminating serious credit disturbances. It will place the legitimate operations of the commercial, industrial, and agricultural communities on a better and safer basis, less subject than heretofore to disturbances caused by factors outside of their respective spheres of activity and of their own making."

John E. Oldham of Boston spoke on the proposed increase in railroad rates and expressed the opinion that a readjustment was necessary in order that the roads might be able to maintain their financial stability.

Sir George Paish of London, who was expected to speak at one of the sessions today, failed to arrive. He sent word that he had been unavoidably delayed, but hoped to be here tomorrow.

The Equipment Trust Problem.

In its report the committee appointed to inquire into equipment trusts and railroad bonds as investments said that the greatest evil in connection with equipment trusts is neglect of investigation and oversight on the part of bankers themselves.

"If our members will make themselves familiar with what provisions should be included in a properly drawn indenture securing equipment trusts," said the report; "if they will refuse to handle equipments unless the indenture be properly drawn, and if they will continue to guard their clients' interests regularly and systematically after they have purchased the issue by seeing to it that both the trustee and the railway company live up to the terms of the agreement, then they will make it difficult for many of the evils to exist which are now confronting the investment bankers."

The value of the collateral under any loan and the maintenance of the value of such collateral, the report added, can be safeguarded by the terms of the indenture and by establishing through the pressure of well-directed public opinion an active oversight by the trustee of the methods pursued by the railway company.

Some trust companies, it was stated in the report, accept trusteeships under indentures which are approved as to their legality but which, if the truth were known, are not altogether satisfactory. This is one of the evils the committee has set about to remedy.

PREDICT A TRADE REVIVAL.

Delegates to Municipal Utilities Conference Generally Optimistic.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 12.—Five hundred Mayors and other city officials of the United States and Canada are in this city to attend the Municipal Utilities Conference which opens tomorrow. Financiers, theorists from the leading American universities, and officials of Public Utilities Commissions and corporations also will attend.

The papers tomorrow will be devoted to the practical phases of utility problems. Delos F. Wilcox, a franchise expert of New York; Nathaniel T. Guernsey, general counsel of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, and Ray Palmer, Commissioner of Gas and Electricity of Chicago, will be among the speakers. The problem of interlocking Directorates in public utilities corporations will be analyzed by Louis Brandeis of Boston, counsel to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Delegates to the conference brought news of a trade revival throughout the entire country, declaring that the United States was on the verge of an unprecedented era of industrial activity. New England delegates said that there had been a momentary check to certain lines of industry, but that on all sides were indications of a quick recovery. The silk and woolen mills particularly are operating full time.

"Business is picking up. There are signs of improvement on every hand," he said.

Delegates from some sections said there had been no depression at all. This was particularly true of Western visitors.

CORONER ADMITS RELEASING SLAYER

Feinberg Did Not Call a Jury or Witnesses in Homicide Case Against Gruber's Client.

LAWYER WAS HIS PATIENT

Commissioner of Accounts Shows That Whitman Subsequently Convicted Heineman.

In an effort to establish that, in some instances at least, persons guilty of homicide or manslaughter had as little to fear because of investigations made by a Coroner as those guilty of infanticide, Commissioner of Accounts Wallstein questioned Coroner Israel L. Feinberg yesterday concerning his action in January, 1910, in releasing William Heineman, who had been detained on the suspicion that he shot and killed Robert Dooley. It was shown that Dr. Feinberg did not summon a jury in this case and that he did not take the testimony of any witnesses. The District Attorney had Heineman indicted, and later he was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree. The Court of Appeals ordered a new trial, but simply on the ground that the trial court had excluded from consideration by the jury the charge of manslaughter in the second degree.

The Coroner was questioned about the testimony given by Dr. George B. Ewing on Wednesday, who said that, so far as the Coroners' office was concerned, infanticide could be committed with impunity in New York. The Coroner asserted that he believed "infantile convulsions" was sufficiently definite to cover death certificates in the case of infants.

Blames Police and Prosecutor.

"If infanticide occurs as often as you say it does, I believe the Police Department and the District Attorney's office should be indicted," said Dr. Feinberg.

Mr. Wallstein dropped the question of infanticide then and continued with the Heineman case. He brought out that, although another Coroner was on duty at the time of the shooting, Coroner Feinberg was notified by a physician at the Harlem Hospital and took up the case. He produced other irregularities in the handling of the case, which the Coroner explained probably were due to the fact that he was new in office.

In considering the inquest in the Heineman case, which was held on Jan. 13, 1910, Mr. Wallstein obtained from Dr. Feinberg the statement that he had not summoned a jury and had not called any of the witnesses, six in number, who were known to the police. Dr. Feinberg asserted that Patrolman Terhune, who had conferred with him on the case, had said that there were no witnesses, but he admitted that he had made no effort to obtain information at the Fortieth Precinct Police Station, although he had been there before the inquest. The defendant, Heineman, was the only person from whom testimony was taken at the inquest, and upon its conclusion he was discharged.

The name of Abraham Gruber was brought into the inquiry. When Mr. Wallstein asked Coroner Feinberg if Mr. Gruber did not appear for the defendant, Dr. Feinberg said that he did. He said that he had treated Mr. Gruber professionally at Saratoga in 1910, but had not attended him before that time. It was shown also that Dr. Feinberg had been called upon to testify before the Bar Association in connection with conflicting statements which had been made in the Heineman case. Patrolman Terhune had testified at Heineman's trial that he was not called as a witness at the inquest, and Dr. Feinberg had testified that he had been called, it was asserted.

Terhune, it was learned yesterday, had denied at a private hearing before Commissioner Wallstein the testimony given by Dr. Feinberg at the Heineman trial, that he, Terhune, had said that the witnesses for the inquest could not be found. Another case before Coroner Feinberg when he was investigating the Dooley shooting, and in which he called a jury for the inquest, was that of Antonio Laguste, charged with shooting his mother. Dr. Feinberg said he called a jury because he was directed to do so by the Assistant District Attorney who was assigned to the case. He said that J. Robert Rubin, then an Assistant District Attorney, who conferred with him on the Heineman case, had not asked for a jury.

At the opening of the inquiry Mr. Wallstein brought out the fact that in many cases the Coroners' inquisition papers were not filed with the District Attorney forthwith in possible criminal cases. When his inquiry was started, he said, many of these papers were filed, and it was found that sixty-three of them were over three years old, while many others were from a month to two and a half years old.

Police Report Crimes.

"In cases that are of a suspicious nature the police of the precinct are supposed to send reports to the District Attorney's office," Coroner Feinberg said. "This only applies to cases coming through police channels. In the other cases I do not know why the District Attorney was not notified."

Next, Coroner Feinberg was asked why Dr. John McAllister, who had passed no examinations for the work, and was not under Government control, had been permitted to act in many cases for Dr. Albert T. Weston, a Coroner's physician.

"I have reprimanded Dr. Weston, and there has been a diminution of this practice since last Summer," he replied. "Therefore I have not filed charges against Dr. Weston."

He testified that Dr. Weston had asked him to appoint Dr. McAllister, an official pathologist, without pay, but he had not deemed that wise. He did not approve of Dr. McAllister substituting, he said. It was brought out that Dr. Weston received $1,800 a year salary as a Federal employe.

Dr. Feinberg testified that he did not approve of the proposal reported to have been made at a meeting of the Coroners' Association to put the Coroners in the exempt class. He remembered, he said, that the proposal to assess employes to obtain a fund to fight legislation aimed against the Coroners was made at the same meeting, but did not remember whether he voted or not.

"You know such an assessment is illegal, don't you?" he was asked.

"I don't want to say as to that," was the reply.

Coroner Timothy Healy appeared at the hearing yesterday and promised to answer all questions. The inquiry was then adjourned until 10:30 o'clock next Tuesday morning, when Coroner Feinberg will be recalled.

SHOT HER CHILDREN'S PET.

Henry Lawrence Bell, well known in the Meadow Brook set, living at Palace Boulevard, Bayside, L. I., was served with papers yesterday in a suit for $500 brought by Mrs. Mary T. Merchant of Bayside, wife of Huntington W. Merchant, a lawyer of 165 Broadway, for shooting "Prince," a young collie owned by the Merchants.

Last Saturday, the collie, a seven months old puppy, came limping home with a bullet wound so serious that it was necessary to kill him. According to the complaint, the dog was shot by Mr. Bell, who is said to have suspected it of chasing some of his fancy chickens. Mrs. Merchant, who denies that "Prince" assailed any chickens, alleges that the dog was valuable in itself and doubly valuable because it was the pet and companion of her two children, Elisabeth, 12 years, and Livingston, 10.

HID ROBBER IN HER BEDROOM

The sound of her window, gently raised, aroused Mrs. Louisa Dodd of 70 Fort Greene Place, Brooklyn, just before dawn, and, after a moment of terrified silence she gasped out a question: "Who is there?"

"Lie still. Don't make a sound," came in a low voice from the darkness. "The police are after me. I've just done a job down the street. They'll give me ten years."

The woman lay quiet listening as the intruder tried two doors giving out of the room. Both were locked, and when she could stand the suspense no longer, Mrs. Dodd sprang up and turned on the light. The noise roused her husband, who had slept through the entrance of the man, and both saw a negro standing at one of the doors.

"Please don't call out," he begged, all the threat gone out of his voice. "They're after me. They'll send me away again. Please be still and let me stay here. I won't hurt you. I won't take a thing. Just let me stay here half an hour until the cops go away. Oh, if they get me now I'll go back to jail and I just got out."

Both Mr. and Mrs. Dodd, between fright and pity for the man's terror, kept quiet, and the negro went on to tell how he had been arrested as a youth for mischievous pranks, how later he had stolen, and how he had served sentences in Elmira and last in Sing Sing, whence he was discharged on last Oct. 16.

"I tried to get honest work," he said. "But as soon as they found I was an ex-convict everyone discharged me. Tonight I was starving. I broke into a house at 46 and got some jewelry. I was going out when I saw two policemen pass the house. Then I tried to get out the back way but I aroused a man sleeping there and we had a fight. At last I broke away and dived out the window to the extension and ran here."

The Dodds pitied the man so that they gave no alarm, and after half an hour he slipped out of the front door and made off.

That was Wednesday morning, and later in the day Walter Newman notified the police of his struggle with a burglar whom he described while Mr. and Mrs. Edward Edwards, with whom Newman lodges, told of the loss of $200 worth of jewelry.

Detective Donlon thought he recognized Alexander Moore, a young negro whom he had arrested three years ago for burglaries in the same neighborhood, and last night he and Detectives Daly and Mulraney went to Howard Avenue and Dean Street, the neighborhood of Moore's old home. Soon they saw him and arrested him.

They say he confessed at once that it was he who had broken into the Edwards and Dodd homes, and he was locked up in the Poplar Street Police Station. Instead of ten years Moore may get forty years in prison as an old offender.

BLAST HURLS OUT BODIES

FIREMEN WORK IN INFERNO

TWO PREVIOUS EXPLOSIONS

Proprietor, with Data He Obtained Abroad, Was Seeking Great German Formula.

The last of a series of experiments which were to reveal to him the secret of the great German chemists for the manufacture of aniline dyes caused an explosion followed by three others less severe, at 3:39 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the chemical and dye works of Dr. William Beckers, 107-113 Underhill Avenue, Brooklyn. The blast killed one man, wounded Dr. Beckers, injured twenty-five others, and caused such havoc that its horror left rescuers momentarily stunned and powerless.

For blocks about the factory, which is in a thickly settled part of the city, buildings were rocked on their foundations by the concussion and windows were shattered. Persons many yards away were jarred from their feet, and, from the factory, men with bodies torn and limbs twisted, were hurled through windows and doorways to be crashed senseless against the walls of tenements across the street.

Volcano of Flame.

Within the place carboys of chemicals burst, their contents intermingled, and there rose such flames as firemen seldom have to fight. The fire leaped the higher when water was thrown on it, so that there seemed no way to quench the volcano, which instantly spouted from between the trembling walls of the factory. It was more than an hour before the last man was carried from the place.

The Dead.

The Injured.

Beckers's Life in Peril.

Dr. Beckers, whose life was imperilled, had been working day and night on experiments based on data obtained in a recent visit to Germany, and already there had been two explosion and two slight fires in the works. He and the twenty-six men he employed realized the danger of the work on which they were engaged, but they realized, too, the reward which success would yield.

Since the war began aniline dyes have risen again and again in price, and almost every American chemist with a bent for research has been at work on an effort to solve Germany's secret. Dr. Beckers, a German by birth and the son of a noted chemist, had made no secret of his expectations. He himself was not at work in the laboratory when the explosion occurred. An instant before he had quit the main laboratory on the second floor, leaving Haaren alone there.

One other man was on this top floor of the two-story brick and stone building which composed the works. He was rescued, for every man in the building ultimately reached a hospital, but none knew which of the maimed and wounded

COLUMBIA EX-STUDENT CONFESSES BURGLARY

Walter E. Dunn Admits to Police That He Robbed Riverside Apartment.

The robbery of the apartment of Abraham Gusson, an underwear manufacturer, who lives at 270 Riverside Drive, was cleared, the police assert last night, when they arrested Walter E. Dunn, 23 years old, recently a Columbia student, who lives in the same apartment house with his father, H. A. Dunn, an expert accountant. Mr. Dunn was enraged when he heard the youth had confessed to the theft and said he believed his son insane. He said he would put him in an asylum.

The Gusson apartment, a window of which is across a narrow airshaft from young Dunn's room, is on the eleventh floor. According to Detectives Finan, Reilly, and McCarthy of the Fourth Branch, who made the arrest, young Dunn admitted that he took the hazardous step across the airshaft at 3 A. M. He took a mantel clock worth $250 and wrapped it in a woman's coat worth $35. Somebody in the house stirred and Dunn threw the bundle through the window of his room and did not proceed further with the burglary.

The police discovered the clock in a pawnshop at 116th Street and Eighth Avenue, and from the pawnbroker's description of the man who pawned it they got on the track of the young man. Six pawn tickets were found on him, calling for watches and stickpins, which had been pawned for small amounts. There have been many robberies in the Riverside Drive section recently, and the detectives questioned Dunn regarding them.

BAD ROCKEFELLER BARGAIN.

Cleveland Tax Board Informed That He Overpaid for Painting.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Nov. 13.—John D. Rockefeller, in affidavits to the Cuyahoga County Tax Complaint Board, today, admitted that he made a bad bargain, when at a public auction in New York, in 1887, he paid $15,250 for "The Disputed Boundary," a painting by Erstein Nichol. Now, according to Mr. Rockefeller's statements, the picture is not worth more than $5,000, and possibly only $2,500.

These affidavits were filed with the Complaint Board by Mr. Rockefeller in support of his contention that Cuyahoga County Deputy Tax Commissioners grossly exaggerated the value of his property.

Mr. Rockefeller is fighting three valuations put on his property in Ohio. They are the $25,000 valuation on "The Disputed Boundary," an item of $100,000 in Credits," and the $111,000,000 valuation against his stocks and bonds.

The value of the painting was based on the amount for which it was insured when it was removed to the Rockefeller estate in New York, in February last. The painting was insured for $75,000.

An affidavit from Mr. Rockefeller's Secretary said that he had the picture insured without having any idea as to its value.

Affidavits were submitted to the Complaint Board by Mr. Rockefeller to the effect that he had intended moving to his home in New York in October, 1913, but that the illness of Mrs. Rockefeller prevented this. He also referred to his Forest Hill estate, in Cleveland, as his "summer home," and New York City as "his home."

HABEAS CORPUS FOR LAMAR.

United States Court Grants Writ, Returnable This Morning.

David Lamar has decided to fight his arrest with habeas corpus proceedings. Louis B. Williams, his counsel, yesterday got from Judge Rudkin of the Federal District Court a writ, returnable this morning at 10:30 o'clock. Mr. Williams will question the right of District Attorney Marshall to hold Lamar on the first two indictments for the impersonation of Congressmen, since their legality has been taken before the United States Supreme Court. He will argue that Mr. Marshall has put himself in contempt of the Supreme Court.

The Federal authorities here have little fear that Judge Rudkin will accept Mr. Williams's view. In the Moyer, Hayward, and Pettibone case much the same question was decided against them.

If the writ of habeas corpus is dismissed District Attorney Marshall hopes to bring Lamar to trial next week.

DIES OF YEAR-OLD CAT BITE.

Girl Hydrophobia Victim Survived Disease Six Days.

Grace Polhemus, the thirteen-year-old Brooklyn girl victim of hydrophobia, due to a cat bite a year ago, died at 7:30 o'clock last night at her home, 372 Monroe Avenue. Early in the evening physicians reported that the disease had reached its final stage and that the last hope had long since vanished. She died without regaining consciousness, having been in a state of coma since early Thursday morning.

To the last efforts were made to prolong life in the vain hope that the little girl would survive. Although Dr. Theodore Vosseler, the physician in charge, did not believe she would live through the night, treatment with a serum recently discovered by a Philadelphia physician was continued. The serum was of some benefit in prolonging life, in Dr. Vosseler's opinion.

He was accompanied by Miss Margaret Wilson and Passed Assistant Surgeon Cary T. Grayson, U. S. N., the White House physician. The President expects to leave New York for Washington on Sunday.

The President is expected to reach the Pennsylvania Station at 6 o'clock this morning, and drive to Col. House's residence, 146 East Thirty-fifth Street.

TROOPS RECALLED FROM VERA CRUZ

Secretary Bryan Announces That Evacuation Has Been Set for Nov. 23.

DOUBLE GUARANTEES GIVEN

Priests and Nuns Coming Here —Which Faction Gets Port and $2,000,000 Not Stated.

SHOWS HANDS-OFF POLICY

And Washington's Desire to Avoid Any Interference with Civil War Now Starting.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Announcement was made by Secretary Bryan late tonight that the American troops now occupying Vera Cruz would be withdrawn from that place on Nov. 23. In his announcement the Secretary of State said that the assurances asked for by the United States with regard to the safety of persons remaining at Vera Cruz and the exemption from double taxation of those who had paid customs duties and other taxes to the United States had been furnished by Gen. Carranza, the nominal head of the Mexican Central Government, and the Aguascalientes Convention of the Mexican faction which claims to exercise sovereign authority over the republic.

The announcement of the Secretary of State was as follows:

Both Gen. Carranza and the convention at Aguascalientes, having given the assurances and guarantees we requested, it is the purpose of the Administration to withdraw the troops of the United States on Monday, Nov. 23. All the persons for whose personal safety this Government has made itself responsible have left the city. The priests and nuns who had taken refuge there, and for whose safety fears were entertained, are now on their way to this country.

The decision of the administration has an additional importance in that it indicates an intention to pursue the policy of hands-off in Mexico and let the warring factions in that country settle their troubles in their own way.

Prior to tonight's announcement it was understood from what was said in administration circles that President Wilson and his official advisers had determined not to adopt any radical measures to prevent the resumption of civil war in Mexico. The withdrawal of the American soldiers and marines from Vera Cruz is intended as a measure to place the United States Government in a position where it would be removed from the danger of becoming involved in the Mexican imbroglio through a possible attack by the forces of one or the other of the factions to retake Vera Cruz.

Delay in the decision to evacuate Vera Cruz was due to the failure of Gen. Carranza to furnish all the assurances and guarantees asked by the United States. Early this week he had shown a more cordial disposition toward the American suggestions by issuing decrees granting amnesty to those Mexicans who had taken employment under the United States military authorities at the captured port and relieving from double taxation those who had paid customs duties and local taxes to the Americans in charge at Vera Cruz.

But Gen. Carranza failed to furnish the guarantees asked for by the United States in regard to the safety of priests and nuns of alien citizenship and other foreigners residing in Vera Cruz, or those who had taken refuge there after the American occupation. The United States Government has overcome Carranza's unwillingness to furnish these guarantees by providing means for taking the priests and nuns away from Vera Cruz, and, as tonight's announcement makes known, they are now en route from that port to the United States.

In view of the assurances from both factions the Administration felt that unless it were determined to keep the American forces in Vera Cruz for the period of the new revolution it would be wise to withdraw them without delay.

Five army transports are now at Vera Cruz, and the War Department has made all preparations for embarking the forces under Gen. Funston's command, so there is no reason to suppose that all of them will not be able to sail for home ports on Nov. 23.

Gen. Funston's forces consist of about 3,500 troops of the regular army and two regiments of marines. The soldiers will be taken to ports nearest their regular stations and most of the marines will be landed at Philadelphia, where they will have a period of recreation before they are redistributed to naval stations and marine barracks in this country. The two regiments of marines have been on duty in Vera Cruz since April 21, the date of the American occupation of the city and port.

To whom the United States Government will surrender control of Vera Cruz was not made known tonight. This Government has never formally recognized Gen. Carranza as the head of the Central authority in Mexico. It has conducted negotiations with both him and those in charge of the convention at Aguascalientes, which indicates that it is disposed to recognize a dual responsibility for the conduct of Mexican affairs. The authority to which the United States will surrender control of Vera Cruz will receive from this Government the amount of customs duties and other taxes collected during the American occupation, which aggregates in the neighborhood of $2,000,000.

VILLA TO ATTACK TAMPICO.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Gen. Villa has ordered an attack on Tampico. His army is operating from the city of San Luis Potosi, which was occupied without firing a shot. Official dispatches received here today say the people received Villa with an ovation.

It will be several days before the Villa troops will be in position to begin fighting at Tampico, but they are already taking possession of the railroad leading there from San Luis Potosi.

TURKISH GARRISONS REPORTED IN REVOLT

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—A dispatch to the Daily News from Petrograd says:

"A message received here from Bucharest states that there has been a revolt among the Constantinople and Adrianople garrisons.

"Five German officers were killed by the exploding of a bomb at the Palace of Enver Bey, the Turkish War Minister and leader of the Young Turk Party. Enver Bey was not injured. A letter found nearby said that the bomb was intended for 'the man who sold Turkey to Germany.'"

DUKE OF CUMBERLAND MADE INSANE BY WAR

His Son, the Duke of Brunswick, Who Married the Kaiser's Daughter, Is Missing.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—Prince Ernst August, Duke of Cumberland, father of the Duke of Brunswick, the son-in-law of the Kaiser, has been discovered wandering about in a demented condition.

It is reported that the horrors of the war have affected the Prince's brain, and that he is now confined in an asylum.

The Duke of Brunswick has been reported missing for several weeks.

On Nov. 11 Le Petit Parisien printed a note to the effect that the Duke of Brunswick had been missing for a considerable time, and that official search among the dead and wounded Germans had failed to find him. It was said that the Duke had suddenly disappeared from his regiment, the Zeiten Hussars, on Oct. 20. One report had it that he had been taken prisoner. The Duchess was said to have gone to the headquarters of her father, the Kaiser, to make inquiries. The Duchess has a son only 8 months old.

BRITISH OFFICERS HELPING RUSSIA

Experienced Tacticians Sent to the Eastern Front to Sit in the Czar's War Councils.

The latest instance of co-operation between the Allies, according to a well-informed American, who got here yesterday from the war zone, is the sending of experienced British officers to Russia to assist in meeting developments in the eastern campaign.

Russia is strong in men but weak in tacticians—"book warriors." She discovered this quickly when pitted against von Hindenburg in East Prussia, and with the energy and enterprise which has characterized her in this war, she set about remedying it.

England, while none too well provided with officers for the fighting line and feeling the pinch keenly in supplying the many vacant places caused by her heavy casualty list, has a fair supply of experienced leaders who, while past the age limit permitting their inclusion in the active fighting contingent, are valuable in war councils. It is understood that it is from these that the officers sent to Russia were largely selected.

According to the information reaching here yesterday, they were dispatched to Russia late in October, and arrived at Russian headquarters last week.

WHO IS RESPONSIBLE FOR NORTH SEA MINES?

United States Begins an Inquiry Into a Menace to Neutral Commerce.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—An effort is being made by the United States Government to ascertain officially who is responsible for placing mines in the North Sea. This is one result of the representations made to the State Department by Denmark, Holland, Sweden, and Norway that their trade with the United States has been paralyzed by the placing of mines outside, in violation of The Hague treaties.

The United States was asked to join with these Governments in an effort to have the warring European Powers abate this danger to navigation. Whether it will do so or not is still under consideration, but meanwhile the inquiry is being made to determine the responsibility for the mine laying and to what Governments any representations on the subject should be made.

Counsellor Lansing inquired of the British Ambassador along these lines today, but the Ambassador said he did not have the information.

FRANCE'S WAR EXPENSE SHOWS A DECREASE

Average for November $6,000,000 a Day, a Decrease of a Million from October.

BORDEAUX, (via Paris,) Nov. 13.—The cost of the war to France for the month of November will probably be somewhat less than was the monthly average for August, September, and October.

A supplementary credit for extraordinary expenditures, authorized today, for November, amounts to 910,772,520 francs, ($182,154,504,) being a daily average of a little above 30,000,000 francs, ($6,000,000.) The daily average for the first three months of the war was 35,000,000 francs. ($7,000,000.)

The Government will dispense immediately 65,000,000 francs ($13,000,000) for repairs to the railroad system.

A total of 6,570,000 francs ($1,314,000) has been set aside for the relief of the unemployed.

GERMANS PUSH BRITISH LINE BACK, BUT FAIL IN ASSAULT UPON YPRES; RUSSIANS ADVANCING ON CRACOW

RUSSIANS TAKE 3 TOWNS

KAISER TO TRY NEW PLAN

POLAND THREATENED AGAIN

New Advance Considered a Diversion Intended to Save the Situation in East Prussia.

VIENNA, via London, Saturday, Nov. 14, 1:05 A. M.—It is officially announced that the Russians have occupied Tarnow, Jaslo, and Krosno, three towns in Galicia.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 13.—The following statement has been received by the Russian Commander-in-Chief's Staff:

"In Eastern Prussia the fighting continues in the region of Stalluponen for the possession of the outlets in the eastern chain of Masurian lakes.

"The fighting in the region of Soldau continues.

"The German offensive has been repulsed in the direction of Thorn, on both banks of the Vistula toward Rynin and Wloslawsk and further west. The enemy brought here a part of his troops from Lyck.

"In the Czenstochowo region the Germans are moving generally toward the Silesian frontier.

"In Galicia our offensive toward Dounajetz nowhere encountered resistance.

"We occupied Krosno and inflicted heavy losses on the Austrian rear guard.

"In the region of Sanok and Turka, where we stormed nightly a well fortified position, the Austrians on the morning of the 11th of November began retreating.

"In the Carpathians, on the road from Nadvorna to Marmarosziget, near Pasieczna, we defeated a body of hostile Sokols."

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—The Petrograd correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company sends the following:

"The Germans have concentrated strongly north of the Masurian Lakes (East Prussia) with heavy guns from Königsberg. Along the Soldau-Lyck line they have constructed heavily timbered, strongly armed blockhouses with barbed-wire defenses."

GERMANS FACE ABOUT.

Advancing on Poland Along a Forty-Mile Front.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to the London Morning Post.)—A big fight is evidently developing on the Polish frontier, on which the Germans, having drawn off some forces from the East Prussian front, are now advancing on a forty-mile front extending from Rypin southwest to the Vistula at Wloziawsk and also further westwards on the left bank of the Vistula. The Germans are also concentrating on the frontier in the neighborhood of Czenstochowo.

As I wrote a couple of days ago, some instructive strategic work is in progress on this front. The German object in turning back from the retreat and again advancing on Poland is plainly an attempt to relieve the pressure on East Prussia, where the Russians are making satisfactory progress.

As matters appear to stand today, the Russian and German troops seem to be sandwiched alternately from the Baltic to the Carpathians, fitting into each other like opposing cogwheels. Of course, no information is vouchsafed to the public as to where the main forces are concentrated, so it is impossible to form a reliable conception of exactly where the decisive battle will be joined.

According to my information, however, which is from the highest source, Russia regards the latest advance of the Germans as a diversion to save East Prussia, in which case its failure is a foregone conclusion.

The Germans having, as a matter of life or death, to make absolutely good both their extreme flanks in East Prussia from the Baltic and Cracow and from the Carpathians to Czenstochowo, are driving in upon the centre—a perfectly intelligible manoeuvre, but executed, in all probability, too late to save the situation. The Russian armies attacking these extreme wings are entirely independent in every particular, while the third armies holding the centre are equally independent of the other two.

The German Grand General Staff appears to have gone to pieces, owing to the series of defeats inflicted in Poland. Even the best that is conceivable to their imaginations, namely, a crushing victory over the centre, would fail to save their flanks, as the Germans in any case would find themselves within the jaws of a nutcracker, unable to

A fierce attack by the Prussian Guards against the Allies' line near Ypres, held by the British, is described by the British Press Bureau. The Prussians suffered severely, but succeeded in breaking the British line at three points, though they failed to gain further ground.

The Allies yesterday assumed the offensive at several points from the sea to the Lys, according to the French War Office announcement. Along the coast the Allies progressed as far as Bixschoote, and to the east of Ypres retook a village, which had been lost. An offensive movement by the Prussian Guards to the south of Ypres, was repulsed.

An unofficial dispatch states that the Allies have retaken Dixmude.

German Army Headquarters reports that the marines at Nieuport have inflicted heavy losses on the Allies, and have captured 700 prisoners. The attacks on Ypres are progressing favorably, it is said, another 1,100 prisoners being taken. French attacks to the east of Soissons have been repulsed, with heavy losses to the enemy.

A dispatch received in Berlin from Vienna admits that Central Galicia has been evacuated by the Austrians, and that the Russians have occupied Tarnow, Jasle, and Karno on the road to Cracow. East of Przemysl, however, the Russians are said to have been badly defeated.

An unofficial dispatch from Petrograd states that the Germans have been defeated beyond Kalisz, in East Prussia.

SAY TWO SUBMARINES FELL IN BRITISH TRAP

Report One German Raider Smashed on Sea Bottom— Another Sunk by Shells.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Standard publishes an interesting report that two enemy submarines recently have been lost. The report was passed by the official press bureau, although there has been no official announcement of either occurrence. The Standard's report follows:

"There is every reason to believe that two submarines which had been raiding in the Channel have been satisfactorily accounted for, according to information received from credible naval sources. One of these submarines had been carrying out a series of daring reconnoissances in the vicinity of Dover, and a patrolling cruiser reported shortly by this [illegible] the submarine, and naval men had reason to believe that the vessel was giving her towers [illegible] for lengthy periods.

"A very keen watch was kept, and due preparations were made. During one of the very calm days for which the end of October was notable, bubbles were seen rising at a certain point. Vessels went out and dredged over this area in a manner similar to mine sweeping, but using a powerful chain with explosives attached to it. This was dragged at a depth that would catch a submarine if she were lying there. After patrolling several times over the area there was a heavy explosion, followed shortly by large quantities of oil rising to the surface. Those who took part in the operation have no doubt that an enemy submarine was blown up.

"The second case concerned a German submarine that had been particularly troublesome to ships of the Dover flotilla that had been engaged in the bombardment of the Belgian coast. Seamen say that she was trapped into believing herself safe in an attack, and then was heavily shelled and sunk."

EXPECT NAVAL BATTLE OFF CHILEAN COAST

Leipzig and Dresden Appear at Valparaiso—English Fleet May Be Near.

VALPARAISO, Nov. 13.—The rumors that a Japanese fleet was seen off the Chilean coast appear now to have arisen through the fact that the German fleet, which is cruising near Valparaiso, had been mistaken for a Japanese squadron. The report that a Japanese squadron had been seen near Punta Carranza was officially denied today.

German naval officers deny absolutely that another action besides the battle which occurred between German and British warships on Nov. 1 has taken place off the Chilean coast. It is expected here that at any moment the English and German fleets will meet in another engagement.

The German cruisers Leipzig and Dresden steamed into Valparaiso harbor this morning and took on provisions. The vessels were delayed for a short time because of a protest made by English officials to the Chilean authorities. The German Minister made satisfactory arrangements with the Government and the warships continued to replenish their supplies.

The Chilean steamers Valdivia and Chiloe have thus far been unsuccessful in their search for the wrecks of the British cruisers Monmouth and Good Hope. The Valdivia and Chileo, however, will leave again for another extensive search.

The Chilean Minister of Foreign Affairs conferred with the Admiralty today relative to the maintenance of neutrality by this country.

LIMA, Peru, Nov. 13.—The watchman on the lighthouse at Port Corral, Chile, reports that on Nov. 11 he saw six cruisers steaming southward. His opinion was that they were German ships. He could not identify them definitely, but believed that the Scharnhorst, the Gneisenau, and possibly the Leipzig were among them. Port Corral is 475 miles south of Valparaiso.

ROARING GALE ADDS TO STORM OF WAR

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—In view of the reports, reaching here tonight, that the Allies have retaken Dixmude, which the Germans stormed on Tuesday, the following description of the conditions of fighting in the neighborhood of the town from a Daily Chronicle correspondent in northern France is of particular interest:

"It was one of those unpleasant surprises, which we have had before and shall have again, when Dixmude was retaken by the Germans. As a town, its possession is not of priceless value to the foe. They have retaken a pitiful ruin—many streets of skeleton houses filled with burnt-out ashes, a town hall with gaping holes in its walls, the [illegible] from the [illegible] a mass of [illegible] and de[illegible]

"The character of the fighting in Flanders does not permit of detailed description. There is nothing to conceal in the way of heroic charges by cavalry, dashing bayonet attacks, or rapid counter movements by infantry in mass.

"Such things for which the public imagination is eager are not happening just now. What is happening is a bowling gale shrieking across the dunes and swirling up the sands into blinding clouds and tearing across the flat marshlands as if all the invisible gods of the old ghost world were playing at racing in their chariots.

"In the trenches along the Yser men crouch down close to the moist mud to shelter themselves from the wind, which is harder to dodge than shrapnel shells. It lashes them with fierce cruelty.

"In spite of all the woolen comforters and knitted vests, made by women's hands at home, the wind finds its way through to the bones and marrow of the soldiers, so that they are numbed.

"At night it is an agony of cold, preventing sleep even if men could sleep while shells are searching for them with their cry of death.

"The gunners have dug pits for themselves, and when they cease fire for the time they crawl to the shelter, smoking through little outlets in damp blankets in which they have wrapped their heads and shoulders. They tie bundles of straw around their legs to keep out the cold and pack old newspapers inside their clothing as breastplates and swear to keep themselves warm, at least in imagination.

"The wind gave a new horror to this war. There was something devilish in its howling, in its long angry roar, as it came with enormous force across the flats and then hurled itself against the walls of a village or the roof of an old barn, as if nature herself had been seized with the fury of destruction.

"It was very hot, as well as very cold, at Oudecapelle and Nieucapelle and along the line to Styvekenskerke and Lombaertzyde. The German batteries were hard at work again, belching out an inexhaustible supply of shells. Over there the darkness was stabbed by red flashes, and the sky was zigzagged with forked lightning made by machinery.

"At intervals the whole horizon was illuminated by waves of vivid splendor which shone for some moments upon the blanched faces of men, who waited for death. High above the witchlike howlings of the wind furies came the shrilly whistling notes of the shells, like nightbirds rushing through the storm in search of prey.

"The guns of the allied batteries answered back, roar echoing roar. The thunderclaps of the wind were less loud than the concussions of gunfire and yet mingled with them and prolonged them and became a part of the storm of deadly sound increasing the horror of war. Through the darkness along the road infantry tramped toward the lines of trenches to relieve other regiments who had endured a spell in them.

"They bent their heads low, thrusting forward into the heart of the gale, which tore at the blue coats of these Frenchmen and plucked at their red trousers and slashed in their faces with cruel whips. Their sidearms jingled against the teeth of the wind, which tried to snatch at their bayonets and drag the rifles out of their grip.

BRITISH LINES ARE PIERCED

THEN HALTED BY DEFENDERS

London Gets a Report That the Allies Have Retaken Dixmude from the Germans.

NEW BATTLE NEAR COAST

LONDON, Nov. 13.—In the terrific attack by Prussian Guards Wednesday on the British forces defending Ypres the Kaiser's troops broke the opposing line at three points, although they were not able to penetrate to the town.

This fact became known with the issuance of the following communication by the Official Press Bureau at 1 o'clock tonight:

"A very severe attack against the portion of the line held by the First Army Corps before Ypres was delivered on the 11th by a Prussian Guard corps. The enemy made an especial effort on this occasion to break the line, which they hoped had been weakened already by attacks of infantry of the line. The facts, briefly, are as follows:

"Our troops were subjected to the heaviest bombardment that we have yet experienced from dawn for three hours. This was at once followed up by an assault in force, carried out by the First and Fourth Brigades of the Prussian Guard corps. It is understood that these picked troops had been brought up specially to act against us, in order to force their way through at points where previous efforts, made by infantry of the line, had failed.

"The attack was pressed with the greatest bravery and determination. Owing to the gallantry of our troops and their splendid resistance against great odds, the attempt to penetrate to Ypres was repulsed, but the weight of the enemy's advance enabled them to break through our lines at three points. They were, however, held back and prevented from gaining further ground.

"An immense loss had been inflicted on the Germans, 700 of their dead having been found on the ground behind our front trenches alone. The casualties suffered by them in advancing up to our line under direct and enfilladed fire must have been enormous. Our casualties also were heavy.

"The action of our troops on this as well as on previous occasions can never be praised too highly."

Ypres a Wedge into German Line.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—Gen. Joffre, the French commander, is alive to the great strategic importance of Ypres, and, according to an officer just returned from there, another severe attack in that district has been provided against. Although the artillery of the Germans is formidable, that of the Allies is still more so.

Ypres and the villages of Zonnebeke, Paschendaele, and Hollebeke, within a radius of six miles, constitute a dangerous wedge, thrust into the German line. While Ypres remains in the possession of the Allies, military strategists say that the German advance toward the coast by way of La Bassée and Bethune will be impossible, since their north flank would be threatened by the Allies.

If the Allies should succeed in advancing further from Ypres, according to these officers, the Germans would be compelled to abandon Lille and virtually give up hope of reaching the coast through Artois.

REPORT DIXMUDE RETAKEN.

Correspondents Say the Germans Have Been Driven Out of Town.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The correspondent of the Central News in the north of France telegraphs that the Germans have been driven out of Dixmude.

"The Germans," the correspondent says, "had not long in which to congratulate themselves on their seizure of the mass of ruins which was once the ill-starred town of Dixmude. They were sprayed with shrapnel and shattered with high explosive shells until extermination threatened them. The appearance of French marines with bayonets at charge rapidly convinced them that the death rate would be too high if they remained. Hence Dixmude is ours again.

"The Germans have made a slight advance against Ypres, but it is doubtful if they hold the village of St. Eloi.

"At La Bassée the Germans are attempting to drive a wedge into the allied line by a concentrated gun fire. There has been a considerable bulge in the line here for some time, but the Allies hold their positions on either flank."

A Daily Mail correspondent in Northern France telegraphs:

"Our advance has been carried beyond the treacherous woods north of Ypres, and Thuramme was retaken in the early morning hours of the day, succeeding capture. These two events marked a certain sway of the coast battle in our favor, but a tremendous artillery fire has been proceeding even over the ruins of Nieuport, where previously the situation was calm."

AMSTERDAM, via London, Nov. 13.—The Germans gained nothing by their occupation of Dixmude, according to the Dunkirk correspondent of the Tijd.

The Allies' lines are still intact, and the weak points have been strengthened, he says:

"The German troops after crossing the Yser to the right and to the left of Dixmude were repulsed," continues the correspondent, "and their lines of communications with Dixmude were endangered. The Allies are now trying to prevent the Germans bringing heavy guns into the battle."

According to The Telegraaf the Germans took very few prisoners at Dixmude. Lombaertzyde is still in the possession of the Allies, whose patrols have approached Ostend.

The Berlin Lokal Anzeiger, a copy of which has been received here, estimates the Belgian losses in Wednesday's fighting at 6,000 killed and 8,000 wounded. The newspaper says that the Belgians fought with the utmost desperation.

GERMAN ATTACK SLACKENS.

Paris Reports Repulses of Foe and Advances of Allies.

PARIS, Nov. 13, 11 P. M.—This official bulletin was issued tonight:

From the sea to the Lys the German action has not been so strong, and on some parts of the front we ourselves have taken the offensive.

We have progressed to the south of Bixschoote.

At the east of Ypres we have retaken by a counter-attack a village which had been lost.

At the south of Ypres we have repulsed an offensive movement of the Prussian guard.

On the other part of the front only cannonades are mentioned.

The afternoon bulletin said:

From the sea coast as far as the Lys the fighting has been of a less violent character than on previous days. Several efforts of the Germans to cross the Yser Canal, at the western outlet from Dixmude and at other points of passage in the Amont district, were checked. Generally speaking, our positions have been maintained without change.

To the north, to the east, and to the south of Ypres attacks of the enemy were repulsed, at the end of the day, at different points of our line and that of the British army.

From the region to the east of Armentières and as far as the Oise there have been artillery exchanges and actions of minor importance.

In the course of the last few days of foggy weather our troops have not ceased to make progress little by little. They are today established almost everywhere at distances varying from 300 to 500 meters from the network of barbed wire entanglements of the enemy.

To the north of the Aisne we have taken possession of Tracy-le-Val, with the exception of the cemetery to the beast of this village. We have made slight progress to the east of Tracy-le-Mont and to the southeast of Nouvron, as well as between Crouy and Vregny and to the northeast of Soissons.

In the vicinity of Vailly a counter-attack by the Germans delivered against those of our troops who had retaken Chavonne and Soupir was repulsed. Equal failure attended the German efforts in the environs of Berry-au-Bac.

In the Argonne there has been a violent artillery duel.

There has been minor progress in the vicinity of St. Mihiel and in the region of Pont-a-Mousson.

A surprise attack, delivered by our troops against the village of Val and Chatillon, near Cirey-sur-Vezouse, made it possible for us to capture a detachment of the enemy.

It is reported that snow is beginning to fall on the heights of the Vosges mountains.

Berlin Reports Progress.

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (By wireless to London.)—German military headquarters today gave out an official announcement as follows:

On the branch of the Yser Canal at Nieuport our marines have inflicted heavy losses on the enemy, and we have taken 700 prisoners. During our attacks on Ypres, which have progressed favorably, another 1,100 prisoners have been taken.

Fierce French attacks to the west and east of Soissons have been repulsed with heavy losses to the enemy.

The First Corps of the British Army, which has been defending Ypres, is part of the original expeditionary force sent into France under Sir John French. It bore its part in the fighting east of Mons and in the remarkable retreat to the Marne River. The commander of the corps is Sir Douglas Haig, who fought at Khartoum and took part in the Boer war.

The Prussian Guard Corps has its headquarters in Berlin, but draws its members from all parts of the kingdom, mostly from the high-born classes. It traces its traditions back to the first standing army organized by Frederick the Great in 1750. There are two infantry divisions and one cavalry division.

NEW AISNE FIGHT DESPERATE.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A Times correspondent in France writes under date of Tuesday:

"The battle of the Aisne, which the official communications now refer to as the centre of the Allies' line, has been renewed this week with its original intensity from the forest of L'Aigle, past Soissons and Rheims to the Argonne.

"The three main areas of fighting here are the district between the Oise and Craonne, the neighborhood of Rheims and the forest of Argonne. The first named is the most important.

"On the whole the Allies have the advantage. The French capture of Quesnoy-en-Santerre was a good deal bigger affair than reported. On the other hand, the enemy's accounts of a great victory at Vailly were exaggerated. They obtained a temporary advantage, but the Allies have more than regained the original positions.

"All along the centre the Allies are nibbling at the German intrenchments. As in the previous fighting along the Aisne, certain localities seem as surely destined to be the scene of continuous fighting as is pewter to be the native place for bear. Many of these hills, quarries, and plateaus, which have been the scene of desperate fighting the last few weeks, were the scenes of similar fighting in the war of the Gaul and in the Napoleonic wars.

"Soissons has been hard hit by the artillery, while fighting continues fiercely around Rheims. The German front here runs from Bermericourt to Brimont, Fresnes, Vitry-les-Reims, Nogent l'Abbesse, Nauroy, Moronvillers, and Vaudesincourt to Suippe and thence northward to Souain, Perthes les Hurlus, Ville-sur-Tourbe to the Argonne."

Garros, French Aviator, Feigns Fall, Kills German Pilot, Makes Off With His Machine.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—Some French soldiers, who were doing sentry duty on Pont de Beaugeille, at Amiens, recently saw a Taube aeroplane above them and fired upon it ineffectively. To their surprise, however, the aeroplane presently gracefully came down to the ground and from it stepped forth Garros, the French aviator. He related that while he was chasing a Taube machine a few days previously he had some trouble with his motor and descended, feigning a fall.

"A German pilot approached to take my papers, believing me dead," Garros said, "and when he was a few steps away I pulled out my revolver and put two bullets through him before he could say a word. Thus I secured this Taube, which is very useful for flying over the German lines. I left my own aeroplane in care of a neighboring farmer."

CAPTURE GERMAN AIRMEN.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 13.—A detachment of Russian cavalry operating in the vicinity of Plock, fifty-eight miles west of Warsaw, captured two days ago two German aviators, Lieut. Merez and Lieut. Poldte.

The latter made a reconnaissance in an aeroplane of the albatross type in the direction of Konin, Kutno, and Plock. On the last named town they threw down two bombs. Trouble with the motor of their machine made it necessary for them to land to the west of Rypin, where a detachment of Russian cavalrymen found them in the woods and quickly surrounded them.

At this moment two companies of German infantry appeared and attempted to rescue the airmen, but their attack was repulsed by the Russians, and the two aviators and their aeroplane, which had not been damaged, were yesterday brought into Plock.

AIRMEN SPY BRITISH PORTS.

German Aviators Said to Have Flown Over Harwich and Sheerness.

BERLIN, Nov. 13 (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.).—According to information given out to the press today in official quarters, German aviators have flown over the English seaports of Sheerness and Harwich.

Sheerness is a fortified seaport in Kent, at the mouth of the Thames. It is about forty miles from London. Harwich is in Essex and about seventy miles northeast of London.

SAW WAR IN THE TRENCHES.

Dutchman Horrified When Belgians Took the Boots of Dead Germans.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—The Daily Telegraph publishes, under date of Nov. 7, the experiences of a Dutchman who visited the Belgian trenches near the Yser to see an officer in the Belgian field artillery. The Dutchman says:

"After we reached the trenches the struggle between darkness and light began, and when gradually dawn broke through the darkness it seemed as if a veil was drawn from a corpse. War in all its horror, in all its stern reality, was gradually revealed before my eyes. Close by us sat a Belgian soldier bravely trying to bandage what had once been his left hand with a ribbon held between his teeth and his right right. Two of the nurses of an English ambulance were bandaging the head of a man who had been frightfully lacerated by a piece of shrapnel.

"Most of the men were sleeping, some of them in a lying, others in a kneeling, and some even in a standing position. Never shall I forget those first sights of horror. They all had their rifles close by. Most of them had it in the bend of the arm and held it close against them.

"Invariably when they woke up the first movement they made was for their knapsack, their bread. How anyone could think of eating in such surroundings seemed beyond me and I told the lietenant commanding that particular trench. So he smiled grimly, remarking:

"'My dear fellow, one gets hardened. All the post mortem, a friend, nay even a brother, gets these days is, "'Poor chap, bad luck."'"

"A Corporal, quite a young chap—he could not have been more than 19 years old—crawled up to the officer and said:

"'Pardon, mon Lieutenant, several of the men most respectfully ask whether they might not have another pair of shoes. Most of ours are in very bad condition.'

"It seemed a strange request and the Lieutenant exclaimed:

"'Sapristi, Jansen, do the men think I am carrying boots about in my knapsack? What in heaven's name do they mean?'

"'Ah, mon Lieutenant,' quietly replied the Corporal, 'there are plenty of good boots over there,' and he pointed over the trenches.

"Looking in the direction he indicated, we saw, at a distance of 200 feet to 300 feet in front of our trenches, some fifty or sixty dead Germans. This seemed awful, and I could not trust my ears or eyes. But our Lieutenant shrugged his shoulders.

"'I can't give them permission to leave the trenches, you know,' he told the corporal, 'but if they want some more chances of risking their necks, well,' and at that he turned his back to the man.

"The corporal understood. A few minutes later one man got up slowly and carefully and peeped over the trench first, then with his whole head. Now he takes his rifle, pushes it ahead of him over the trench and on all fours crawls to the top over and down on the other side. He slings his rifle over his shoulder and still on all fours and on his stomach advances.

"Before long a dozen men were in front. They reached the Germans, most of whom were lying face downwards. Quickly they were turned over on their backs and their boots were unstrapped. Then, instead of returning with their booty, they sat down among the dead and proceeded to take their own shoes off and tried on those of the Germans. We could see the shoes flying around in the air and hear the laughter and jokes. It was the most absurd, yet considering the conditions and surroundings, the most dramatic scene imaginable.

"I think that few of the dead Germans were left with any boots, and when the men returned to the trenches the spare ones were exchanged for a cigarette, a pipe of tobacco, a lump of bread or even a button."

Russia Announces Mine Zones.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The American Ambassador at Petrograd has informed the State Department that he has been officially advised by the Russian Government that it has placed mines in the zone from 58.50 degrees north latitude and to the east of the 21st meridian; also at the entrance of the Gulf of Riga and around the Aland Islands, and that consequently the entrance and the exit of the Finnish and Riga Gulfs are forbidden.

1. The German Army Headquarters announces a renewal of fighting near Nieuport and the capture of 700 prisoners by the German marines.
2. The conflict continues around Dixmude, but Paris states that German efforts to cross the Yser Canal were repulsed. The French official report also tells of beating back the foe around Ypres and retaking a village which had been lost. Berlin chronicles the capture of 1,100 more prisoners here.
3. All the way from Armentières to the Oise River, according to Paris, there have been artillery duels and minor engagements.
4. The French have won Tracy-le-Val, according to the official bulletin, and are making progress to the east and beyond Soissons. Berlin, however, says that French attacks, east and west of Soissons, have failed.
5. German forces attempted to retake Chavonne and Soupir, east of Vailly, but Paris says they were repulsed.
6. Slight progress is being made by the French troops near St. Mihiel and in the region of Pont-a-Mousson, according to the Paris official report.

HUNDREDS OF ACTORS ARE AT THE FRONT

Sir Herbert Tree's Reply to Suggestions That They Are Shirking the War.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Charles Haddon Chambers, the playwright, who returned to London by the Lusitania, states that in consequence of certain references in American papers to the recent influx of English actors to New York, which might be construed as a reflection upon the courage and public spirit of English actors as a body, he communicated with Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree, as the acknowledged head of the profession in this country, and received from him the following letter:

"You told me today there is an idea abroad—it is certainly not at home—that actors are shirking the war. I agree with you it is well that this assumption should be dispelled.

"As I write a few names occur to me of those with whom I am myself acquainted who have joined the colors: Robert Loraine, Murray Carson, Dennis Neilson Terry, Arthur Cleave, Evelyn Beerbohm, Claude King, Thomas Weguelin, George Barrett, Lionel Mackinder, Scott Craven, Huntley Wright, Bertie Hare, Halliwell Hobbes, Arthur Whitby, Hugh Rumboldt, Gerald Ames, Rudge Harding, and Arthur Wood. And many actors have joined the United Art Corps.

"As I write, in response to a telephone message I receive from the editor of The Era eight successive lists of names of actors with the colors. These lists are necessarily incomplete, but you will notice that they contain no less than 363 names, a goodly array.

"Our many well wishers on the other side of the Atlantic will, I am sure, be glad to know these facts."

S O S. SEALED EMDEN'S FATE.

Didn't Shell Wireless Plant and Call Brought the Sydney.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Nov. 13, (Dispatch to the London Morning Post).—The Melbourne managers of the Eastern Telegraph Company's extension has made the following statement:

"The staff at the Cable Station in the Cocos Islands were aware they were under the protection of the Admiralty, although warships are seldom seen in that vicinity. Recently, however, the fact became apparent that the protection had been withdrawn because wireless messages were not answered. We had an idea this was part of a large strategic scheme, and consequently no uneasiness was felt until a foreign warship was seen bearing down upon the island. There is a lagoon on the north side which provides an approach only for small boats. Large steamers cannot enter on account of the irregularity of the channel and the dangerous rocks. The Emden stood off about two or three miles from shore and as already announced forty men were sent ashore.

"As soon as there was no doubt that the station was menaced by a foreign warship the wireless station dispatched the signal 'S O S Cocos.' This was constantly repeated and it seems many calls were picked up by the Sydney. A remarkable feature is the Emden, which must have known distress signals were being sent, but did not drop a shell as she approached with the view of dismantling the wireless mast. While the distress signals were being sent out, a rush message was sent by cable to the navy office in Melbourne, who certainly acted very promptly on the information.

"As soon as the Emden's landing party had stepped ashore they proceeded to search for the cable and began to put it out of action, but as a result of long experience the Eastern Telegraph Company had been able to baffle the raiders to some extent and special precautions which, of course, cannot be indicated were taken in this case.

"Before leaving in a commandeered schooner the landing party made sure of a substantial food supply, but this is not likely to embarrass the cable staff as Capt. von Muller was considerate enough to order that the condenser and refrigerator should be spared."

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A storm of protest has been aroused in Melbourne by the suggestion that Capt. Carl von Muller, commander of the German cruiser Emden, be welcomed with a public reception in recognition of his gallantry and courtesy when he arrives in that city. The report comes from the Melbourne correspondent of Reuter's Company.

SAFE ROUTE IN NORTH SEA.

Germans Say It Is to the North, English to the South.

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The German Admiralty has announced that the northern part of the North Sea is free of mines. Consequently the sailing of neutral ships along this route is not attended by danger. The Admiralty says there is danger, however, for vessels sailing through the southern part of the North Sea, and an area announced by England as being free from mines. The correctness of this is proved by the newspaper Handelsblad, published in Norway, which [illegible] that during the past four days [illegible] mended by the British Admiralty.

The Deutsche Tages Zeitung has published an article setting forth that the Germans, in their laying of mines, have respected neutral shipping, while on the other hand the British have laid out a large mine field in the open sea.

RAMS A SUBMARINE.

French Warship Said to Have Sunk a German Craft.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—A dispatch from Dunkirk says that a French torpedo boat sank a German submarine off Westende, Belgium.

The submarine, it appears, was trying to torpedo the French warship, when the latter's commander caught sight of her periscope, put on full speed, and charged down on the enemy, which disappeared. A large quantity of oil appeared on the surface, marking the spot where the submarine sank.

The torpedo boat sustained only slight damage, and returned to port for repairs.

ACTIVITY IN GERMAN FLEET.

Warships in Kiel Canal May Be Preparing to Sail.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A dispatch from Copenhagen to The London Times says:

"Military experts here attach importance to the news that great and unusual activity prevails among the German warships and auxiliaries in Kiel Canal."

THE SUFFOLK OFF COLON.

British Cruiser Believed to be Near the Canal Port.

PANAMA, Nov. 13.—A warship, believed to be the British cruiser Suffolk, has been sighted twenty-five miles off Colon. She was steaming with lights out.

Her destination was not ascertained.

WAR INSURANCE BRISK.

London Encouraged by Report That the Karlsruhe Is Cornered.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Yesterday's cheerful tone in the war insurance market was fully maintained today. It was supported by the rumor, which was freely discussed among shipping firms, that the German cruiser Karlsruhe had at last been cornered.

MEDAL OF VON HINDENBURG.

"Conqueror of Russians" and "Liberator of East Prussia" Honored.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The German newspapers continue to announce victories, not only for the German arms in the East and West, but also for Turkey.

They also announce that a medallion has been struck in honor of Gen. von Hindenburg, "The conqueror of the Russians," and the "Liberator of East Prussia." On one side of the medallion is shown the grim face of the General and on the reverse side is shown the doughty knight in armor, striking furiously with a huge sword.

COUNT BONI AN INTERPRETER.

De Sagan in Transport Service—Deputies and Senator Killed.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—Among the prominent men serving at the front are Count Boni de Castellane, who is acting as an interpreter, and his brother, Count Jean Castellane, who is a Lieutenant aviator. Prince de Sagan and Prince Murat are attached to the motor transport service.

About twenty Deputies are with their regimesnts on the firing line. Two Deputies, Pierre Gougon and Paul Proust, have been killed in action, and one Senator, Emil Reymond, has met a similar fate.

BRITISH SENTRY SHOT A GERMAN PRISONER

LONDON, Nov. 13.—In reply to the charge made by the Frankfurter Zeitung that forty-six German prisoners have died in England from pneumonia and typhoid fever it is officially stated that there have been only five deaths among the prisoners.

One death was accidental, and the others were due to natural causes, the statement says.

[illegible] There has been no typhoid fever or pneumonia.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—There has occurred at one of the concentration camps in which German prisoners of war and German and Austrian subjects of military age are interned an incident which is calculated to evoke some caustic comment when the details become known in Germany.

One night toward midnight the British guard on duty at one of the concentration camps near London was alarmed by unwonted sounds from the camp. Evidences of a struggle in which a fairly large body of men was taking part were audible, and very soon, when the lights were brought to bear on the scene, became visible.

A number of men were seen rushing toward one of the exits. The soldier on guard at this particular point fired as the men approached him, and another near by also discharged his rifle. Eventually order was restored and an investigation begun.

It appeared that the trouble had arisen out of a brawl among some of the inmates of the camp. Instead of being an attempt to escape by rushing the guard, as the soldiers who fired had thought, the disturbance had been nothing more than a free fight among a number of the prisoners.

Unfortunately the sentries' shots had taken effect. One German had been killed and another wounded. The matter is now under further investigation.

An incident of the kind is particularly deplorable in view of the special pains which the British authorities are taking to make the lot of the Germans interned in these camps as pleasant as can be with due regard to the circumstances.

KAISER'S VILLA FOR SALE.

Palace in Corfu Cost Empress Elizabeth $5,000,000.

GENEVA, Nov. 12, (Via Paris.)—Emperor William is offering his marble palace, the villa of Achilleion, in Corfu, for sale. It was built in 1890-91 for the Empress Elizabeth at a cost of $5,000,000, and has since been improved. A syndicate of Germans and Swiss hotel men wished to buy Achilleion a few years ago, but they were outbid by the Emperor.

The Emperor's decision to sell the villa, it is said, is the result of the uncertain attitude of Greece toward Germany and Austria. It is said he fears confiscation of the palace if Greece joins the Allies. A Swiss syndicate has an option on the place at a low price.

The villa of Achilleion, which is in the Italian Renaissance style, was purchased in 1907 by the German Emperor. The gardens are open to visitors. At the rear of the villa are a peristyle and three terraces, with a large number of statues. The large park, descending toward the sea in terraces, contains a small temple with a seated marble statue of Heine, the poet, by the Danish sculptor Hasselrils.

MUST SHOW PASSPORTS NOW.

British Restriction on Americans Embarking for Home.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Notices were posted at the transatlantic steamship offices today to the effect that all Americans must have passports before embarking for America.

In explanation, the steamship officials said the British authorities had notified them that Americans must show passports before boarding boats. At the embassy it was announced that it was prepared to issue passports to all Americans who could prove citizenship.

Up to the present time passports have not been demanded by the British authorities of Americans homeward bound.

GRAVEYARDS COVER MILES IN BELGIUM

Country Still Completely Paralyzed, Says American Who Took In First Food.

FEW MEN SEEN ABOUT

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Jarvis E. Bell of New York, who, on behalf of the American Commission for Relief in Belgium, assisted in the distribution of the first cargo of relief supplies sent to the Belgians, has given The Associated Press a description of conditions in the stricken country:

"Nothing that has been written could exaggerate the misery of Belgium. We drove for miles through graveyards. Stakes on some of which were soldiers tattered coats and helmets were the tombstones. Deserted fields are cemeteries. As we entered the villages women and children sought refuge in the ruins of roofless homes terrified lest we were some fresh visitation of war. Their faces were drawn and lined and if you could only see the gruesome surroundings in which they are struggling for existence you would not wonder that they fail to smile.

"The Belgian peasants had, in many districts, no home in which to sleep, no seed to sow, no implements with which to work, no transport to reach a market, and finally no heart to struggle against the impossible. It is unbelievable that war ever produced such a complete and tragic paralysis as we saw in many parts of Belgium. It cannot be attributed to lack of courage on the part of the civilian population or to the inhumanity of the conqueror. It is simply war up to date; civilized, Christian war.

The Dutch Work on Sunday.

"The American relief steamer Cobleenz, carrying more than 1,000 tons of foodstuffs, arrived at Rotterdam from London at 3 o'clock on Sunday morning. The Dutch Government with great kindness made an exception to the rigid rule against working on Sunday. The labor unions made equal concessions with the result that on Monday morning eight barges towed by four express tugs left Rotterdam en route for Brussels with relief supplies. On each barge was a large printed notice certifying that the cargo had been sent by the American commission in care of the American Minister to Belgium. On the door of the Captain's cabin in each barge was a copy of Gen. von der Goltz's proclamation instructing all German officials to give safe conduct and assistance to the American relief cargo. Gen. von der Goltz is German Military Governor of Belgium.

"The crews of the barges and tugs were Dutch, and each man carried with no little pride an order for safe conduct from the German authorities, permitting him to go to Brussels and return unmolested to Holland.

Follow Barges in Auto.

"Accompanied by M. M. Langhorne, Secretary of the American Legation at Brussels, and Mr. Wyman, an American resident, in an automobile, I followed this odd flotilla of mercy as it [illegible] its way from canal to canal [illegible] At Hanswert, a town on the Belgian-Dutch frontier, I [illegible] some difficulties as to this first consignment of relief. On the contrary, the German officials were fully informed, and there was no delay whatever.

"From thence to Brussels the German arrangements for getting our cargo through expeditiously were perfect. The sealed hatches of the barges were never opened or touched on all the way to Antwerp, Malines, and Brussels.

"The country people came running to the banks of the canals, where they stared at our flotilla as if it were a mirage. For a week not a single barge had passed, where formerly there were thousands.

"The Belgian country folk it was at first just a God-sent dream to remind them of the peaceful days preceding the nightmare of war. When they found that there were real barges bearing food their great thankfulness found ready expression.

"On Wednesday morning, just one week after the ship left London, we drove up in front of the American Legation at Brussels and told Brand Whitlock, the American Minister to Belgium, that the relief barges were safely moored in a pocket of the main canal. A few minutes later Mr. Whitlock's automobile brought the Marquis de Villalobar, the Spanish Minister, and the heads of the Belgian Central Relief Committee. The Marquis was all enthusiasm. He grasped my hand, exclaiming: 'What splendid news! You Americans are wonderful. When you take a thing in hand you certainly do it, and do it quickly.'

All Brussels Knew in an Hour.

"There was no need for the newspapers to spread the report of our arrival. In one hour all Brussels knew and rejoiced. Many people had feared that we would never get the food into Belgium, and that if we did we would not get by the wall of soldiers surrounding Brussels.

"We drove back to Holland by way of Louvain, Aerschot, and Thourout to Breda, on the Dutch frontier. We found several villages in the Limburg district that had been without salt for a month. At almost every bridge we met men with boxes soliciting relief from travelers from more fortunate districts. This looks like begging, but there are some conditions justifying anything. We met few Belgian men. Eighty per cent. of the people in these country districts are women and children. We saw them eating green vegetables, beets and apples. They had little else.

"There were thousands of children, all afraid to laugh. Like their mothers, they seemed spellbound by the melancholy fascination of the ruins in which they found shelter. The contrast between them and the contented song-loving German soldier is appalling.

"The Germans, who throughout treated us with the greatest courtesy and consideration, are clearing the debris from the water fronts so that the shipments of relief supplies from America can be landed in the various towns without difficulty. They also are working on the canals, and promise us by Nov. 17 to clear the waterway to Liége, which at present is very hard to reach."

Mr. Bell will return to Rotterdam on Saturday to continue the work of rushing the emergency food supplies into districts where they are most needed.

OMEN OF THE 'WHITE GENERAL'

Portends Disaster to Austro-German Armies, Russian Soldiers Say.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Mail sends a legend which is current in the Russian army, of a "White General" who rides through the ranks on a white horse.

"If he looks a man full in the face," the legend runs, "that man bears a charmed life. Those whom he passes with eyes averted are marked for death. During the last two weeks the 'White General' has not been seen in the Russian ranks. The soldiers say he is busy in the German and Austrian armies walking with his eyes to the ground."

DUKE'S SON KILLED IN BATTLE IN FRANCE

LONDON, Nov. 13.—It is announced that Lord Bernard Charles Gordon-Lennox, a Major of the Grenadier Guards and third son of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, has been killed in battle. He served in the South African war and afterward saw service in China.

Capt. Beauchamp Oswald Duff, a son of the Commander in Chief of the army in India, Gen. Sir Beauchamp Duff, has also been killed. He was an officer of the First (King George's Own) Gurkha Rifles.

A casualty list issued tonight under date of Nov. 4 contains the names of twenty-three officers killed in action and thirty wounded.

Among those killed was Lieut. Col. H. T. Crispin of the Royal Sussex Regiment.

The wounded include Major Gen. E. S. Bulfin of the Aldershot Command and Lieut. Col. H. E. B. Leach of the South Wales Borderers.

Lord Bernard Charles Gordon-Lennox was a member of a family prominent in England for generations. He was a direct descendant of King Charles II. and the famous beauty, Louise Renée de Perrencourt de Queronaille, to whom Charles gave several titles, notably that of the Duchess of Portsmouth, and whom Louis XIV. made Duchess d'Aubigny.

Lord Bernard's father, the seventh Duke, served as a Captain in the Grenadier Guards in the Boer war, as did an elder brother, Lord Esmé Charles Gordon-Lennox, while his eldest brother, the Earl of March, is now at the front as a Major in the Sussex Yeomanry. He also served in South Africa.

London Mansion That Whitelaw Reid Rented Used for Wounded.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Dorchester House, Park Lane, occupied by the late Whitelaw Reid when he was American Ambassador to the Court of St. James, is now used as a military hospital. It must be the most luxurious of its kind in existence.

Lieut. Col. Sir George Holford, the owner of the house, has given it up to wounded officers, eighteen of whom are billeted in bedrooms overlooking Hyde Park.

Downstairs, on the first floor, the famous ballroom is being turned into a sitting room for convalescents, and other splendid apartments in which dinners and receptions were held are now filled with beds, screens, and big medicine tables, and will become dormitories.

The wounded come to Dorchester House after a few days' preliminary treatment at a nursing home further down Park Lane. They are attended by Sir Alfred Fripp, Surgeon in Ordinary to the King. The sister in charge at Dorchester House is Miss Muriel Wilson of the wealthy family of ship owners.

The famous Velasquez and other masterpieces at Dorchester House have been taken down to a cellar, but the Alfred Stevens decorations are still in place.

York House, Devonshire House, Piccadilly, the Duke of Devonshire's town house; Montagu House, and Harrington House are a few of the many great London mansions now given over for war service.

A stranger instance still of the transformations that are happening in the west part of London is that the huge island of houses at the corner of Brompton Road, opposite the South Kensington (Victoria and Albert) Museum, has been repaired and occupied as headquarters of some of the London regiments. It has lain shut up, dirty and decaying, for at least ten years.

WAR'S EFFECT ON IDEAS.

Ferrero Thinks It May Recreate the Mind of the World.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—Guglielmo Ferrero, the historian, discusses the battle of the Aisne in the Messagero.

"If the Allies," he writes, "give Germany a mortal blow in the west, England will recover her old influence over the Continent, which has so greatly declined in the last thirty years, and much of the authority conferred on the Prussian monarchy by the war of 1870 will pass to republican France.

"The transferrence of territory will be nothing compared with the change in ideas, a change already noticeable. Perhaps this war will recreate the mind of the world."

BIG BRITISH DYE COMPANY.

Government to Aid It—Its Formation Due to the War.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—In order to devise means for providing the textile trades with sufficient supplies of dyestuffs and colors, of which there is now a great shortage owing to the cessation of imports from Germany, preliminary arrangements were made today for the formation of a company with a large amount of capital to manufacture dyestuffs.

Part of the capital will be subscribed by the Government.

OUR SOCKS TOO THIN.

British Army Contractor Wonders How We Keep Our Ankles Warm.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—A well-informed army contractor said to a NEW YORK TIMES correspondent today:

"The thinness of the American socks is the most annoying thing about your country's valued aid. The socks which come up to British army specifications are not thicker than can be bought anywhere in England, but Americans do not seem to manufacture socks thick enough to keep their ankles warm."

BRITISH OFFICERS SLAIN NUMBER 682

Total Casualties Up to Oct. 31 About 57,000, Premier Asquith Says.

AN ARMY OF 2,186,400 MEN

Supplementary Estimate in Parliament—New War Credit of $1,125,000,000 Is Announced.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—An analysis of the official casualty lists up to Nov. 11, so far as they relate to officers of British regiments on active service, has been supplied by a correspondent of The Daily News, as follows:

Killed, 682; wounded, 1,384; missing or prisoners, 354; total, 2,420.

Of the officers killed, 5 were Generals, 20 Colonels, 61 Majors, 222 Captains, and 374 Lieutenants.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—The British casualties in the war up to Oct. 31 were, approximately, 57,000 men of all ranks. This estimate was given by Premier Asquith in the House of Commons today in reply to a question by Edward T. John, member from East Denbighshire.

Mr. John also desired information regarding the Government's proposals as to the final conditions of peace, the effective establishment of international law, and the cessation of competitive military expenditure.

The Premier, in reply to the two questions, gave the British casualties, and said he was not in a position to estimate the losses of the other allied powers or those of the enemy.

He referred Mr. John to his [Mr. Asquith's] recent speeches in regard to the other questions raised.

A supplementary estimate to provide for the 1,000,000 more men required by the Government during the rest of the official year, ending March 31, was introduced in the House of Commons today. This brings the total army, not including the Territorials, to 2,186,400 officers and men.

The announcement of the forthcoming presentation to Parliament of a measure providing for a credit of £225,000,000 ($1,125,000,000,) was issued officially this afternoon. This money is intended to cover not only the naval and military expenditures which may be incurred before March 31, but all expenditures which may be necessary or desirable in order to meet trade or other abnormal conditions created by the war.

This further sum, added to the previous war credits voted by Parliament, brings the total credits up to £325,000,000 ($1,625,000,000.)

The credit of $1,125,000,000 will cover the $14,550,000 advanced to Belgium, the $4,000,000 advanced to Servia, and sums necessary to facilitate the raising of funds by the British dominions and protectorates and by the allied powers.

Advances in the way of loans will be made also to the dominions and the allied powers for the purposes of war and to meet difficulties arising out of the war, and to local authorities and other bodies for relief work.

SERVED MY COUNTRY, KARL LODY WROTE

Spy Put to Death in London Hoped Old Friends Would Not Judge Him Harshly.

OMAHA, Neb., Nov. 13.—An acquaintance of Karl Hans Lody, the German spy who was put to death in the Tower of London recently, has given out for publication a letter which Lody wrote to him on Oct. 31. Lody lived in Omaha at one time and in his letter, which was written in the Tower, he expressed the hope that his former associates would not judge him harshly and said he was consoled by the belief that he had served his country.

The letter, in part, is as follows:

My feelings run riot when I can permit myself to review the dramatic events of the last three years and what is to be the probable climax of it all. I am prepared to make a clean breast of all this trouble, but I must protect my friends in the Fatherland and avoid as much as possible humiliation for those who have been near and dear to me.

I am in the Tower. Hourly while I am confined here an unfriendly guard paces the corridor. My counselor is an attorney of standing, but I ofttimes feel that he is trying to do his duty to his country rather than defend his client. Next week I shall know my fate,

RUSSIA WAS READY FOR TURKS' ATTACK

Had Anticipated the Black Sea Raids and Troops Were in Position for New War.

GENERALS LOST NO TIME

Russians Advancing on Erzerum from at Least Three Quarters—Turks' Flank Attack Failed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Morning Post.)—I have several times noted that Russia has been prepared for all eventualities in this great war, among them the possibility of an attempt to realize the German plans of aggression by using Turkish troops advancing through Persia to an undefended frontier.

The Russian Foreign Office, of course, has known for years past the full extent of Russia's preparations for precisely the event that has now occurred [deletion by the censor.] * * * Certainly they moved on Turkey immediately after a state of war had been brought about by the unprovoked attack by Turkish warships on Russia's Black Sea coasts.

Two Russian columns are marching upon Van, Aremnia. The northern column captured Akta some days ago; the southern has entered Turkish territory about thirty miles further south by the Khanossur Pass, which was defended by Turkish forces.

The Russians attacked, and, after a smart fight, defeated and put to flight the Turkish troops, who abandoned their killed and wounded.

From the scene of this preliminary fight, in quite a different theatre of war, Erzerum is distant 160 miles, and Russian columns are advancing, fighting, upon this key to the position from three if not four quarters. The vanguard, advancing along the direct high road upon Erzerum, has overcome resistance at Koprikeui, inflicting great losses on the Turks, whose flank attack upon the Russian left was caught by a punishing cross-fire from mountain artillery and broken up by infantry charges.

The road is now practically open to a Russian advance to within a few miles of Erzerum, but those few miles present by far the most formidable obstacle yet met with — namely, the Devebomu range of heights.

While engaged in a deadly conflict over a 500-mile front on the west, Russia, suddenly attacked by Turks under German officers on her seacoast, 1,000 miles away to the east, responds instantly with a many-sided combined attack on Turkey in a region nearly 2,000 miles away from the western fighting front.

FRENCH LENIENCE TO TURKS.

Belief That the Government's Policy Will Have a Good Effect.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Thursday, Nov. 12, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—So thoroughly is it understood here that the declaration of war by Turkey is merely a coup de force by a few ambitious traitors in the pay of Germany that the French Government has no intention of treating Ottoman subjects here as real belligerents, while all German and Austrian subjects have been expelled and their property sequestrated.

A notice has been issued from Bordeaux which merits full reproduction. It reads:

It does not enter into the intentions of the Government of the republic to forget the friendship which for centuries has united France with the Ottoman Empire, or indiscriminately to class all Ottoman subjects under the head of its enemies. Consequently orders have been sent to all Prefects, Colonial Governors, and Residents in protected countries, instructing them to treat with consideration all Moslem or Christian Ottoman subjects who, residing on French territory, deserve by their attitude not to be confounded with those who, on behalf of and in the pay of Germany, now represent the Constantinople Government.

Ottoman subjects are, therefore, invited to present themselves with their papers before the Mayors or Police Commissaries of the districts in which they reside. These functionaries will point out the steps to be taken in order that they may regularize their situation and obtain permits of residence to enable them freely to continue their business.

This measure should go far toward opening the eyes of the Turks to the suicidal policy of Germanophile confidence inaugurated by Enver Bey and Talaat Bey.

TURKS CLAIM SUCCESS.

Russians Retreating, Berlin Says—Loss of Transports Admitted.

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (By Marconi Wireless Telegraphy via London.)—A report from Constantinople, translated literally, reads as follows:

"With God's help the enemy has been forced to evacuate his positions and is retreating along the entire front, pursued by us on all sides."

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (By Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, L. I.)—Included in the information given to the press today from official quarters is the following:

"Reports received here from Constantinople set forth that the Turkish Army in the Caucasus is attacking the Russians on their second line of defense. An artillery engagement near Koepryory on Nov. 9 lasted all day long.

"The Persian, Afghan, Egyptian, Indian, and Mohammedan elements in Constantinople have declared a community of interests. The Sunnites and the Shiites (two opposing religious sects) are now for the first time ready for joint action.

"The Vossische Zeitung reports that Rumania has declined a demand made by Russia for the passage of Russian troops through Rumanian territory."

LONDON, Nov. 13.—An official dispatch from Constantinople, reaching London by way of Berlin, confirms indirectly the recent Russian statement that a Russian fleet has sunk three Turkish transports in the Black Sea.

The Constantinople report admits that there has been no news of these three ships since they left the Turkish capital a week ago. It adds that, as the vessels were near Songuldak, on the Black Sea, the day that place was bombarded, it is possible that they were attacked by the Russian squadron.

Reuter's Athens correspondent says the Turks have destroyed the railway line from Smyrna to Cassaba and that it is reported that Turkey intends to close the railway from Constantinople to Dedeagatch, a seaport on the Aegean Sea. Dedeagatch is the terminus of the railway line from Adrianople and Salonika.

Mrs. A. H. Leavitt Reaches London.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—Mrs. Arthur H. Leavitt, wife of the Secretary of the American Embassy at Constantinople, arrived with their child in London today in company with the party of Sir Louis Mallet, the British Ambassador, who was recalled from Turkey. The trip from the Turkish capital was a slow one, but without any exciting incident.

The Russians continue pushing forward upon Cracow, overcoming the last remnants of isolated opposition here and there offered by the Austrian rear guards. Moreover, the Russians have again crossed the Carpathians into the plains of Hungary.

Emperor Nicholas, who is now making a tour of the armies at the front, spent Thursday at Lublin, the day being devoted entirely to a series of public affairs, beginning with the reception of a number of deputations from all classes of the local population, whom his Majesty thanked warmly for their loyalty and devotion, and particularly for the heroism with which they had borne the terrible trials of the war recently waged over this province.

Turning to the representatives of the Polish peasantry, the Emperor expressed the wish that they convey to all the Poles in the province a declaration of his Majesty's entire confidence in their loyalty, and the assurance that his Majesty would not forget their needs.

After attending service in the local Pravoslavny Church his Majesty proceeded to visit the wounded in three hospitals, personally distributing decorations won by deeds of valor and conversing with the soldiers.

TO TRY NEW BATTLE PLAN.

New Concentration of German Troops on Russian Frontier.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—The Petrograd correspondent of the Havas Agency sends the following dispatch:

"The conclusion is drawn from the latest news that the German troops, who in their retreat have occupied all the defiles to the east of the Masurian Lakes (East Prussia,) where they have placed heavy artillery, intend to resist the Russians tenaciously in that section. The Germans hope that on these positions, which they consider impregnable, the shock of the Russians will be broken. However, yesterday the Russians were successful in sorties to the east of the lakes.

"Throughout all Prussia railway passenger traffic has been suspended. The lines now are transporting only troops, apparently with a view to a new concentration which is said to have been decided upon by a recent council of the Austro-German General Staffs at Cracow. This council is reported to have decided to change completely the plan of battle."

According to a Petrograd dispatch to the Matin the Germans suffered a severe defeat beyond Kalisz, losing twelve heavy guns and leaving many dead on the field.

Col. Feyler, editor of The Swiss Military Review, and one of the best known military specialists, declares that "Russia is now about to bring to bear all her effectives, and if it is realized that she intervenes at a moment when in Flanders the German levies of the third line, young soldiers with six weeks' training, are being brought into action, the full significance of the operations on the eastern front will be recognized.

"Three Austro-German armies," he continues, "are advancing toward the angles of Thorn and Cracow. The Russian commander seems to be accentuating the defense in the latter direction. If he succeeds the result will be far-reaching. The Austrian army will be cut off from the Germans and forced to accept battle with their backs against the Carpathians.

PLAN TO LURE RUSSIANS ON.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—The Petrograd correspondent of The Daily Telegraph in a dispatch dated Friday outlines the operations of the present week in the Eastern war theatre. His disaptch follows:

"During Tuesday and Wednesday there was uninterrupted fighting on the German side of the astern frontier of East Prussia. The German Wirballen army (Wirballen is in Suwalki, Russian Poland, almost on the East Prussia boundary line,) with its base in a formidable series of fortified positions, made strong efforts to turn the Russians out of their trenches but all attacks were sucessfully repulsed.

"From Tuesday until Thursday the Russians, advancing from the Bakalargewo-Lyck line, slowly thrust the enemy back to the Masurian Lake region, where the Germans have the advantage of enormous natural obstacles in the network of lakes in dewampes and aided by the intensive scheme of fortifications, the central point of which is Loetzen.

"Behind Loetzen Forty Boyen blocks the narrow passage between Dargained and Loewintin Lakes, which, except for this break, from an impassable barrier extending 20 miles from north to south. The Germans have all the dry gaps in this region armed with artillery against which they hope the Russians will dash themselves to pieces.

"The Russian occupation of Johannisburg is regarded as a coup of great strategic importance. It is assumed that those who occupied Johannisburg were the army from the south. If so their feat was all the more meritorious as this route passes through treacherous swamps which are defended by entanglements and swept by a fire from blockhouses. Between Johannisburg and Bialla the Russians continued until yesterday their advance against East Prussia.

"At the last Austro-German council of war, held at Cracow, Galicia, on Nov 3, new dispositions for the allied armies were decided on, it is stated. Under these plans the German army was to employ its left flank to entice the Russians into the zones of the fortresses at Posen, Glogau, and Breslau, where they could reach them with artillery fire, and endeavor to obtain a crushing victory against one of the flanks of the invaders by manoeuvring their free field army along the lines of their extensive network of railways. Meantime the Austrians were to concentrate around Cracow, whence they would try to inflict as many blows as possible upon the besiegers, and also to mass in the Carpathians and attack the Russian left flank.

"Yesterday the Russians were across the Wisloka River, Galicia and had occupied Dembica at a point where the railway between Jarosian and Tarnow crosses the Wisloka. The Austrians, who retreated southward after the last battles, have occupied an entrenched position covering the bridge at Turka, where they evidently intend to accept battle."

COSSACKS DRIVEN BACK.

Lose Heavily in Second Attack Near Kola, and in Galicia, Too.

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (By Wireless Telegraph to London.)—German military headquarters today gave out an official announcement as follows:

On the East Prussian frontier, at Eydtkuhnen, and also further south to the east of the outlet of the Masurian Lakes, fresh battles have developed, but no decision yet has been reached.

The Russian cavalry forces, which were defeated previously with heavy loss in the vicinity of Kola, 40 miles northeast of Kalisz, Russian Poland, resumed their offensive movements, and, swinging to the southward, were again repulsed to the east of Kalisz. This, it is said, removes any possible danger of an invasion of Silesia.

From Vienna it is reported that the Austrian operations in the northeast are developing without hindrance from the enemy. The Russians have advanced through the region of Central Galicia, voluntarily evacuated by the Austrians, and have crossed the lower Vistula, occupying Rzeszow and the Lisco district.

The fortress of Przemysl again is invested by the Russians, but Russian forces in the Stryi valley were forced to retreat with heavy losses by a surprise attack from an Austrian armored train and Austrian cavalry.

ENDURANCE OF CZAR'S TROOPS.

Spend Days in Rain-Soaked Trenches Without Food, Then Fight.

LONDON, Nov. 13.—In a lengthy review of the earlier operations on the battlefield of Russian Poland and Galicia, Prof. Bernard Pares, the British official correspondent with the Russian Army, gives a sketch of the spirit which he says pervades the Russian Army. After referring to the confidence of the Russians in their artillery and their lack of respect for the rifle fire of their opponents, Prof. Pares continues:

"But the most impressive thing of all is the extraordinary endurance of the men in the trenches. It is an ordinary experience for a man to be from five to eight days in a pouring rain, almost or sometimes altogether without food, and then perhaps to rush on the enemy, to fall and see half of his comrades fall, but the rest still going forward. Or perhaps he lies on the field through the night and then is carried to a hospital, to lose a limb. In spite of this, such men are not only patient and affectionate to all who do anything for them, but really cheerful, contented, and often literally jovial, and in no doubt of the ultimate issue.

"The spirit of the Russian Army draws everything to it, so that no one seems to feel he is living unless he is getting to the front. The talk of all those who are already at work, whether officers or men, is balanced and confident, and all the little comforts are shared up simply, as among brothers.

"All the life of Russia is streaming into the war, and never was the Russian people more visible than it is now in the Russian Army."

Contrary to the general idea, Prof. Pares says that the cavalry played but an insignificant part in the fighting in Galicia. He says the Ruthenian troops in the Austrian Army were in a very difficult position. In several cases they fired into the air, and the attacking Russians sometimes did the same, whereupon, he says, numbers of the Ruthenians would come over to the Russians, who considered themselves at home in this part of Galicia.

The Cossacks who were preceding the army offered little violence in this field, says Prof. Pares, though sometimes they were led to adopt drastic but not necessarily violent measures in dealing with certain hostile inhabitants of the district.

SILESIA IN PANIC.

General at Dresden Warns Against Spreading Rumors.

LONDON, Saturday, Nov. 14.—The Copenhagen correspondent of The Daily Mail sends the following under date of Thursday:

"I learn from Berlin that a general panic prevails in Eastern Silesia. Civilians, with all their articles of value, continue to flee in great numbers to Berlin, Dresden, and other towns. The General in command at Dresden has issued an urgent warning, especially to women, against spreading rumors which seem already to have caused considerable excitement and damage."

THE WAR SITUATION.

(An Associate Editor of The Army and Navy Journal.)

The vigorous encounters along the battle line in Belgium are due to two causes. The more energetic assaults made by the Germans in an effort to break down the opposition where the British and Belgian lines join. The higher ground enables the German artillery to be used to better advantage here than in the swamp ground near Nieuport.

The Germans first made attacks early in the week at Dixmude and succeeded in capturing the town and obtaining a hold on the west bank of the river. Here they were stopped by the rush of reserves and were forced to abandon the west bank except for one short stretch. The Germans made their next attack ten miles further south near Ypres.

The other move was an aggressive one by the Allies along the coast. Here the German artillery was outclassed by the guns of the British and French warships. The Germans were unable to resist the Belgian attack and were forced to abandon Lombaertsyde. The Germans now say they have driven back this sortie to the original position west of the Yser.

These attacks, even where they have ended in the capture of the enemy's trenches, have had no further effect. The lines have been bent back at points, but the new trenches are soon made as strong as the old ones.

The loss by the Germans of three siege guns in the fighting at La Bassee shows the weakness of these guns when opposed to an active enemy. The power of their shells requires a heavy weight for the guns, which makes it difficult to move them from place to place. Consequently, an energetic enemy can send forward raiding parties to work their way through the opposing line and capture the batteries. A small force can readily put the battery out of action if it can get within rifle range. In case a rapid retreat becomes necessary, the heavy artillery falls into the hands of the victors unless there is plenty of warning to give time for moving them to the rear.

The guns referred to in the dispatches are not 11-inch guns, but the 5-inch or 7-inch siege guns that accompany every corps in the German Army.

Last night's dispatches give the line of the fighting between the Oise and the Meuse. For the first time in two weeks it is possible to tell the recent results of the encounters in this part of the battlefield. Just east of the Oise the French have made an advance of two miles. Along the Aisne the British are about one mile north of the river, except at Vailly, where they hold the bluff just above the narrow river valley. Near Craonne the Allies have made their greatest advance, being about three miles from the river. From Craonne the line runs almost due southeast, skirting Rheims at a distance of four miles, to Nogent, east of the city. Then the line there turns east through Beine and Moronvilliers to the Suippes River.

The German trenches follow this river and one of its forks to Souain, twelve miles northeast of Chalons. Here the Germans have made a gain of about two miles and occupy a strong salient along the Suippes River. From Souain the line runs due east, through Ville-sur-Tourbe and Vienne to Vauquois, a mile south of Varennes on the Aire.

The line then circles Verdun at a distance of about seven miles, running through Malancourt, Brabant, and Dieppe. In the Woevre region the French have pushed the Germans back out of range of the Meuse forts and are now holding them to a line through Fresnes and Hattonchatel, eight miles from the river.

The German salient at St. Mihiel is hemmed in on three sides by French forces that leave a gap of less than eight miles in the German rear. The success of this semi-detached body in maintaining its precarious position for four weeks forms a noteworthy feat of arms. The Germans have 12-inch Austrian howitzers mounted at St. Mihiel and have 16.5-inch mortars in action near Thiaucourt. These add important strength to their defense, but would not avail them much but for the excellent work of their infantry in manning the trenches along the fighting line and thus screening the heavy artillery from the attacks of the French columns. With the exception of artillery, the French have every advantage in their favor in this field. Their lack of success indicates that they have been unable to provide guns that approach those of the Germans in power.

From Pagny, on the Moselle, eastward to the Vosges Mountains the French advance has carried them at all points to within five miles of the Lorraine border. From the crest of the Vosges, ten miles east of St. Dié, the battle line runs due south through Thann and Altkirch to the Swiss border.

In a battle of the immense numbers that are now engaged in France the movements of troops must be pushed on a large scale before any important results can be obtained. Neither side in the conflict shows any sign yet of a serious effort to bring the great battle to a close. Both sides seem to be delaying in order to complete special preparations before beginning attacks in large force that may bring about the decision of the conflict.

CALLS IT EMPTY CHATTER

All the Cathedrals of Europe Not Equal to Stone at German Grenadier's Grave, He Says.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Daily Standard.)—An amazing exposition of German militarism is given by Major Gen. von Disfurth in an article contributed to the Hamburg Nachrichter, in the course of which this distinguished retired officer of the German Army writes:

"No object whatever is served by taking any notice of the accusations of barbarity leveled against Germany by our foreign critics. Frankly, we are and must be barbarians, if by this we understand those who wage war relentlessly and to the uttermost degree.

"It is incompatible with the dignity of the German Empire and with the proud traditions of the Prussian Army to defend our courageous soldiers from the accusations hurled against them in foreign and neutral countries. We owe no explanations to any one. There is nothing for us to justify and nothing to explain away. Every act of whatever nature committed by our troops for the purpose of discouraging, defeating, and destroying our enemies is a brave act and a good deed, and is fully justified.

"There is no reason whatever why we should trouble ourselves about the notions concerning us in other countries. Certainly we should not worry about the opinions and feelings held in neutral countries. Germany stands as the supreme arbiter of her own methods, which in the time of war must be dictated to the world.

"It is of no consequence whatever if all the monuments ever created, all the pictures ever painted, and all the buildings ever erected by the great architects of the world be destroyed, if by their destruction we promote Germany's victory over her enemies, who vowed her complete annihilation. In times of peace we might perhaps regard the loss of such things, but at the present moment not a word of regret, not a thought should be squandered upon them. War is war, and must be waged with severity. The commonest, ugliest stone placed to mark the burial place of a German grenadier is a more glorious and venerable monument than all the cathedrals in Europe put together.

"They call us barbarians. What of it? We scorn them and their abuse. For my part, I hope that in this war we have merited the title of barbarians. Let neutral peoples and our enemies cease their empty chatter, which may well be compared to the twitter of birds. Let them cease their talk of the Cathedral at Rheims and of all the churches and all the castles in France which have shared its fate. These things do not interest us. Our troops must achieve victory. What else matters?"

FOUR PROFESSORS KILLED.

BERLIN, (via the Hague and London) Nov. 13.—The newspapers printed yesterday and today the obituary of four university professors who had just fallen in battle, showing how largely university people are participating in the active fighting.

The fallen men are Heinrich Hermelink, Professor of Church History at Kiel; Ernst Heidrich, Professor of Art and History at Strassburg; Ernst Stadler, Professor of German Philology at Strassburg, and Prof. Fricke, the head of the Hanover Muenden Forestry Academy.

Frau Delbrueck, wife of the Minister of the Interior and Vice-Chancellor, Clemens Delbrueck, is dead.

Count Matthias Brudzewo Mielzynski, the ex-member of the Reichstag who shot his wife and nephew in his Castle near Graetz in February, has received the decoration of the Iron Cross of the First Class for valor in the battle of Augustowo.

The Mielynski tragedy, the result of a love affair, caused a sensation at the time of its occurrence. The Count was tried on a charge of manslaughter, but was acquitted.

SAYS GERMANS FEAR RUIN.

Neutral Banker Finds Industrial Leaders Dreading Long War.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

COPENHAGEN, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Times).—From a distinguished citizen of a neutral country, a banker by profession, whose long standing business relations with that country required him to spend the last seven weeks in Germany, I have received a graphic account of the aspect which events present to a keen observer. His views are not only those of a man of affairs, but of one who through his professional connections with Germans of eminence in politics and commerce has enjoyed unusual opportunities for gauging the actual attitude of mind with which this class views the war.

"It would be a grave fallacy," said my informant, "to judge German affairs by German newspapers of today. They must not only suppress what the Government does not want printed, but are required to publish practically that and that only which the Government lays before them. I refer, of course, to news and views of all sorts bearing on the war.

"Everything, for instance, tending to suggest that the rigors of war are slowly but surely undermining the national economic fabric is strictly contraband. My every-day contact with Germans of my class, extending over a period of many weeks, leaves me firmly convinced that those of them who must know, now realize that Germany has been plunged into a tragic and pathetic adventure. Even the great industrialists of the Rhinelands and Westphalia, though many of their works are occupied in the production of war material to a wholly unprecedented extent, are depressed and melancholy over the awful struggle into which Germany has been precipitated. These are the men who cannot be deluded by official optimism and bluster. They are men accustomed to deal with facts, and nothing else impresses them.

"They realize that, thanks to a very far-seeing economic and financial organization, their trade and commerce have, thus far, barring the annihilation of the German merchant marine, been dislocated perhaps to no greater extent than the trade and commerce of their enemies. They look across the Atlantic and see that even America, as could not be otherwise in a truly world war, feels the blight of Europe and Asia's colossal blood letting, but what German industrial leaders also realize is that the prolongation of the war into months and years must spell eventual ruin.

"I could see no traces that Germany as yet had actually felt the effect of her great adventure, but the cumulative effect of conditions which war brings, especially now that intelligent Germans know it is to be a prolonged struggle, is measured at its full value. It is becoming increasingly plain to them that they cannot win. The military nation, trained from the cradle up to believe in the might of numbers they now see that odds are overwhelmingly against them.

"Men like Ballin and Heineken, whose liners have been swept from the seas as if by some all devastating hurricane; people like the textile magnates of Westphalia and Saxony, whose looms are silent when no more American cotton can be imported; ironmasters like Krupp, Thyssen, and Stinnes; electrical magnates like Rathenau and the Siemens-Schuckerts, who know what uninterrupted supplies of staple rawstuffs from abroad, such as copper and petroleum mean; bankers like von Gwinner and Fürstenberg, who know the havoc which the financing of the war and the stoppage of exports work to German credits at home and abroad—these men are under no delusions as to what the war is doing and will do the more it develops into a protracted victoryless affair of mere give and take on three or four vast firing lines.

ALLIES TO PRESS WIRELESS CHARGES

HINT WE SHOULD ADVISE

But What Action, If Any, Will Be Taken Here Is Not Disclosed—Ecuador Casts Doubt on Charges.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The British Government has decided to push vigorously its protest to the Governments of Ecuador and Colombia on the ground that these two South American nations have violated their pledges of neutrality. Although it has not called on the United States to take any action in the matter, Great Britain has brought the alleged violations of neutrality to the attention of the State Department in a way to indicate that Ecuador and Colombia are likely to become involved in serious trouble with the British Government if they should repeat the offenses with which they are charged.

The State Department now knows officially that the British Government has protested to the two South American countries and called on them for an explanation of their alleged discrimination against Great Britain. France, as Great Britain's ally, has also made protests to Ecuador and Colombia, and has informed the State Department of its action. Colombia is charged with having permitted wireless messages to be sent to the German squadron off the Pacific Coast of south America telling of the whereabouts of the British squadron under Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock. Ecuador is accused also of having permitted the use of radio communication to keep the German squadron informed of the movements of its enemy's naval force, and, in addition, with having taken no measures to prevent the German squadron from using the Galapagos Islands as a coaling base.

While neither of the allied Governments has indicated to the United States what course it expects this Government to pursue in the matter, each has made it clear that it regards the United States as sufficiently interested to employ means to prevent the two South American nations from becoming involved in trouble with Great Britain and France. The State Department understands thoroughly that in notifying it of the protests made to Ecuador and Colombia Great Britain and France were following the set policy of informing this Government in advance of any measures they might have in contemplation affecting the possible use of force in the Western Hemisphere. It is this phase of the matter which has given concern to the United States.

Officials here do not expect either Great Britain or France to adopt any punitive or other drastic measures against Ecuador and Colombia if the alleged violations of neutrality are not repeated, but it is sufficiently clear that the course of the two European Governments in notifying the State Department of their protests is intended as a broad hint that it would be well for the United States to exercise a little parental persuasion in the direction of inducing Colombia and Ecuador to play no favorites as between the European combatants.

Secretary Bryan and other officials of the State Department are showing marked reticence in regard to the situation produced by the protests of Great Britain and France. After a call at the department today from Sir Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, it was admitted that copies of the French and British protests to Ecuador and Colombia had been left at the department, but it was explained that these were not accompanied by any comment or any suggestion that the United States should take action in the matter. Whether this Government will approach the two South American nations with a view to obtaining assurances that pledges of neutrality will be observed in letter and spirit is something that department officials declined to say.

In the South American diplomatic circles it was deemed not altogether unlikely that a movement would be initiated either by a South American country or the United States to adopt uniform regulations of wireless. The articles of The Hague Convention and the Declaration of London, which represent the latest ruling in international law, do not deal specifically with the use of the wireless as it has developed in the present war. The United States has taken an advanced ground on the subject, prohibiting, although not so obligated, every possible means of using American territory as a base of operations in the transmission of information to ships at sea.

The Chilean Ambassador delivered to Mr. Bryan today a copy of the speech made in the Senate at Santiago by Manuel Salinas, the Foreign Minister, replying to published rumors that Chile was permitting her neutrality to be violated. Sir Edward Grey's satisfaction at the observance of neutrality by Chile is quoted, and there are suggestions by Mr. Salinas in the same speech of possible international conference among the nations of this hemisphere to regulate wireless and other new phases of international law and neutrality which the present war has bred.

Ecuadorean Minister's Denial.

The Secretary of the Legation of Ecuador has sent a letter to THE TIMES denying that the Minister of Ecuador has made any representations to the State Department concerning the alleged violations of neutrality by Ecuador and expressing doubt as to the correctness of the charges. Translated from the Spanish the letter reads:

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The reports published today by several newspapers of this city, in so far as they relate to the interview between the Hon. Mr. Bryan, Secretary of State, and the Minister of Ecuador, Senor G. S. Cordova, concerning the supposed violation of neutrality in the present European war, are absolutely false.

The Minister has not conferred with any person of the Department of State about the rumors that have been circulated that the international laws have been transgressed by some countries of South America.

The Minister of Ecuador believes unfounded the report that Ecuador has permitted wireless stations to be used by any of the belligerents, or that the ships of such belligerents have provided themselves with coal in any of the islands of the Archipelago of Colon, (Galapagos.)

Ecuador possesses no wireless stations that could have offered their services to the belligerent countries, not even in a clandestine manner; nor has it coal in any of its islands.

Withal, the Minister of Ecuador has addressed himself to his Government, asking it for instructions in this respect.

I remain, with great respect, your obedient servant, J. F. CORDOVA.

Secretary of the Legation.

FOR GERMANS IN CANADA.

Arthur von Briesen Asks American Protection and Aid.

Arthur von Briesen of this city sent the following letter to Secretary of State Bryan yesterday regarding the condition of unemployed Germans and Austrians in Canada:

New York, Nov. 13, 1914.

To the Honorable Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.:

Sir: It appears from letters received by me from Canada that there are a large number of German and Austrian subjects in that country who are at the present time looked upon as public enemies, and that many of them are now in great need and are suffering from lack of food and also from lack of employment, as it is regarded as treasonable to employ any one belonging to those nationalities.

During the preceding years Canada has sought German immigrants mainly for her agricultural development. Many came in good faith and obtained satisfactory employment, some even acquiring little farms and other property. Now their position is very difficult and to an extent, I believe, fraught with danger.

As the United States have undertaken to protect the citizens or subjects of Germany and of Austria who may be in England or in her possessions, its Consulates might perhaps be called upon, if you approve, to extend such protection as may be lawful and proper to these people. It is suggested, and I believe correctly so, that since many of these Germans and Austrians are not acquainted with the English language, a German-speaking official of our Government might be attached to the Consul General's office in Ottawa, so that at least one of our representatives would be able to understand their complaints and their needs.

I therefore respectfully suggest that measures be taken in some proper and apt manner to extend protection to Germans and Austrians in Canada, and, if need be, also to help where help is found necessary. If they were permitted to come to the United States they might find work and sustenance in our midst. When individual cases requiring financial or other particular aid are brought to the attention of your Consul or Consul General they might be reported either to Jacob H. Schiff of 52 William Street or to Edmund Pavenstedt of Muller, Schall & Co., 45 William Street, both of New York City, who, might then apply to some of the relief funds that are being raised in New York and in other parts of the United States for special assistance in such cases. If such reports should also come to me I shall be very glad to do my utmost in the same direction.

Very respectfully,

ARTHUR v. BRIESEN.

ITALY FINES U. S. SHIP $2,200

Kroonland's Agents Hear of Penalty for Being Held Up by War.

Agents of the International Mercantile Marine Company were notified by the Italian Government by cable yesterday that the company had been fined $2,200 because the Kroonland, recently arrived at Naples, had violated the terms of her Italian license procured in New York. It is thought by the agents that the Italian immigration officials counted the twelve days that the Kroonland was held up at Gibraltar by the British Admiralty as part of the trip. The steerage tickets had on them the declaration that the Kroonland would reach Naples in twelve or thirteen days, but because of the war she was out twice that time.

An official of the steamship company said the fine might as justly have been imposed if the Kroonland had gone ashore and stuck for the same period. The Finland, which is to sail for Naples on Nov. 21, must take a new sort of license, this official said, and in addition to former requirements must put up $4,000 as a bond for the ship and $20 for each passenger carried, which would pay the outlay necessary to get a license for some American steamships up to $50,000.

CARRIED STRANGE MESSAGE.

Drugged Victim of Robbers Worried About Its Loss.

A well-dressed man who later identified himself as the "Marquis de Barrone," was found last night by the police on the steps of the Mechanics' Bank Building, Montague and Fulton Streets, Brooklyn, in an unconscious condition from chloral poisoning. He was taken to the Adams Street Police Station and Ambulance Surgeon Brown, of the Brooklyn Hospital, after a long struggle, succeeded in restoring him to consciousness.

Immediately the man began to search his clothing for a message he said he had to send out by way of the Sayville Wireless Station. In searching him for identification purposes the police had found the paper, which read, "Continental, Havre, Roulette trente quitia monti," and was signed "Demonde." This the police translated as "Continental, Havre, Roulette thirty-five comes up."

The patient was much elated when it was returned to him, and said that he would not have lost it for anything, and that he was afraid that "they" had taken it. On being asked who "they" were, he told this story: He had been traveling about the country, he said, and three weeks ago met a man in Washington, whose name he refused to tell. With this man he went to Philadelphia, and yesterday came to New York. When they were passing up Park Row, they met a woman friend of his companion, whose name also he refused to divulge, and all three went into a restaurant for dinner.

He remembered eating and getting very sleepy and at the end of the meal being taken to a taxicab. When the cab started his memory ended and the next thing he said he knew he was in the hands of Dr. Brown in the Police Station. He said that he had $70 when he went into the restaurant and that this was gone, but that he did not mind that so long as the wireless message was safe.

The police said later that they believed the victim feared his companions were spies.

BRYAN ADMITS SPIES GET OUR PASSPORTS

MUST PROVE CITIZENSHIP

Affidavit Before Clerk of Federal or State Court Necessary Under New Rule—Must Explain Mission.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The official admission was made at the State Department today that spies employed in the service of Governments now engaged in war had obtained United States passports and had used them in their work of espionage. This admission was made in connection with an announcement by the department that, by the advice of Secretary Bryan, President Wilson had issued an order putting into effect more stringent rules for granting passports.

The action of the President and the Secretary of State has a bearing on the case of Karl Hans Lody, the German officer who was put to death as a spy in the Tower of London last week. Lody possessed a passport issued by the State Department to Charles A. Inglis of Chicago. It was supposed during Lody's trial in London that he had obtained the passport at the American Embassy there by representing himself as Inglis, and the Crown Prosecutor so announced in his address to the court. The State Department, however, made an investigation and found that Inglis was an American citizen who had lost the passport while in Berlin.

According to a news dispatch from Chicago, Inglis has arrived there and asserts that he left his passport at the Imperial Foreign office in Berlin to have it approved, and that when he returned for it he was told that it had been lost. The Lody case attracted the attention of the State Department to the ease with which American passports might be obtained by spies, and the President's action today was expedited by reports showing that citizens of foreign Governments had obtained American passports which they were using to assist them in espionage.

Bryan's Official Statement.

The following official statement was issued by Secretary Bryan:

The President, upon the advice of the Secretary of State, has this day signed an order under which the rules governing the granting and issuing of passports in the United States are made much stricter than they have been in the past. The immediate cause of the amendment to the passport regulations was the fact that the Department of State had been recently informed of several cases in which aliens holding themselves as native American citizens have obtained, or attempted to obtain, American passports for purposes of espionage or otherwise in foreign countries.

Under the former rules it was not difficult to obtain passports fraudulently. It was only necessary for a person claiming citizenship through birth in the United States to make a sworn application, alleging that fact, before a notary public or any other officer authorized to administer oaths, and to have it supported by an unsworn declaration of a witness. It was not required in the rules that either the applicant or his witness should be known to the notary.

The department has reason to believe that notaries public and other persons taking passport applications have been, in many cases, very careless, and have failed to make sufficient inquiry as to the identity and citizenship of applicants for passports. Under the new rules an applicant for a passport must make a sworn application before a clerk of a Federal or State court within the jurisdiction of which he or his witness resides, and the seal of the court must be affixed.

It is also required that his witness, who must be an American citizen, make a sworn statement in support of the application before the same official. The applicant or his witness must be known to the clerk of the court before whom the application is made, or must be able to satisfy such officer as to his identity and the genuineness of the application.

Must Explain Mission.

Another requirement of the new passport rules is that an applicant for a passport is required to state the names of the foreign countries which he expects to visit, and if any such countries are at war he must state the object of his visit thereto. The latter statement should be brief and general in form, as, for example, "commercial business" or "to bring wife and children to this country." A statement in accordance with this declaration will be written upon the face of the passport.

It is believed that this requirement will not only prevent persons from going to belligerent countries for objects which are contrary to the principles of neutrality, but will also be of assistance to those who find it necessary to visit belligerent countries for legitimate purposes.

The legal passport fee, which is sent to the Department of State with the application, is one dollar only. In the past many notaries, steamship agents, tourist agents, and other persons who have made it a business to take passport applications have required exorbitant fees for their small services in the matter, sometimes as much as five dollars for a single application. It is believed that clerks of courts who take passport applications will require moderate and reasonable fees for their services, so that the abuse mentioned will be stopped.

MINES ROUSE SCHURMAN.

Cornell's President Urges Protest Against Invasion of Our Rights.

ROME, N. Y., Nov. 13.—Jacob Gould Schurman, President of Cornell University, made an address to the Rome Chamber of Commerce this evening in which he discussed "Some Issues of the Day." He expressed himself strongly in regard to the indiscriminate laying of mines in ocean highways by the nations now at war, and said further that he was not certain that the Government fully realized its duty to American commerce.

After touching on the general effect of the war, he suggested that it would be wise for all to arrange their business affairs on the supposition that the war would last for two or three years longer.

"It is a serious matter to contemplate the interruption of our trade and commerce with the outside world for even the shorter of these periods," he said. "But two things, at any rate, are open to us. First, we should adapt our trade to the needs of those neutral countries which hitherto we have too little cultivated. And, secondly, we should insist on our full right to trade with all the countries of the world, subject only to the legitimate restrictions of contraband and of effective blockade in the case of belligerent nations.

"The seas and oceans are the open highways of trade and on these great pathways of commerce all nations have equal rights. No belligerent nation can lawfully interfere with these rights so long as ships are not carrying contraband of war. Nevertheless, the fact is that some of the belligerent nations are setting barriers to neutral commerce as if the highways were their own private property. Germany and England are sowing the North Sea with mines which are endangering and rendering impossible American trade with neutral nations whose coasts are washed by that sea—Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden.

"This is a violation of our rights and a detriment to our interests which our Government should no longer survey with silence. We should no longer sit passive and acquiescent while the belligerent nations practically annex and appropriate the oceans and the seas. What right have the belligerent nations to obstruct our legitimate commerce with the neutral nations of Europe? The ocean has been used for stretching bonds of trade and commerce that have united all mankind. By what authority do the belligerents now monopolize it to prevent the mutually advantageous intercourse the world has hitherto enjoyed?"

Prof. Schurman then suggested that the question be looked at from a larger point of view and not solely from the view of the personal interest of this country. If neutral nations permitted their rights to be violated without protest a dangerous precedent would be established by the present conditions. "It is incumbent on us," he said, "to denounce the present obstruction of our commerce by the sowing of mines in the North Sea and elsewhere as an invasion of our rights, as a practice which we deem intolerable, as a nuisance which we demand shall be abated or removed."

He then discussed former President Roosevelt's article in THE NEW YORK TIMES of last Sunday, in which Mr. Roosevelt criticised the Administration for not protesting against the invasion of Belgium and the levying of tribute on her cities, as provided for in Articles 49 and 52 of The Hague Convention of 1907, to which the United States was signatory while he was President. Prof. Schurman averred that Mr. Roosevelt's contentions were erroneous inasmuch as they were based on a "confusion between the rights and duties occurring under treaties," and he cited a number of instances where treaties had been broken without protest from the nations who signed them.

He said further that no nation was under pressure to stand alone for the vindication of international law and that any nation in a time like this that did so, would inevitably find itself drawn into war. He advocated an "international police" to enforce laws concerning the relations between nations and concluded by saying:

"But just as personal morality is without the sanctions of force, so international law is at present without the sanctions of force. In the meantime it is an unwarranted assertion and a most dangerous doctrine to hold that any one nation is under obligation to vindicate the principles and rules of international law when other nations violate them."

WHY TAFT PEACE PLAN DIED.

Roosevelt Failed to Interest Foreigners in It, Ex-Congressman Says.

How one of President Taft's plans for world peace failed through the inability of Col. Roosevelt to stir up sufficient interest in it among the European rulers who feted him upon his return from Africa in the Spring of 1910 was revealed for the first time last night by ex-Congressman William S. Bennett at a peace meeting in Cooper Union. Mr. Bennett explained that he did not feel he was violating the rules of ethics by telling the 1,200 men and women present a piece of unwritten history.

He said that the United States had taken a definite stand on the matter of armaments on June 25, 1910, when President Taft ratified a resolution calling for the appointment of a commission of five "to consider the expediency of utilising the existing international agencies for the purpose of limiting the armaments of nations of the world by international agreement and of constituting the combined navies of the world an international force for the preservation of universal peace."

"Mr. Roosevelt, then the only living ex-President," Mr. Bennett went on, "was traveling in Europe. The committee had a choice between building what would then have been the strongest navy in the world or taking the lead in a world movement to disarm. That Spring Mr. Roosevelt tried in every country he visited to gain consent to this plan. I am not at liberty to tell you the answers he got. He did not, however, get sufficient concurrence abroad to make it a go. Only the English and Scandinavian Governments concurred in the plan.

"When Mr. Roosevelt came back the bill had been passed and he was offered the Chairmanship of the commission. He declined, on the ground that the result of his inquiries abroad was such that he considered the work of the commission at that time a fruitless task. The commission thereafter died a natural death."

"There is one thing that Mr. Roosevelt fails to do," he continued, "and that is to figure out for us how we can expect to train our nation for defensive militarism and not let it become agressively military."

George Gordon Battle, who preceded Mr. Bennett, emphasized the important part this country would have to play in the peace negotiations when the present conflict was over.

Americans in London All Right Now

Fred I. Kent, Vice President of the Bankers' Trust Company, who has been made a Director of that institution during his absence in Europe, returned last night on the White Star liner Baltic. He was on vacation when the war began, and hurried from Bremen to London, where he organized the meeting at the Waldorf Hotel which was attended by 2,000 Americans. Mr. Kent also cabled to New York explaining the urgent needs of Americans and requesting that money be appropriated by Congress, which resulted in $3,000,000 in gold being sent over in the United States cruiser Tennessee. He said last night that Americans who were in London now were able to take care of themselves financially, and had no difficulty in getting drafts and checks cashed.

Just Ready. A New Novel by Dr. Egan

THE IVY HEDGE

By MAURICE FRANCIS EGAN

Crown 8vo Colored Jacket | A FINE GIFT | Net $1.35 By mail, $1.45

Dr. Egan's new novel, "The Ivy Hedge," is a picture quiet in tone, but rising at times to very noble heights, of life in the United States among both the rich and the poor. The character of the Canadian girl is a new type in fiction, and Dr. Egan's analysis of the effects of Socialism on well-meaning people who suffer from conditions which they can not analyze is absolutely true to life.

Competent critics have declared this to be the very best work of fiction yet published on those present conditions which lead to Socialism.

WOMAN SEES PLOT TO ROB THE INDIANS

Kate Barnard, Oklahoma Charity Commissioner, Says $200,000,000 Is at Stake.

GIVES UP OFFICE TO FIGHT

Charges Widespread Conspiracy to Seize Valuable Lands—Her Work Hampered by Alleged Grafters.

A systematic plot to rob Indian full-bloods and minor heirs of Oklahoma of more than $200,000,000 worth of coal lands at the hands of an organized clique of grafters operating in Oklahoma and in Washington is charged by Kate Barnard State Commissioner of Charities of Oklahoma, in an article appearing in The Survey. She tells why, after the Department of Charities, the last disinterested official protector of the Indian wards of the nation, had been wrecked through the machinations of the alleged clique of grafters, she refused a proffered renomination for her present office and is organizing instead a State-wide and nation-wide "people's lobby" to win back the lost national protection of the nation's Indian wards.

"Two hundred millions is a low estimate of the money prize at stake," she says, "and the success of the plot means misery and poverty for 10,000 Indian mothers and the unborn babes of coming generations. This remaining stupendous wealth is now in the hands of 33,000 restricted Indians, most of whom are ignorant and cannot read or write. The remainder of the 100,000 Indians have already been robbed. This conspiracy reaches from the political group which dominated the fourth Legislature of Oklahoma, is dominating the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, and through the delegation is evidently dominating the Indian Department, as it affects Oklahoma matters at this time."

The first step in the plot, she says, was accomplished in 1908, when, by urging the doctrine of State rights, the Federal Government was induced to surrender its supervision of Indian minors and full-blood heirs and place this authority in the probate courts of Oklahoma. The next step, taken by the last Oklahoma Legislature, she says, was to wreck the Department of Charities which had sole jurisdiction over the Indian orphans at home, and was the only arm of the Government, State or national, clothed with power to protect their lands in the probate courts.

In order to weaken the protection of the civil service force of the Federal Government, Miss Barnard charges, the plotters four months ago, with the help of the Congressional delegation and the Indian Department at Washington, brought about the consolidation of the Union Indian Agency at Muskogee, Okla., with the office of the Commissioner of the Five Civilized Tribes, commonly known as the Dawes Commission. Thereupon, she says, the offices so consolidated were removed from civil service and made political. Straightway appropriations for agents to go into the homes of Indians and help them supervise the ignorant Indian estates were reduced at a time when these were most needed, while $85,000 of the State's money was appropriated for purely political Federal probate attorneys.

"Approximately $5,000,000 in cash of tribal funds are now ready for per capita distribution among about 80,000 Chickasaws, Cherokees, and Seminoles," she says. "Approximately $30,000,000 more will be ready to distribute in the near future among 40,000 Choctaws and Chickasaws; there are still nearly 25,000 separate ledger accounts open relating to the unfinished sale and transfer of title to more than 2,000,000 acres of tribal lands. Is it an accident that the Department of Charities, the only branch of the State Government having any legal authority to protect these helpless minors in the courts of Oklahoma, should be destroyed on the eve of the distribution of these vast natural resources and tribal funds?"

How Indians Are Plundered.

Miss Barnard describes the speed and method with which, in the past, Indians newly come into possession of their property, were swindled out of it in a few days:

"The most common form of plunder lies in the power to sell a minor's land for the pretended purpose of 'benefiting' the minor. Reduced to money, 80 per cent. of the capital is consumed by fake 'court costs,' 'attorney fees, and 'allowances,' bad loans, and investments.

"One of the leading newspapers of the State obtained from the Indian orphan minors thousands of dollars on its worthless stocks and bonds.

"At one time, the Department of Charities was informed that three 'elf' children were sleeping in the hollow of an old tree and eating at neighboring farmhouses. An investigation proved that these little ones were actually living in this homeless, friendless fashion, their hair so matted that it had to be cut from their heads. We found further that they were under the 'protection' of a 'guardian,' who had fifty-one other children under his protecting care. These three children had valuable lands in the Glenn Pool oil fields. The guardian was charging up large amounts for their 'schooling' and 'general care,' yet he did not know where the children were, had 'lost all track of them,' and it was with difficulty that the Department of Charities located the guardian."

A few days ago, according to Miss Barnard, officials now in charge of the large majority still pending of the 30,000 land suits instituted by the Government for the recovery of Indian lands obtained by fraud, secured recommendation from the five Indian chiefs representing the Five Tribes for the dismissal from the docket of about 6,000 of these suits.

She herself, she says, was balked in her efforts to have the State Department of Charities protect the ignorant and helpless Indian minor heirs, first by their "guardians" promptly withdrawing the children from the jurisdiction of the State Orphan Home, and then by political machinations that made it impossible for her to obtain enforcement of the protective laws she finally forced through the Legislature.

Tells How She Was Hampered.

"When the work was well under way," she says, "I was warned that the law must be enforced in a manner 'satisfactory' to these interests. I told them I knew no authority but the laws of Oklahoma and the dictate of my own conscience as revealed by Almighty God.

"In the prosecutions which followed, wholesale disclosures of graft were made and thousands of dollars in money and land were returned to some 1,380 Indian orphan children.

"Failing in their efforts to dictate to me, the men back of these moves held a secret meeting in the Summer before the fourth Legislature and decided to 'control' the Department of Charities or wreck it. From the opening day of the Legislature they started a fight on my attorney—a man who had been prosecuting grafters without fear or favor.

"After several weeks he resigned rather than further imperil the department. I placed in his stead a young reform worker, a lawyer, who was a prominent member of the Y. M. C. A. This attorney, Judge Lockridge, they demanded be also removed, and that in his place I should name a lawyer from Muscogee. * * * During the twenty-four hours that they thought I was going to concede their demands a notice appeared in The Oklahoman stating that 'the fight has stopped on the Department of Charities, and it will be provided with ample funds.'

"I was told I would be given 'all the money I wanted in the Appropriation Bill,' but when I refused to make the appointment I was left without money for office help, field help, stamps, or telephone. I furnished $350 of my own money and solicited additional money from my friends, and at this time the Department of Charities of Oklahoma is financed upon the money of humanitarians and philanthropists—a fitting reward for doing right in public office in a Christian civilization."

In the Fight to Stay.

Miss Barnard adds that the man whom she had refused to appoint was one of the first probate lawyers appointed by the Indian Department to "protect" the Indians under the new political plan. The press, too, was controlled against Miss Barnard, whose office, she says, has been visited by not a single reporter for two years, except from the country papers, while all other State officers are visited daily. This year, she says, an office at $5,000 a year for the next four years at Washington was offered to her if she would agree to "stay out of Oklahoma politics." She decided to stay out, by stumping the State and arousing the nation for funds and support in a "people's lobby" for her cause.

"I am in this fight to the finish," she concludes. "I want the people of the United States to stand by me until the hand of partisan politicians is wrested from the control of Indians affairs in Oklahoma and in the nation. Stand by me till the Department of Charities and Correction has sufficient funds to intervene in the courts of this State to protect every minor, Indian or white, who needs protection. Stand by me till a Legislature of Oklahoma is brave and honest enough to enact into law a probate procedure that will protect the property of Indian heirs. Stand by me till this farcical system of Federal political probate attorneys is driven from our fair State. Stand by me until the Congress of the United States makes appropriations ample to protect the Indians under its jurisdiction and restore to the civil service every employe under its direction."

ROCKAWAYS WOULD SECEDE

Business men of the Rockaways have decided that the time has come to secede from the city and establish a city of their own. The Far Rockaway Business Men's Association named a committee last night to study the proposal. It is planned now to submit the matter to the Legislature.

The sponsors of the plan point out that the Rockaways now pay annually in taxes to the city approximately $1,500,000, and they say that the section gets less than one-third of this back in improvements and salaries.

They think a city which might embrace all the territory between Hewlett and Rockaway Point might be managed very well on $1,500,000 a year, and believe the Legislature can be made to see it.

POLICE RAID HOTEL GERARD.

Night Clerk Arrested and Registers Seized for Evidence.

Detectives Jones and Ballie of Inspector Dwyer's staff early this morning arrested Otto E. Schoen, clerk of the Hotel Gerard, in Forty-fourth Street between Broadway and Sixth Avenue, on the charge of maintaining a disorderly house.

The arrest was made on a warrant issued yesterday by Chief Magistrate McAdoo after eight detectives had submitted affidavits charging that they had been accosted on Nov. 11 and Nov. 12 by two women living in the hotel. Eight hotel registers were taken with Schoen to the West Forty-seventh Street Station, where the clerk was bailed by John Renkin, one of the owners of the hotel.

1 KILLED, 26 HURT IN CHEMIST'S TEST

men was he and so no one could tell what caused the explosion, which was in the laboratory where Haaren was at work.

Factory in Ruins.

This room was in about the middle of that part of the second floor which would be included in the building at No. 113 where the various building numbers composing the works separated. The explosion blew out every window on both floors and wrecked the second floor so that it collapsed and fell in on the first floor. Every door was unhinged. Window sashes were sent sailing across the street. The walls tottered. Part of a side wall fell. Across the street the walls rocked so that the Building Department later questioned the wisdom of permitting tenants to occupy their rooms.

Wagon Thrown On To Auto.

Windows all over the neighborhood fell outward with a crash. A horse and wagon passing in Underhill Avenue was upset and toppled over on an automobile belonging to E. E. Wilkinson, President of the Wilkinson Company, makers of lamps, chandeliers, and shades, at the southeast corner of Underhill Avenue and St. Mark's Avenue, which adjoins the chemical works. George Layton, his negro chauffeur, who had stood beside the car, was blown across the street. Two men were flung against the walls of the tenements across the way.

In the office of Dr. J. B. Neary, at the northwest corner of Underhill Avenue and Prospect Place, diagonally across the street, every window was blown in and Christopher Grady, ill with pneumonia in a room on an upper floor, was thrown from his bed. Two women, Mrs. Ellen Stoltz and Miss Hannah Cunningham, in the tenement adjoining, at 115, were showered with broken glass and badly cut.

From every house for blocks around men, women, and children rushed in a panic into the streets. They saw a score of men lying senseless and wounded in the street, but only those who had been, by chance, at their windows in the tenement across the way had seen these men come flying from the chemical works through the windows and the doors, hurled as lightly as leaves on a breeze.

Second Explosion with Fire.

While hundreds gathered from all directions, the second explosion occurred, ripping and tearing what remained of the works and starting to life the inferno which taxed the efforts of Fire Chief Lally and all the men and apparatus which responded to two alarms.

Dr. Beckers, his left ear nearly cut off, staggered from the building and rushed into Dr. Neary's office. The physician, who had been thrown down himself by the concussion, quickly converted his office into a receiving hospital.

The din was terrific. Over the yells of excited people and the clanging of ambulance gongs, the whistles of fire apparatus and the shouts of the firemen, roared the voice of the flames, punctuated again and again by the sharp pop of exploding acids. And then, high above all other uproar, arose a cry of agony, a call for help that made even the firemen glance helplessly at one another. It came from the centre of the building, amid a pyrotechnical display wonderful for the variety of colors which the high-springing flames unfolded.

From the second floor the firemen already had pulled out Haaren and the other injured man, escaping so narrowly that the second explosion almost swept them from the ladders. All had believed then that the building was clear of occupants. But again came the cry, and then again and again, though a peep into the lower floor was now like peering in at the open door of a furious fire-box. To the firemen, accustomed to desperate places, it seemed that the whole interior was merely one huge fire in which nothing could live, and yet the cry was heard once more.

Firemen's Heroic Work.

Capt. John J. Foley of Truck 132 gave no order, but he glanced at his crew. Like one man they leaped toward the doors and windows. Some Deputy Chief shouted an order to halt—apparently only death waited behind the shaken front wall—but there was no stopping them. With a line of hose, writhing like a huge snake, in their grasp, they tumbled headlong over the shattered window sills.

Lally saw them go and ordered every stream of water turned in over their heads. They were advancing, for their own jerking line showed that. But each instant its forward leaps were shorter, and there were greater intervals between them. Then the quivering line halted, and a moment later Foley and his men tumoled out of the doors and windows, their faces blackened with smoke, their breath gone and all but overcome themselves. They could not progress a dozen feet, they said; no one could live inside.

Once more they heard the shriek for help.

Foley and his men lay mute where they had thrown themselves gasping for breath. But now more streams had been brought up. Lally had turned every effort to saving the man inside. They sprang up and tumbled in on one another's heels.

Outside the crowd watched once more the creeping hose and this time it didn't stop. Inch by inch it went forward till enough had passed from sight to tell the watchers that Foley and his crew were nearly at the back of the building. Over them streams of water were still sprinkled, thrown in at the upper windows so that the force might be broken, and presently the firemen reappeared. They were breathless and burned on hands and face, but among them they bore something that still cried out. But for the voice which, through a whole hour, never had been stilled, there was little to tell that it was a man.

Rescue of the Last Man.

The figure was terribly burned. Most of the clothing was gone. The left hand had been blown away at the wrist. The right hand, the face, the neck and arms were blackened by fire. The man was Adolph Wolters, still alive and still conscious. He had been caught beneath a five-inch beam, which had been part of the south wall. It had crushed his legs, but formed a support over which other débris piled like a tent, saving him from further crushing, and in a measure keeping the flames from him. He was half-drowned by the water which had made his rescue possible. He was hurried to the Cumberland Street Hospital, but there was little chance of his recovery.

Wolters was the last to be taken from the place. Just before he was removed Capt. Dominick Henry and Policemen Stark, Casey, and Baker of the Grand Avenue station had dug a man from the débris piled near the front of the building, and all the others, except the two on the second floor, had been blown from the building or been able to extricate themselves.

The very force of the explosion undoubtedly saved the lives of many by blowing them from the building, for the second floor collapsed almostt instantly, and only those who had been close to the doors before the explosion could have helped themselves.

Dr. Beckers was in the office conferring with Harry Gilfoyle and Frank Siegeler, salesmen, and several clerks. S. R. David, manager of the New England branch of the company, was just ascending to the second floor, and he saved his life by leaping from a window. In all there were some thirty-odd persons in the building, including Dr. Beckers, his twenty-six employes at the plant, and salesmen and outside men.

Blown Out of His Chair.

One of these was John Hartwiger, a foreman, who occupied a small cottage at the end of a lane running alongside the tenement adjoining the works. He was burned about the face and hands, but his first thought was for his wife and children in the cottage in the rear of the plant, and he rushed there. He found his family unharmed, though all windows in the house were broken and the front steps and porch were demolished.

Mr. Wilkinson had just returned from the bank with his payroll for the week when the explosion occurred. He was seated at his desk on the ground floor, and was blown out of his chair. He said he thought the shock was in his own factory, which was separated from the dye works only by his forge. He put his automobile at the disposal of the police and the ambulance surgeons when he found that Layton, his negro chauffeur, was more frightened than hurt, and the latter carried three of the injured to their homes.

Mr. Wilkinson made an inspection of his own factory after the fire had been put out, and while he found it little damaged, gave orders that his force of 200 workmen should take a holiday today until the Building Department could inspect the place.

Fire Marshal Thomas Brophy, after examining twenty employes and the owner of the factory, said:

"None of the men I talked to were able to tell the nature of the explosion, and it probably will be impossible to explain it until some of the walls have been torn down and the débris excavated.

"Within the last year there have been five fires at the works, including the present one. The police records show that the other four were due to chemical reactions. Whether the previous fires were due to experiments to learn the German process of making dyes my investigation so far has not showed."

Young Chemist's Work.

John H. Haaren of 134 West 121st Street, Manhattan, father of the assistant chemist, who died after being rescued from the laboratory, went to the destroyed building last night, and after an inspection there he said he believed the first and chief explosion had occurred in the manufacturing plant on the first floor. The man killed was 24 years old, his father said, and had been graduated last year from the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute.

"My son," he added, "had mentioned that his laboratory work included important experiments conducted by Dr. Beckers and his assistants, in which they were trying to arrive at the German process for making chemicals for dyestuffs, which were now impossible to obtain from Germany because of the war. He did not say much about the details, but we got the impression that they were working on a secret process which the company did not wish to become known."

Four hospitals sent ambulances to the chemical works. Drs. Pierson and C. M. Hazen went with the ambulance from the Cumberland Street Hospital. Drs. Rayfield and Wolfort and four internes from the Jewish Hospital assisted in treating fifteen of the injured on the street and took five of the more seriously hurt to that institution. Drs. Robert Lee, Charles Curtis, and B. Godvin took seven persons to the Holy Family Hospital. Dr. Maurice Leary, in an ambulance from the Swedish Hospital, assisted in caring for the injured on the street.

ENGLAND BACK TO NORMAL.

"Ready to Resume Business," Says Paish, Explaining Situation.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—Sir George Parish of London, in an address at the dinner of the Investment Bankers' Association of America tonight, asserted that all financial matters in England had been adjusted. "We are prepared," he said, "once again to resume business in the normal way."

Although the London Stock Exchange still was closed, Sir George said that one of the greatest obstacles to the resumption of business had been removed, and he hoped to see it reopen in the near future.

"The Stock Exchange," he said, "was caught with loans to bankers of nearly $500,000,000. Recently an arrangement was made to continue these loans as long as it is necessary, even if beyond the duration of the war, and to provide members of the Stock Exchange with fresh funds in order that they may carry on their business as usual."

"We are prepared to discount bills and I think in a short time you will find that we are prepared to do business in our stock markets as we usually do. There is, however, one matter that is unusual. The supply of banking money in London will, I am convinced, be as great as ever, but it will be obvious to you that the supply of capital in England cannot be as great as ever, at any rate, not for outside purposes. We calculate the savings of the British nation are some $2,000,000,000 a year. Last year we placed half of those savings in foreign countries.

"We are now engaged in the greatest war the country has ever had to fight, and it will be obvious to you that we shall need our savings to pay for that war. With the British nation carrying on its business as usual, there is no reason why its income should not be maintained, and if its income is maintained it will have the savings and the money with which to pay for this great war out of its income. This matter, I know, is of great importance to this side, as there is a great deal of anxiety lest we in England should be compelled to send you back a large amount of your securities. I do not think there is any serious danger of this. I think the utmost extent of the danger is that we may not be prepared to renew short-term notes of various kinds, railway notes, New York City notes and others."

SUFFRAGE CONGRESS BARS BLACKLIST

WORK NOT TO BE LIMITED

Constitutional Amendment Not to Absorb the Association's Efforts —Dr. Shaw to be Re-elected.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 13.—By a vote of almost 2 to 1 the convention of the National American Woman's Suffrage Association late today decided that its work before Congress during the coming year should not be limited to efforts to obtain the passage of the Bristow-Mondell Suffrage amendment to the Federal Constitution. At an earlier session the association decided by a decisive majority that its Congressional Committee should not conduct campaigns against candidates in any State without the consent of the suffrage associations in that State.

That the opposition to Dr. Anna Howard Shaw for re-election as President of the association had been dropped was revealed when nominations for officers were submitted to the Elections Committee. The time for presenting nominations expired at 8 o'clock tonight. Dr. Shaw's is the only name on the list as candidate for President:

The list of other candidates follows:

Second Vice President—Mrs. Desha Breckenridge, Kentucky.

Recording Secretary—Mrs. Susan W. Fitzgerald, New York; Mrs. Anne H. Martin, Nevada.

Treasurer—Mrs. Henry Wade Rogers, Massachusetts.

First Auditor—Mrs. Helen G. Miller, Missouri.

Second Auditor—Mrs. Nellie N. Somerville, Mississippi; Miss Zona Gale, Wisconsin.

Election of officers will be held next Monday.

The action of the association on these matters settled two of the most important questions before the present convention. Each had given rise to much division of opinion among the suffragists during the last few months and each has a significant bearing on plans for next year's campaign.

The debate on both issues was decidedly spirited and at times was characterized by factional bitterness. Much of the opposition to the administration plan of working before Congress for other measures besides the Bristow-Mondell resolution came from the "State's rights" suffragists.

Two Motions Presented.

Mrs. Harriot Stanton Blatch of New York, one of the leading champions of the one legislative measure plan, presented the initial motion "That the Shafroth amendment be not proceeded with by the National Association in the next session of Congress." A submotion, offered immediately by Mrs. Raymond Brown of New York, declared that "It is the sense of the convention that the policy of the National Association shall be to support by every means in its power in the future the amendment known as the Susan B. Anthony amendment; and, further, that we support such other legislation as the national board may authorize and initiate to the end that the Susan B. Anthony resolution may become law."

Mrs. Barton Jenks of Rhode Island moved to strike out the last sentence of Mrs. Brown's substitute.

Miss Kate M. Gordon of New Orleans, President of the Southern States Suffrage Association, spoke for Mrs. Jenks's motion, declaring she did not favor allowing the national board too great powers in initiating legislation.

"My idea of the object of the association," said Mrs. Medill McCormick of Chicago, Chairman of the Congressional Committee, "is that we want to pass national legislation to give women the ballot. Among the ways open to us to obtain the vote are the passage of the Bristow-Mondell resolution, which is similar to the resolution drafted fifty years ago by Susan B. Anthony, and which requires ratification by thirty-six States to become effective; to pass the Shafroth amendment, which provides for submitting the suffrage question to the voters of each State through initiative petitions, and to go before State Legislatures for amendments of the State constitutions. The Shafroth amendment is designed to assist the States to give women the ballot by going around the State Legislatures. The more suffrage States we have, the easier it will be to pass the Bristow-Mondell to a referendum."

Mrs. Funk's Appeal.

Argument in behalf of the Shafroth resolution was made by Mrs. Antoinette Funk of Chicago, a member of the Congressional Committee. She appealed to the delegates not to tie the hands of the committee.

"Many suffragists seem to think that the Shafroth amendment is a 'toboggan slide' into suffrage, but they are under a misapprehension," declared Mrs. Blatch. "One of my reasons for objecting to working for it is that our funds and workers are limited, and, besides, we will have to resort to the Susan B. Anthony resolution eventually to gain the vote. The Bristow-Mondell amendment gives us a chance to avoid the referendum, and, with the foreign element of voters in this country, I believe it is not well to risk our cause to a referendum

Miss Mary Winsor of Pennsylvania said that the Pennsylvania suffragists would support whatever policy the committee laid down. "Whenever the committee says 'blacklist' a Congressman we will 'blacklist' him," she declared.

Miss Burnham, also from Pennsylvania, however, declined to subscribe to what she called Miss Winsor's "sweeping approval of the Congressional Committee's actions."

Mrs. Grace Wilbur Trout and other members of the Illinois delegation declared emphatically their desire for a policy which would prevent the publication by the National Committee of information relating to Congressmen without the consent of the State associations.

Mrs. Medill McCormick and Dr. Anna Shaw, President of the association, both asserted that the Congressional Committee was designed to serve the State organizations and had no intention of attempting to overrule the State associations' wishes in its work.

Sharp replies were called forth from members of the Congressional Committee and their supporters when Miss Mabel Vernon, of Delaware, critic zed the committee. "There are only a few more States which would be helped by the Shafroth amendment," she asserted. "Why didn't the Congressional Committee get out in the campaign States and help them, instead of putting in their time on something that could not be accomplished in Washington?"

Shouts of "They did help" came from all over the hall, and Mrs. Funk and Mrs. McCormick were allowed to tell of the committee's work in the recent campaign.

Several Southern delegates said their States would not care to accept the Shafroth amendment, but would grant more quickly woman's suffrage through the States' Legislatures.

Mrs. Helen Hill Weed of Connecticut, "General" Rosalie Jones of New York, and Mrs. Francis Burns of Michigan were among the ardent advocates of the Bristow-Mondell measure.

Mrs. Jenks's amendment to strike out was lost by a viva voce vote, and Mrs. Brown's substitute motion adopted by a vote of 194 to 100.

A motion by Mrs. Trout authorizing the National Board to support a Federal amendment for a national initiative and referendum law was defeated.

After disposition of the legislation measures the convention voted to give seats to both the contesting Tennessee delegations.

The Southern delegates at a conference tonight decided to concentrate their efforts toward winning one Southern State for woman suffrage within the next two years. It was said Alabama probably would be selected. It is proposed to introduce a suffrage initiative petition in the next Alabama Legislature.

NEGROES REPUDIATE PRESIDENT'S CRITIC

Send Letters to the White House Saying Trotter Is Only Seeking Political Notoriety.

WILSON'S AID TO THE RACE

Recently Advanced Two Colored Employes—Others in Departments Alarmed.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Politicians were much interested today regarding the final outcome of the Administration's policy for the segregation of negroes in the Government departments, which led to the clash yesterday at the White House between President Wilson and W. Monroe Trotter of Boston, spokesman for a delegation of negroes representing the National Independent Equal Rights League. Telegrams and letters were received at the White House today from negroes repudiating Trotter, whose language gave offense to the President. Some of these communications were from negro employes of departments.

President Wilson is not in the least concerned as to the effect the Administration's policy may have on the national election in 1916. He told the delegation yesterday that it was a matter of entire indifference to him how the negroes of the country voted, provided he was convinced in his own mind that what he was doing was the right thing to do. The President, it was recalled today, has done much for the individual negro employes of the departments in cases where he believed that long and faithful service should be regarded.

Within the last few months the President signed orders advancing two negro messengers to clerkship grades because he considered that their loyalty to the Government deserved recognition. These men were Richard Green, for many years messenger to the Secretary of the Treasury, and Eddie Savoy, who has guarded the door of the Secretary of State for forty-five years.

Wade H. Carter of Oakland, Cal., employed in the General Land Office, sent a letter to the White House informing Secretary Tumulty that Trotter did not represent the opinion of the negro employes of the Government. Other letters intimated that Trotter was an agitator seeking political capital, and that hard-working and thoughtful negroes in the departments deplore the manner in which the question has been handled.

In some quarters the fear was expressed that the Equal Rights League would continue to agitate the subject by having the Administration's segregation policy discussed on the floor of the Senate and House.

RECOUNT ON LONG ISLAND.

Supreme Court Justice Jaycox at Riverhead yesterday granted the writ of mandamus asked for by Congressman Lathrop Brown and a recount of the ballots will be begun next Thursday. The unofficial figures give the Congress election to Frederick C. Hicks, Republican, by fifteen votes.

The canvass of the votes in the Fourth Assembly District of Queens has been completed by the Aldermen with this result: George Polhemus, 7,138; James Eadie, 7,068. Polhemus's plurality is 78.

HORGAN RESIGNS TO SAVE RICHARDS

MAN WHO EXPOSED SULZER

Writes to Bank Superintendent He Doesn't Want to Cause Further Embarrassment.

Eugene Lamb Richards, State Superintendent of Banks, announced last night that he had received and accepted the resignation of Matthew T. Horgan, an expert accountant who has been attached to the Liquidation Bureau. Owing to certain incidents in his past life, Mr. Horgan was made an issue in the campaign by John A. Hennessy, William Sulzer, and Gov.-elect Charles S. Whitman, all of whom severely criticised Supt. Richards for employing and retaining him.

Mr. Richards last night gave the correspondence which had passed between Mr. Horgan and himself. Mr. Horgan tendered his resignation on Nov. 5, two days after the election of Mr. Whitman as Governor. Mr. Whitman had severely criticised Mr. Richards and threatened to take steps for his removal largely on account of his employing Mr. Horgan. It is suggested by the letters made public that Mr. Horgan resigned in order to save his chief embarassment.

For the Department's Sake.

Here is Mr. Horgan's letter of resignation:

Dear Sir: I hereby resign my position in the Liquidation Bureau of the Banking Department, to take effect the 15th day of November, 1914. I do so fully conscious that there can be no possible criticism of the work that I have performed in the department. I am governed entirely by what I regard as the welfare of the department and my own welfare.

During my connection with the Liquidation Bureau the department and myself have been severely criticised for matters in no way concerned with my official work. Although such criticisms are unreasonable, malicious, and untruthful, I can no longer consent to a continuation of these attacks upon my family, myself, and upon your department.

As you know, I voluntarily expressed my willingness to resign when these attacks were made last Summer, and I certainly would have done so had my work in the Liquidation Bureau been the subject of the slightest criticism; but, inasmuch as there was no criticism of that work and as I felt that there could be no reasonable criticism, I continued my work until the present time. However, for the reasons above given, I now feel that it is due to you personally, to the department, to myself, and to my family that I be relieved immediately of my duties in the department. Respectfully yours,

MATTHEW T. HORGAN.

Horgan's Resignation Accepted.

Mr. Richards did not accept the resignation of Mr. Horgan until yesterday, when he sent him the following letter:

Matthew T. Horgan, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Your letter of Nov. 5 resigning your position in the Liquidation Bureau of the Banking Department, to take effect on Nov. 15, 1914, has been duly received.

I note your expressed desire to avoid further criticism of this department and of yourself by longer continuing your connection here, and it is for that reason that I accept your resignation. I feel bound to say, in justice to yourself, that in all matters pertaining to your official duties you have been both diligent and efficient. While you have been severely criticised for events claimed to have occurred long ago, you have at no time been charged with incapacity or misconduct in the performance of your official duties in connection with this department, nor can any one familiar with the facts make such a charge.

Realising, however, the importance of keeping this department free from public criticism, unjust or otherwise, and conceding your right to protect your name and your family from a further continuance of such criticism, your resignation is accepted.

Very truly yours,

EUGENE LAMB RICHARDS,
Superintendent of Banks.

Horgan on the Island.

The attacks on Horgan grew out of the fact that he at one time had been sent to Blackwell's Island on conviction of ill-treating his wife. He had also been charged with falsifying records in one of the city departments. These charges were openly made against Horgan at a meeting of depositors of the defunct Union Bank of Brooklyn, in the office of Mr. Richards at 61 Broadway.

Supt. Richards sent Horgan over to Brooklyn to investigate and the latter reported to his chief that the liquidation had been conducted in a wasteful manner and recommended reductions in the fees and salaries of those concerned aggregating some $30,000.

When the charges were made against Mr. Horgan he defended himself warmly, showing that his Blackwell's Island experience grew out of a matrimonial tangle which ended with the courts giving him a divorce and awarding him the custody of his two children. He also declared that he had been exonerated from the charge of falsifying records and that a certified copy of the court record embodying his exoneration was on file at Albany.

Sulzer's Friend and Enemy.

During the campaign John A. Hennessy made the charge that Supt. Richards sent Horgan to take charge of the affairs of the Union Bank in order to get hold of documents in the bank's archives seriously involving a high city official Mr. Richards denied the accusation and challenged Mr. Hennessy to produce proof of his charge, but Mr. Hennessy never met this challenge nor did he give the name of the city official. Later Mr. Whitman took up the hue and cry against the continuance of Mr. Horgan as an employe in the Banking Department.

Mr. Horgan went to Albany with Gov. Sulzer after having acted as a confidential agent of Sulzer at his New York law office in the 1912 campaign for the Governorship. His first employment was as an expert accountant for the Sulzer Committee on Inquiry. Later, when the Department of Efficiency and Economy was established, Mr. Horgan became the first deputy in that department.

He was the expert accountant for the Frawley Committee, of which Mr. Richards was counsel, and was active in adducing the proof on which William Sulzer was impeached and removed from office.

PRISONER STABBED IN TOMBS; MAY DIE

"Hudson Duster" Gangster Wounded Dangerously Under the Eyes of Keepers.

REFUSES ASSAILANT'S NAME

Supposed to be Result of Feud Within the Gang Over Disposition of Spoils.

Animosities arising from the division of spoils among members of the "Hudson Duster" gang cropped out yesterday in the Tombs, where several members are imprisoned for different offenses. Before the prison authorities knew of the hatred among the gangmen one prisoner was stabbed several times under the very eyes of the keepers and was taken to Bellevue in a critical condition.

The injured man is Richard Harrison, twenty-one years old, of 439 West Seventeenth Street. He has two bad wounds, one on his left elbow and one just below his left shoulder, near his heart. He retained consciousness after he got to the hospital, but efforts to wring from him the name of his assailant were unavailing. "I'll take care of him myself," he said.

There were about 125 prisoners in line, waiting to be taken to various courts, when the attack was made. Some of them had already passed through and Deputy Sheriff Miller was watching the others. Suddenly there was a scuffle at the back of the line and the sound of a body falling. The wounded man had made no outcry and Miller at first thought he was dead. At the feet of a prisoner known as "Kid Burns" lay a pen knife with a long sharp blade.

Miller shouted for help and several keepers ran up and held the prisoners back, while Drs. Maguire and Lichtenstein examined Harrison's injuries. He was taken to Warden Hanley's office and later an ambulance carried him to Bellevue.

Warden Hanley notified Deputy Commissioner of Correction Burdette G. Lewis, who went to the prison and began an investigation. All the prisoners were questioned but no one would tell. How the knife got into the Tombs, in view of the careful watch for weapons and drugs, is a puzzle to Lewis.

Late in the afternoon a bit of information reached Assistant District Attorney Walter R. Deuel, which caused him to send for several prisoners who were nearby when the stabbing occurred. He questioned them, not about the stabbing, but about a gun fight of the "Hudson Dusters" on Oct. 24 at Fourteenth Street and Eighth Avenue. It developed that one man who had been shot in the leg was arrested with several others after the gun fight for having a concealed weapon and was in the Tombs awaiting trial.

Mr. Deuel learned further that Harrison was near the scene of the fight. He was not among the gangsters arrested at that time, but twelve days later he was locked up with two others on the charge of stealing a truck load of drygoods consigned to Thomas F. Donnigan & Co. Rightly or wrongly, the gangster who was shot in the leg suspected Harrison of doing it, and for several days, Mr. Deuel said, he was looking for a chance to get even. The chance did not come until yesterday when Harrison and the other "Dusters" happened to find themselves in the same line on their way to court.

Suspicion for the murderous attack on Harrison has narrowed down to three men. The cases of these men will be held up pending further investigation and the outcome of Harrison's wounds.

REFUSES TO OUST REFEREE.

Justice Davis Sets Aside Charges Against Donnelly's Appointee.

Francis P. Burns, counsel for Dr. Anna Kuethe Walter, who is defending a suit brought for the annulment of her marriage to Herman Walter, a rich carpet manufacturer, applied to Supreme Court Justice Davis yesterday to remove James O. Farrell, who was appointed referee by Justice Donnelly. The suit was brought by the brothers and nephews of Mr. Walter, who alleged that he was incompetent to enter into a marriage contract. After hearing the lawyers Justice Davis refused to remove Mr. Farrell.

George Brister was the first counsel retained by Mrs. Walter. He had a contract with her by which she was to pay him 25 per cent. of the money received from her husband pending the action. Mrs. Walter was allowed alimony of $250 a month during this period. In an affidavit presented to the court yesterday Mr. Brister replied to an attack made upon him that he had unnecessarily prolonged the action. Part of his affidavit read:

"It appears by the evidence taken before a referee that because of repeated accusations against the integrity of one of the Justices of this court made to me by Mrs. Walter and charges that I was acting collusively with the attorneys for Mr. Walter's relatives and committee, I asked Mrs. Walter to pay me for my services and find another lawyer."

In contesting the application for his removal Mr. Farrell said that on Nov. 7 he telephoned to Mr. Burns to inquire about his fees that he and Mrs. Walter had promised to pay.

"Mr. Burns called," said Mr. Farrell, "and asked me to allow him to read my report, which was secret. I refused to do this, of course. By repeated questions he endeavored to get information from me as to the contents of my report. I declined to give it. Mr. Burns then told me he would not buy a pig in a poke."

Mr. Burns said he had called on the referee to discover what his report would be, so he could prepare the order for the court to sign, and that Mr. Farrell told him that was not the way the law was practiced.

The referee's report is ready to be filed.

GIRL SAVES WOMAN FROM SUICIDE LEAP

FOUGHT ON FOURTH STORY

The shopping crowds in 125th Street near Park Avenue were startled yesterday afternoon by the shrieks of a woman and, racing around into Park Avenue, they halted amazed in front of the apartment house at No. 1,811 where, from a window on the fourth floor, a woman hung out over the sidewalk, kept from falling only by the grasp of a slender girl who clutched the other's arm. It was the girl who screamed for help and the stunned crowd realized that the woman she held was struggling to break the girl's grip.

The woman squirmed and twisted, contorting her body and jerking spasmodically, so that each instant the girl who held her was yanked from side to side of the window and each instant her grasp made less secure. Several men started for the entrance to the house, but ahead of them were Policeman Doyle of the East 126th Street Station and Policeman Bligh of the Traffic Squad.

They ran to the fourth floor, found the door of the apartment unlocked, and rushed into the front room, grabbing the swinging woman just as the girl's strength was failing. She fell exhausted as her burden was released. The girl told the policeman she was Miss Julia Nigro, 18 years old, and that she lived in the rear apartment on the same floor. For some time, she said, Mrs. Ellen Kayser, a young widow, had acted somewhat strangely. Yesterday she heard Mrs. Kayser muttering to herself and entered her apartment to investigate. She saw Mrs. Kayser had climbed onto the window sill. Just as Miss Nigro clutched her arm the woman jumped and the weight of her falling body came heavily on the girl's arm. She had clutched Mrs. Kayser around the wrist, however, and she held her grip until she could reach down and catch some of the woman's clothing in her other hand.

GIBBS THREATENED OFTEN.

Judge Received Many Letters During White Slave Trial.

Judge Gibbs referred yesterday to the bomb outrage at the Bronx County Court House when he was discharging the jury for the present term.

"You have had a most extraordinary experience," he said. "For the first time in the history of the United States an attempt has been made to destroy a building housing the administration of justice. When I became County Judge I was under the impression that this was an unusually law-abiding community, but now I am satisfied that in this county we have to deal with some of the most vicious criminals of the country. The hand of God alone averted a terrible tragedy, planned by the men tried in this court or their sympathizers.

Almost from the first day, in which the trials of white slavers, gunmen and knife-carriers began in this court, I have been receiving threatening communications. I propose to pursue the same policy of dealing with the criminal element as heretofore, and no threats will deter me from imposing the maximum penalty on all crimes of an outrageous nature."

CITY BREVITIES.

Detectives Reed and Kiernan yesterday arrested Dominick Caputo, 21 years old, 205 North Eighth Street, Brooklyn. He was remanded in the Manhattan Avenue Court by Magistrate Nash on a charge of selling drugs.

Sampson Schreiber, 16 years old, a roofer, of 1,836 Washington Avenue, the Bronx, sustained a fractured leg yesterday when he accidentally ran his motor cycle into the rear wheels of an automobile wagon owned by the American Express Company.

Max Wertheim of 143 Norfolk Street and Rubin Mendelsohn of 47 Attorney Street, bakers, were arrested yesterday on complaint of Nathan Messing of 14 Lewis Street, who charged the men, out of revenge, had destroyed several thousand dollars' worth of bread the past few months by throwing kerosene on the loaves.

Inspector Faurot believes that two of five burglars arrested in Indiana recently participated in the hold-up of the Strand Theatre here on May 17 and got away with $7,000 in cash. Martin Mitchell, the night watchman, identified yesterday their photographs.

Laurence Binyon will deliver a lecture on "Japanese Prints—an Art of the People," to the Japan Society in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Monday, Nov. 30.

POLICE LAUNCH RAMMED.

A tugboat towing floats loaded with equipment of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad headed toward Police Launch No. 1 of the Harbor B station, which was at anchor in the East River in Hell Gate, opposite Ninety-sixth Street, at 10:30 o'clock last night.

Policeman John Friedenberg, the engineer, tried to lift the anchor in order to avoid the tug, and Policeman John Sheehan, the pilot, blew his police whistle. The tug veered to one side, but the first float behind it struck the launch. At the moment of collision Sheehan jumped aboard the float, but Friedenberg was knocked off his feet in the launch, which was not overturned, but broke loose and drifted down stream.

The tug stopped at East Eighty-sixth Street, put Sheehan ashore and sounded a distress whistle. Police launches and other boats started out in search of the police launch and found it drifting in the river opposite East Seventy-fourth Street. Policeman Friedenberg was taken off unconscious, but was soon revived and found to be not badly hurt.

LACKWATER AT NEWARK FIRE

Fanned by a high wind, a meadow fire swept into the Waverly district of Newark yesterday afternoon and set fire to five small buildings of the Waverly Paper Box Board Company in Weston Avenue. The loss is estimated at $50,000. The Newark fire fighters were hampered in fighting the blaze because of lack of water. Previous to the sounding of the two fire alarms, workmen of the paper plant had fought the burning meadow grass. By the time the firemen arrived huge piles of scrap paper were burning and the flames had communicated to the five buildings. The lack of water pressure seriously handicapped the firemen.

James C. Bogg, Superintendent of the paper company, complained that he had called the attention of Chief Paul J. Moore to the burning meadow grass two hours before the plant was attacked.

ECONOMY

Economy is based, first of all, on satisfaction. The "marked down" or "bargain price" dress is seldom real economy, because it seldom pleases.

But consider the true economy of a gown made to your individual measure—made after Fifth Avenue standards of style and quality, and, in addition, sold to you without the high retail cost of doing business. This is the economy dress-service we offer to the well-dressed women of New York.

Street, afternoon and evening gowns, made to individual measure, $18.50 to $55.00.

WOMAN DIES DANCING IN BROADWAY HOTEL

WEAK HEART, SAYS DOCTOR

Other Dancers, Thinking She Had Slipped on Waxed Floor, Laughed as She Dropped.

While dancing in the Palm Room at the Hotel Martinique, Thirty-second Street and Broadway, last evening, Miss Mabel Norton of San Francisco suddenly slipped through the arms of her partner, fell to the floor unconscious, and died of heart disease before Dr. Lewis, the house physician of the Martinique, arrived.

A score or more couples dancing at the time, thought at first that Miss Norton had simply slipped on the waxed floor, and were inclined to treat her fall as an amusing mishap.

Miss Norton's partner was Richard Cobert, chief engineer of the steamship Washingtonian, of the American-Hawaiian Line, now at the Bush Terminal. Yesterday afternoon he went to the Martinique for tea and dancing with Miss Norton and Mrs. Dorothy Kearney of 253 East Kingsbridge Road, the Bronx, whom Miss Norton had been visiting since last July. She had never complained of being ill. Mrs. Kearney said afterward, and appeared in high spirits all the afternoon.

Dr. Lewis gave the cause of death as heart disease, and Dr. Otto Schultze, Coroner's physician, who was summoned, agreed with him. Her heart must have been weak, they said, and unable to stand the strain of continued exertion. The police recorded the death as accidental and no one was held as a witness. Coroner Riordan gave permission to Mrs. Kearney to have the body removed to an undertaking establishment in East Twenty-third Street, where it will await shipment to San Francisco.

Mrs. Kearney said that Miss Norton, who was 35 years old, had worked as a clerk in a San Francisco business house before coming to visit her. Her parents, who live at 1,179 Pine Street, that city, were notified by telegraph last night. In Miss Norton's purse the police found $626, and she wore jewelry valued at $1,000, including several diamonds.

There was no more dancing in the Palm Room after Miss Norton's death. The night dancing in the Martinique is in the Dutch Room, and it opened at 10 o'clock as usual last night. Few who danced knew of the death of Miss Norton, for, although there was little excitement in the Palm Room at the time, most of those who saw her fall left immediately afterward.

BENNETT HEIRS WIN.

$158,000 Estate Will Be Divided Among His Relatives.

As a result of a report made yesterday by Transfer Tax Appraiser James J. Monahan, the estate of $158,000 left by Adolphus Bennett of Bay Ridge is to be divided among his relatives. Mr. Bennett and his wife were both found dead in their home at Shore Road and Seventy-ninth Street on Feb. 3, 1908. The aged couple had been ill for some time. As an important point to be considered in the distribution of the property, the question of which of the two died first was raised. Mr. Bennett left a will dated Oct. 16, 1907, in which he left all of his estate to his wife.

After an investigation, the Transfer Tax Appraiser reached the conclusion that Mr. Bennett died after his wife had passed away. By this finding, any interest the heirs of Mrs. Bennett might have had in the estate of her husband reverts to his heirs and next of kin. These are William R. Bennett, a brother; Mrs. Gertrude H. Suydam, Miss Katherine R. Bennett, and Mrs. Anna R. Howell, sisters, and the heirs of Mrs. Mary F. Furdy, another sister.

the harbor there, and the American Consul at San Luis Potosi has arranged to notify the Consul at Tampico so that Americans can withdraw to places of safety with the advance of the Villa army.

VERA CRUZ, Nov. 13.—Information received here does not indicate that the struggle between the troops representing Gen. Carranza and the army of Gen. Villa for the possession of Tampico will be nearly so great as when the Federal forces of Gen. Huerta were driven out by the Constitutionalists. The reports do point, however, to a preliminary contest on the railroad between San Luis Potosi and Tampico.

Gen. Villa's forces occupied San Luis Potosi yesterday without resistance, and 700 men were sent toward Tampico, where there is a garrison of only 300 men. Almost the entire defensive force of Tampico has moved toward the interior to meet the followers of Gen. Villa. They have with them twelve cannon, it is said, and a number of machine guns. Gen. Luis Caballero, commanding the forces at Tampico, said today that he could call to his aid additional forces from Victoria, nineteen miles southeast of San Luis Potosi.

Foreigners in case they are endangered by an attack may take refuge on merchant ships under direction of the American battleship Rhode Island, which is now in Tampico Harbor. There are now in Tampico 200 Americans, 300 British, 200 Germans and perhaps 1,000 Spaniards. No Mexican gunboat is at Tampico, but one is said to be at Puerto Mexico.

Special to The New York Times.

EL PASO, Nov. 13.—Villa has taken San Luis Potosi, the capital of the State of that name, without any opposition from the Carranza garrison. This gives Villa the key to the entire northern, central, and northwestern Mexico, including Saltillo, Monclova, Monterey and the other important towns. It cuts off Carranza's great source of supplies and revenue, as it is in the heart of the richest agricultural districts in Mexico.

Agents of Villa here say that Villa is moving his troops eastward toward Tampico.

THREAT TO DE LA BARRA.

He Gives Up Mexican Legation in Paris and Will Go to Switzerland.

PARIS, Nov. 13.—Francisco Leon de la Barra, the Mexican Minister to France, who resigned his post when Gen. Carranza assumed the Provisional Presidency of Mexico, has handed over the archives of the Mexican legation to Louis Quintanilla, who has been appointed to succeed him by the acting Government of Mexico.

After Señor de la Barra had transferred the Mexican Legation to Señor Quintanilla, he received a message from Isidro Favela, Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs in the Constitutionalist cabinet, speaking in the name of the de facto Government of the Republic, saying that Señor de la Barra would be held responsible for his immediate complicity in the usurpation of power by Gen. Victoriano Huerta.

To this communication Señor de la Barra replied as follows:

"I have given possession of the archives and the funds of this Legation to Señor Quintanilla. The accusation of which you speak in your message has no importance for me. My conscience is tranquil, and I have the fullest confidence in the opinion of my fellow countrymen. I hope in the near future for justice, peace and concord among good Mexicans under the guidance of true liberty, and that my country will now enjoy happiness after the present era of anarchy and persecution."

Señor de la Barra has taken a residence at Lausanne, Switzerland, but he will spend a good deal of his time in Paris.

STILL STRIVING FOR PEACE.

Prominent Generals Going for a Conference with Carranza.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 13.—A telegram from Leon says that as a result of an interview between Gens. Pablo Gonzalez and Eulalio Gutierrez the former has started for Mexico City en route to Cordoba.

At this city Gonzalez will be joined by Gens. Obregon, Lucio Blanco, Antonio Villareal, and Eduardo Hay, and they will confer once more at Cordoba with Gen. Carranza in an effort to compose the differences peacefully.

Acting War Minister Pesqueira said tonight he did not know of a skirmish with the Villistas at Lagos, but Gen. Pablo Gonzalez had received orders to resist an attack and, therefore, hostilities might be regarded as begun. Pesqueira added that the Zapatistas had been totally routed at Lixco, State of Puebla.

Gen. Obregon was asked this evening about a street rumor that Villa had been shot at Aguascalientes. Gen. Obregon said he did not credit the story, as he had been in telegraphic communication most of the day with Gen. Pablo Gonzalez, stationed at Silao, who would have been sure to know and tell him.

Gen. Obregon added the object of his conference with Gen. Gonzalez was to help to a pacific solution, and Gen. Gonzalez, who had been treating with Eulalio Gutierrez, designated by the convention as Provisional President, felt confident that further bloodshed would be prevented. Gen. Obregon himself was optimistic, and said he was working on a manifesto appealing for union and would issue it in a day or two.

El Liberal says editorially:

"That certain groups, backed by force, have exercised a formidable pressure in the convention is undoubted, and this is an explanation of why loyal and honorable soldiers were transferred temporarily into rebels and that many of them on escaping from the atmosphere of the convention have been rehabilitated, returning to the path of honor, and manifesting their unshakable loyalty to a just cause. The downfall of Citizen Carranza would signify a collapse of a fine edifice which the avenging revolution has raised on the débris of a plaster palace which treason reared for Huerta."

DEFENDS BOLTING GENERALS.

Carranza Agent Tells Why They Disavow the Convention.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The Constitutionalist Agency here received the following telegram today from Gen. Carranza in Cordoba:

Please deny the false reports that the National Bank in Mexico City has been sacked by a mob led by Constitutionalist soldiers. Nothing of the kind ever happened. The city is tranquil and peaceful.

All of the leading Generals of the Army, headed by Obregon and Gonzales, remain loyal to me. The so-called convention at Aguascalientes now has but a few followers of Villa supporting it.

The agency gave the following to the press:

"The delegates who attended the convention in Mexico City adjourned its session to Aguascalientes on the request of Villa, with the sincere purpose of establishing harmony in the ranks of the Constitutionalists. Villa, on the contrary, as events have shown, attended with the one end of enlarging his domain of military control and of bringing Zacatecas and Aguascalientes into his dominion.

"As soon as the convention convened in Aguascalientes the delegates were subject to insults from Villa's soldiers, who occupied the city at night. The sessions of the convention were never freely conducted because the pit and galleries were crowded with Villa's soldiers, who constantly threatened the delegates unless they acted according to their wishes.

"Under these conditions the greater portion of the military and gubernatorial authorities entitled to representation withdrew the authorization that they had given their representatives to attend the convention. Notwithstanding this fact the convention, backed by the bayonets of Villa's soldiers, insisted that these delegates take part in the deliberations of the convention although they had actually withdrawn from it.

"The convention never had the authority to accept the resignation of Mr. Carranza because it was never before them. Carranza suggested to the convention a means of solving all the personal difficulties by proposing that Villa and Zapata retire, and that he would then follow their example.

Neither the Aguascalientes convention nor any other has the power to name a Provisional President of Mexico.

"No one can fail to understand the farce that was perpetrated at Aguascalientes under the power of Villa when it is seen that the so-called President Gutierrez was to remain in office only until the 20th of November. This action was merely a Villa strategy to gain control of San Luis Potosi, of which Gutierrez was Governor, and of the garrison of Saltillo, commanded by his brother.

"All this became glaringly clear to the delegates at the convention when they saw that instead of Villa being retired he was made Commander in Chief of the armies.

"In the light of these circumstances the delegates who had attended the convention in good faith, but who had not been allowed freedom of discussion during its deliberations and whose very lives had been threatened could not and should not have indorsed the actions of a convention dominated by force of arms. When they pledged themselves to be bound by the acts of the convention these delegates were ignorant of the traitorous intentions of Villa. Every Mexican patriot applauds their stand today and their loyalty to Carranza.

"The American public is not familiar with these facts because of the false reports that were sent out concerning the sessions of the convention."

Fear for Americans Held in Mexico.

NOGALES, Ariz., Nov. 13.—Friends of T. W. Carraway, J. C. Wilson, and J. R. McInery, Americans arrested a month ago by Mexicans and charged with complicity in destroying railroad bridges, appealed today to the State Department at Washington to safeguard their lives. The three men, after being held in jail a month in Nogales, Sonora, were taken to Hermosillo yesterday under a military guard.

Lorimer Pleads Not Guilty.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—Ex-Senator William Lorimer pleaded "not guilty" today to a charge of wrecking the La Salle Street Trust and Savings Bank, of which he was part owner.

CROWD CHASED REAL LAMBS

The sight of a big dray load of lambs in Forty-second Street, between Fifth and Madison Avenue, a little before 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon was enough to attract the interest of those who were just issuing from the numerous eating places that line the way, but when the dray bumped into a wagon, and the tailboard was thrown out, traffic soon began to suffer from congestion.

The lambs saw the opening as soon as did the humans, and two of them jumped and landed in the street. The driver began to yell, the rest of the lambs began to fill the air with baas! and the two that had escaped began to frisk and gambol just as if De Wolf Hopper had happened along with a crook and told them to do it.

Lots of husky citizens, fearful that an oncoming trolley car would get in the way of the lambs, or for other reasons, gave chase. The lambs started in the direction of Broadway, but before they got to Fifth Avenue they caught sight of some of the new-fangled skirts, and with hopeless bleats they surrendered to their pursuers.

DR. FLOWER GETS A RESPITE

Judge Delays Sentence Pending Inquiry into Latest Scheme.

Following a conference yesterday in the District Attorney's office between Dr. Richard C. Flower and William F. S. Hart, representing several persons who were interested in one of Flower's schemes, Justice Davis in the Criminal Term of the Supreme Court granted a delay of sentence on Flower, who pleaded guilty to grand larceny last week.

At the time of his arrest, Flower was exploiting a heating system invention in Toronto, Canada. Mr. Hart represents several of the stockholders in the company and an investigation will be made by an expert into the merits of the system in an effort to learn whether there is a chance of any one getting any money back.

W. J. CUMMINS TO TESTIFY.

Convicted Banker to be Asked About Sullivan's Life in Sing Sing.

William J. Cummins, former head of the Carnegie Trust Company, will be asked today to tell about the Sing Sing life of David A. Sullivan, ex-President of the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of Brooklyn. Cummins and Sullivan, whose skyrocket financial careers ended in the wrecking of both banks, are fellow-prisoners in the penitentiary.

Assistant District Attorney Louis Goldstein has been assigned by Mr. Cropsey to interrogate Cummins in Sing Sing. District Attorney Cropsey has decided to have the ex-banker brought to Brooklyn on a writ and compelled to appear as a witness before the Kings County Grand Jury if he refuses to answer questions put to him at the prison.

Mr. Goldstein at Sing Sing will hear also the story volunteered by John Conway, the Auburn convict, who notified Mr. Cropsey that he was willing to tell what he knew of conditions in the penitentiary at Ossining. He is now in Sing Sing, having been taken there from Auburn for the convenience of Mr. Cropsey.

Miss Louise D. Burkhardt, confidential secretary to Sullivan, continues to be the star witness before the Grand Jury. It is now understood that the District Attorney has a record of several mortgages that Sullivan retained and which, Mr. Cropsey contends, should have been turned over to the Union Bank.

Other witnesses before the Grand Jury yesterday were William J. Watson, confidential clerk to ex-Warden McCormick; Frederick Burkhardt, brother of Miss Burkhardt; David A. Sullivan, Jr., Father Cashin, chaplain at Sing Sing. Father Cashin once was taken home by Sullivan in the prison automobile, and he was asked about this incident.

RIKER-HEGEMAN Reliable Drug Store Service

Special at $3.85

This chance to get the famous Kenney Four-Stream Needle Shower at the unheard of low price of only $3.85 has been the sensation of New York.

Men-folk—women-folk—children—all are going wild over this new kind of all-metal, no-curtain shower—it is more the rage than the new dances were last winter.

Puts all overhead or curtain style showers to shame—beats a plain tub bath forty ways—makes bathing downright fun.

It's a real energizer—whether you use hot or cold water, you come out of your bath chock full of energy and hustle—feeling fit as the proverbial fiddle.

Kenney Needle Shower

Regular Price $6

Fits Any Bath Tub—Needs No Curtain

The daily enjoyment of a Needle Shower has heretofore been strictly a rich man's luxury.

Before the invention of the revolutionary Kenney Shower, needle showers cost $200 to $300—required a special shower stall—couldn't be used on a bath tub at all.

But now—if you turn in the money-saving coupon below at any Riker-Hegeman Store—only $3.85 will give you and all your family this rich man's way of bathing.

A Single Week's Use Worth the Price

The Kenney Shower—the only Four-Stream Shower of any kind and the only curtainless needle shower for the home bath tub—has never before sold for a single cent less than $6.

It's a better shower in every way than any overhead shower costing two to five times that much. Thousands have said that a single week's use is alone worth the full price.

It is being installed in many of the most expensive hotels. It is used by thousands of families who could afford to pay ten to twenty times $6 if a bigger price would buy a better shower.

And now you can get one for about what a makeshift rubber spray ordinarily costs—only $3.85—only a penny a day for a little over a year—less than you pay for your daily papers.

Mail Orders Filled

If not convenient to call, simply mail the coupon and $3.85 together with postage, and a Shower will be delivered by Parcel Post. Add 8 cents for the first 100 miles, 16 cents for 250 miles, 20 cents for 500 miles.

5. Only Shower Women and children can really enjoy—no mussy rubber cap needed to keep the hair dry.

FINDS GIRLS' PRISON PLACE OF 'HORRORS'

State Commissioner Attacks Methods and Conditions at Bedford Reformatory.

CITES HARSH DISCIPLINE

Investigator Was Imposed Upon, Says Superintendent—Dr. Davis Denies Cruelties in Her Term of Office.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Nov. 13.—Dr. Rudolph F. Diedling of Saugerties, a member of the State Commission of Prisons, in an official report which he has just made, attacks conditions in the State Reformatory for Women at Bedford Hills, Westchester County. Dr. Diedling criticises severely the disciplinary measures of the institution. He asserts that the institution is failing to accomplish the purposes for which it was established, and in support of his assertion describes the system of punishment which he found in vogue, the study of which was the chief object of his visit of Inspection. In his report Dr. Diedling says:

"I found one girl, 18 years of age, in one of the cells in Rebecca Hall. She told me she had been placed in a sitting posture on a mattress on the floor with her hands handcuffed behind her back and fastened to the iron-barred door, and her feet, extending along the floor, bound by shackles, and that she was kept in this position continuously for more than two weeks, during which time she was given nothing to eat but bread and water.

"Other girls told me of similar experiences, and assured me that such punishments were not infrequent. The Superintendent, who overheard these complaints, did not attempt to defend this barbarous treatment, but offered as an excuse that she merely continued a system that was in vogue when she assumed charge.

"Of the 460 inmates in the institution on the day I was there (Oct. 28) nearly one-fourth were in what is called Rebecca Hall. I understood from the Superintendent that the girls committed to this building are confined in cells during the greater part of the day and are allowed out to work or exercise a short time each forenoon.

"The girls were in their cells at 2 P. M., and nearly all of them were in bed. On being questioned by me they claimed it was so cold they could not remain in the cells without being chilled, and therefore they went to bed. Just think—these girls locked up from noon until the next morning! Such disciplinary measures would obviously be unnecessary were the inmates provided with work such as would distract them from the breaches of rules and regulations which are quite naturally entailed by enforced idleness. A reform here is imperatively needed.

Like "Mediaeval Dungeon."

"Apart from Rebecca Hall is another building known as the Disciplinary Building, a one-story brick structure used expressly for the purpose of a jail or lock-up. It contains ten cells, arranged in a solid block, five in a row, back to back, with a corridor on three sides. Each of the cells has an opening on the corridor and these openings are guarded by double doors, the inside one made of iron bars and the outside one of solid wood. No other openings except a small skylight in each cell are provided to admit light or air, and not only the inside doors but also the solid outside ones are habitually kept closed while the cells are occupied.

"The inmates, therefore, are deprived of a proper supply of air and of all light except that which enters through the small skylight. This is a condition of affairs better suited to one's ideas of a mediaeval dungeon than to a disciplinary building in a modern reformatory for women in the great State of New York.

"Absolutely the only furniture ever allowed in these cells is a mattress slipped in at night and taken out in the morning, as not even a chair is allowed, the inmates being obliged to stand, sit or lie on the bare floor during the greater part of the time."

Miss Davis Denies Cruelties.

A copy of Dr. Diedling's report was shown yesterday to Miss Katharine B. Davis, who was superintendent of the Bedford Reformatory for thirteen years before becoming Commissioner of Correction ten month ago. In so far as it reflected upon her management of the reformatory, she denied its accuracy. Referring to Dr. Diedling's statement that the present superintendent of the reformatory, Miss Mary Rebecca Moore, "did not attempt to defend this barbarous treatment, but offered as an excuse that she merely continued a system that was in vogue when she assumed charge," Commissioner Davis said:

"In the thirteen years that I was superintendent of the reformatory there were no cruelties in the institution. What has happened in the last ten months I do not know, but if the previous system was followed there has been no cruelty during that period of time."

Continuing to discuss the report, Miss Davis said:

"Rebecca Hall is an antiquated building and should be replaced. The Disciplinary Building is also not what it should be, but it is a better building than the confinement house of the Workhouse on Blackwells Island. Dr. Diedling, it seems, has carefully avoided telling of the good things about the reformatory. He has failed to mention the new hospital and the seven new cottages, all of which, when completed, will be thoroughly modern and well equipped buildings. The cottages will cost $411,000 alone."

Says Investigator Was Deceived.

Miss Moore, the present Superintendent of the reformatory, who succeeded Commissioner Davis, in discussing Dr. Diedling's report, began her reply by branding as absolutely untrue the story of the girl who said she was bound in a sitting posture for two weeks.

"That girl simply told Dr. Diedling an untruth," Miss Moore said. "No one in the reformatory has ever been subjected to the treatment she complained of. Although we have many difficult cases in the reformatory, and at times have to employ stern measures, we have never resorted to cruelty of any kind.

"And I want to say here that I never overheard any of these stories the girls told Dr. Diedling, nor did Dr. Diedling ask me any questions. He did not tell me what kind of a report he intended to make and he did not ask me for an explanation of anything. He seems to have made the great mistake of believing in full every story told him by the six or seven worst girls in the place. They might be expected to lie to him, and he should not have taken their unsupported word.

"The girls in Rebecca Hall were in bed the afternoon Dr. Diedling saw them, because the day was very cold and one of the girls had broken a window in the corridor of the building. Naturally the building was cold that day and the girls went to their beds because they could be more comfortable. They had not, however, retired for the night. There is no such thing as a bread and water diet in the reformatory. No matter how incorrigible the girls are we always give them plenty of good food. Some of the girls are deprived of their shoes when put in the Disciplinary Building because they make noise with them when allowed to wear them. Each girl, though, is supplied with a pair of warm, heavy woolen stockings."

Miss Moore said that Dr. Diedling had based his report on the untrue stories of the seven worst girls among the 460 in the institution. Also, she said, he declined to inspect the whole institution and question other girls, saying that he wanted to see only Rebecca Hall and the Disciplinary Building, the two most inadequate buildings of the institution.

EATON SENT TO SING SING.

Robber of Women, Shot Trying to Escape, May Serve Long Term.

Herbert J. Eaton, who was shot by detectives in attempting to escape following his arrest for the theft of $1,500 in jewels from Mrs. Gertrude Pike of 648 Riverside Drive, and subsequently pleaded guilty to the theft of $1,500 in jewels from Marie A. L. Kohn of Sheepshead Bay, was sentenced to Sing Sing yesterday by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions for not less than two years or more than nine years and six months.

Eaton made a practice of cultivating the acquaintance of wealthy women and then robbing them. He was indicted for both the Pike and Kohn robberies, but Mrs. Pike was ill in a Connecticut sanitarium and did not appear to press her charge. Miss Kohn was in court yesterday and identified the jewels which were found in Eaton's possession. Eaton was in the hospital for nearly a month before he was taken to the Tombs. For a few days it was thought he would die from the wounds he got trying to escape.

GAINED BY LOSING JOBS.

Sailors Convicted McNamara, and Fees Exceeded Wages They Gave Up

James J. McNamara of Weinhold & McNamara, shipping employment agents, was found guilty yesterday in the Federal District Court before Judge Rudkin of having taken fees from sailors for finding them berths. Three sailors testified that McNamara had charged them $2 each for getting them jobs on a sailing ship bound for Australia.

The court fined McNamara $250 on each of the three counts and ordered one of the witnesses for the defense, William J. Skarrett, held in $1,500 bail pending an investigation of his evidence by Assistant District Attorney Julian Hartridge.

The three sailors received more in witness fees than they would have earned in a roundtrip on the ship.

ELECTION MAY SPLIT DEMOCRATIC CLUB

Collector Malone to Run Against John M. Riehle for President.

TAMMANY MEN MAY QUIT

Judge O'Dwyer's Health Precludes Another Term — Club Losing $1,000 a Month but Is Wealthy.

Another stormy chapter may be added to the history of the National Democratic Club, which was founded by Richard Croker, and which occupies a pretentious site on Fifth Avenue in the shadow of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

In the election of officers, which will occur at the annual meeting of the club on the first Tuesday of December, there will be two tickets in the field. One ticket will be headed by Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port of New York, a pronounced pro-Wilson and anti-Tammany Democrat. The other ticket will be headed by John M. Riehle, an insurance broker of 68 William Street, who in all probability will have behind him the Tammany element in the club.

It is expected that there will be developed all the bitterness which marked the meetings of the club last Spring, when, on initiative taken by its President, Chief Judge Edward F. O'Dwyer of the City Court, an attempt was made to read Tammany Leader Charles F. Murphy out of the club for non-payment of dues.

Mr. Riehle entered the race against Collector Malone only after Thomas F. Smith, Secretary of Tammany Hall and a member of the Board of Governors of the club, had declined to become a candidate for President. Until a few days ago it was understood that Chief Judge O'Dwyer, who had been confined to his home by illness for many weeks, would be a candidate to succeed himself. There was a strong element in the club which did not favor his re-election for many reasons. They asked Mr. Smith to enter the race against him. Mr. Smith replied that even though he felt he would prevail in the fight he could see no glory in defeating a sick man and strongly urged united support for the re-election of Judge O'Dwyer.

At a meeting of the Governors, which was held last Tuesday, Judge O'Dwyer put in an appearance for the first time since his illness and said that his physician had absolutely prohibited him from accepting a renomination as President of the club or any other place on the ticket.

Under the constitution of the club, the President names the Nominating Committee. Ex-Tax Commissioner Thomas L. Feitner, who had stood with Judge O'Dwyer throughout the anti-Murphy fight, was named as the head of a Nominating Committee composed entirely of Judge O'Dwyer's friends. The committee has not as yet made its nominations, but under the constitution will be compelled to post the names of its candidates on the bulletin board at the clubhouse not later than Monday. Mr. Malone has declared his willingness to run for President and his friends expect him to win.

Since the fight on Mr. Murphy was started, the club, which was composed very largely of Tammany men, who joined it in the Croker days, has been run at a loss of from $1,000 to $1,200 a month, it is said. It is rarely that more than a corporal's guard can be mustered in the spacious and elaborately furnished clubhouse any night.

Judge O'Dwyer, when he assumed the Presidency, did so with the pledge that he would add 1,000 to the membership of the club. There have been only twenty-two new members elected since he took hold, including Mr. Malone, Fire Commissioner Robert Adamson, and Stuart G. Gibboney. There have been many resignations and a number of the Tammany members are said to be awaiting only the word of Tammany leader Murphy to quit the club in a body and form a new social organization with an atmosphere more congenial.

The total membership now is about 700. The club is wealthy and the equity in its Fifth Avenue property is unusually large for an organization of its kind. Recently the club had an offer of $650,000 for its property. The mortgage against it is only $125,000.

THE RIVER
A Great Story of the New West
By EDNAH AIKEN

THE author has taken for her subject the truly great idea of the reclamation of the American Desert which in a large degree depends on the control of the all but untamable Colorado River, and subsequent extensive irrigation.

Thoroughly American in theme, ambitious, many-sided, and yet unified.

There is an absorbing plot in which one strong man is set against another, the wife of one of them is shown in her restless vanity and scheming, and a fine young girl comes to her own in the love of a man worthy of her.

The River stands out from among current fiction as a novel that has the right to be heard.

Harold Bell Wright's latest novel is far ahead of any previous one, says The Albany Argus. It is a strong story of the triumph of high ideals, says The Baptist Standard. It is that rare event, says The Portland Oregonian, a pure love story.

THE EYES OF THE WORLD

The description is poetic and rich in literary merit, says The Sacramento Bee, while the story is full of action and purpose. The Pittsburgh Chronicle says it is the sort of book that has long been needed. The Raleigh Times: Who can foretell the far-reaching influence of such a book! The Salt Lake Tribune: It would be impossible for anyone to read it without being benefited. The Grand Rapids Herald: It is the most intense and dramatic novel of today.

WHEN IS SPECULATION INVESTMENT?

Hearings are now being held at Washington to discover how to administer a law against speculation in cotton in such a manner as to promote speculation. Since the law was passed conditions have changed. What was thought wicked and destructive when the law was passed to stop dealing in cotton futures under guise of regulation now seems desirable as matter of patriotism and public policy. The price for cotton when the law was passed was about twice what it recently has been, and since the exchanges are closed it is impossible to charge them with the crime of 1914. The argument now is that if only the exchanges were open a great many more people would "buy a bale" as a matter of business than could be induced to do so as a matter of charity, with only an afterthought regarding possible profit. But the new law is in the way. Repeal would be too sharp a reversal, and too plain an admission of error in legislation. It is the promoters of the law who are desirous that it be administered in a sense contrary to the intention when it was enacted. As often happens, they are in favor of the law but against its enforcement.

The hearings are even more farcical than the method of legislation. Officials issued 12,000 invitations, and none of those interested in this enormously popular law responded. The only attendants were from this city, the same wicked speculators against whom the law was directed. They were not familiar with the law, and those framing the regulations which were the subject of the hearing were not familiar with the methods of business which they seek to reform. The regulations themselves are as much above criticism as Mr. BRANDEIS's method of running railways. Nothing was said to be the matter with them except that they were not framed in accordance with methods of trade which the law could not alter. For example, the new way of investing in cotton, instead of speculating in it, requires the exact weight of the cotton covered by the contract to be specified. But bales are not packed of even weights, and will not be so packed however many laws are passed. Hundreds of thousands of bales are the product of small planters, and their ways of culture are various. There are even variations at the gins. The custom has been to deal in multiples of bales, the unders and the overs averaging the contract weight. If one contract is to be taxed 2 cents a pound, and the other is to be free, there is a discrimination, which is what was intended to be prohibitory.

The same penalty is imposed on contracts made upon foreign exchanges, with the intention of preventing the practice of buying in one market and selling in the other. The broad-minded authors of the law think—or thought—that the American market ought to suffice for the American dealers in an American product. It was enormously patriotic in pretense, and its effect upon the American market was not thought through. It now appears that foreign business is on both sides of the account, and that the stopping of one side stops the other also. New York is the producers' market, and Liverpool is the consumers' market. The connection is so intimate that as a matter of regular business each is necessary to the other. There is no way of compelling Liverpool business to be done under the American method, and Americans will find methods of dealing with Liverpool in the Liverpool method if the regulations are insisted upon. The Government also will charge 60 cents a bale for grading cotton, whereas the exchanges hitherto have asked only 25 cents, but that is only one of several minor details which altogether turn the law which was so eagerly desired into an object of aversion to its beneficiaries. They thought they would not be happy until they got it, and now they want something else. They thought the speculators were their enemies. Now they are praying the speculators to do what the law forbids them to do, except under regulations which have too many teeth.

The situation regarding the cotton exchanges is like that regarding the Administration's good Cotton Trust. What is wanted at present is the encouragement of "beneficial" speculation, meaning speculation which will raise the present price of cotton. If cotton became too high to spin from the consumers' point of view "beneficial" speculation would be that which would reduce the price. It is not possible to be serious about such legislation or such views of law. Law is something universal, permanent. Business is one of the most changeable of human affairs, and a matter of individual judgment. Permanent rules cannot be made to apply satisfactorily to changing conditions. Laws cannot enact opposite conditions in the same wording, and especially cannot make black white and white black at the same instant. It is absurd to legislate any price either up or down. Laws should regulate only conduct, but this law concerns itself not with matters of morals, but with matters of business detail. Such matters are best left to those who understand them, whereas the very intent of this statute is to enact perfection about something which is so little understood that opinions shift with conditions. A weathercock law is a nuisance.

FACTIONAL WAR CONTINUES.

In the latest news from Mexico or touching Mexican affairs there is the usual bewildering variety of statements concerning the plans of the commanders of contending forces. A state of civil war exists, but that state has existed since October, 1910. CARRANZA, who is very near Vera Cruz and safety, still keeps up the pretense of being the head of a Government. Mr. DE LA BARRA, ousted from his post of French Ambassador by CARRANZA, and accused of complicity in the usurpation of HUERTA, declares that he hopes for "justice, peace, and concord in the near future for good Mexicans." Mr. DE LA BARRA has been accounted a good Mexican, and he proposes to take up his residence in Lausanne. Many other Mexicans, who desire justice, peace, and concord, are living quietly abroad until one or the other of the contending factions proves itself capable of governing the country. There is no present prospect that any Mexican faction now in sight will get that far.

NEW JERSEY'S POTTERIES.

Newark is to have next February what its projectors call a "small, intensive exhibition" of one of New Jersey's industries. The pottery and brick manufacturers of that State turned its clays, in the year 1912, into products valued at $17,212,286. The comparatively small exhibition space of the Newark Museum Association in the house of the excellent Public Library will be given over to a complete exhibition of New Jersey pottery, tiles, terra cotta, and like products. The idea of a small but comprehensive exposition of one industry is comparatively new here, but German manufacturers have profited greatly from such displays of manufactures. The large exhibitions have lost much of their old appeal.

The importance of the New Jersey potteries has been only dimly realized. Now when circumstances have lent a new significance to the phrase "Made in America" this Newark plan is timely. While the idea underlying it is frankly commercial, it will have an educational value not to be disputed. The china and porcelains of Trenton, the terra cottas of the Amboys, for instance, will become better known all over the country. Small exhibitions of the products of one industry are likely to be common hereafter, and there are many States in the Union in which two or three could be profitably held every year. A more practical method of "booming" an industry could not be devised.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

It is to be hoped that when the Constitutional Convention meets it will be guided by a spirit less partisan than the last one. That convention regarded itself as having been elected chiefly in the interest of the Republican Party. It did, however, accomplish some important and beneficial work, the most important being the separation of State from municipal elections. What stood out from everything else in its record, however, was its provision that no matter how much the population of New York and Kings might outweigh that of the rest of the State, they should never have more than half the representation in the Senate. Other things of less note were its removal of the $5,000 limit from damage verdicts in accident cases, the safeguards it threw around naturalization, its prohibition of convict labor, and its consolidation of minor courts and creation of intermediate courts.

The shackles placed on the representation of this city in the Legislature constitute the reason why we are going to have a Constitutional Convention next year instead of later. Mr. MURPHY thought the State was going Democratic and that if a Constitutional Convention were elected it would go in with the rest of the ticket, and would repeal this burdensome provision; hence the convention was ordered. He happily chose the year of a Republican landslide for this strategical move.

In this he repeated history. Under the provision for a convention every twenty years one should have been called in 1887; but the politicians were afraid of it, and kept on postponing it until 1893, when a Democratic Legislature ordered one. They had just carried the nation by a landslide, and thought themselves sure to control it. The Republicans thought so, too, and nominations for delegate went begging and were given as mere compliments. Then came the great Republican landslide in the State, due to the Maynard scandal, and the astonished Republicans found themselves in control of everything in sight, convention included. It was an unexpected gift of the gods, and they turned it to such good account that New York City has been hamstrung in the Legislature ever since. Constitutional conventions seem to be extra-hazardous risks for Democrats.

The new convention, strongly Republican as it is, cannot be expected to alter the provision whose existence was responsible for its summons. It need not be partisan in other things, however. It has before it a number of serious problems, foremost among which is the short ballot, and nearly all of them are matters on which partisanship is uncalled for. Presumably the fifteen delegates at large will steer the convention, and they are men in whom the public has confidence. None of them is either narrow-minded or short-sighted, and in the twenty years since the convention of 1894 public affairs have come to be looked at in a less partisan and larger way.

MR. ROCKEFELLER'S EXAMPLE.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER'S prowess in the nice art of knitting brings back memories of those old times when little boys who were not very strong were taught by their mothers to knit reins. At one time it was definitely the fashion to knit reins when you were getting over scarlet fever and measles, but that was when people kept the same wallpaper on their walls through thick and thin diseases. Knitting mufflers is not harder than knitting reins, hence no doubt its popularity as a form of relief work. There is no reason that men should not take up the burden as well as women. Many of them have just as sober thoughts of little children and their mothers under the lash of Winter.

Already at certain clubs and restaurants the women employés are using every spare moment for their muffling. Why not the head waiters, why not the butlers in private houses, why not the chauffeurs, why not all classes whose leisure intervals hang heavy on their hands? Any computation by a college graduate would show how many stitches could be counted upon from these different professions, and we should be getting nearer and nearer to the elimination of that inequality of the sexes which is so trying. Nor is there any necessity for confining the efforts of the men to a charity, however worthy. Let them get some fun out of their efforts. Let them set themselves as a goal the creation of such a skull cap as the one worn by Mr. FUGGER in HANS MALER VON ULM'S portrait of him in the Altman Collection. It is only in such ways that our native handicrafts can be revived. Mr. ROCKEFELLER'S example may bring about the most interesting results.

NATIONAL OPINION.

We cannot easily realise the difficulty experienced by the ordinary Englishman in getting at "American opinion" concerning the war. English opinion, even British opinion, is practically integral. The people of German and Austrian birth and parentage now in England, a rough estimate has placed them at a hundred thousand, are recognized as "the enemy alien" and play no part in any discussion of national feeling. But the composite population of America puzzles the foreign reader. He finds a poem in one of the papers calling England "the serpent of the sea," and it grieves him. Recourse to the American Who's Who would have told him that the author was born in Munich. The latest issue of The Spectator contains a group of quoted comments that are properly headed "Cross-Currents in America." An Anglican clergyman writes that every one in Massachusetts is anti-German, a professor of mathematics in "Hertford," Conn., speaks of American sentiment for England as "very strong here," a letter from Boston reports a meeting at which some German professors and an Irish-American spoke "in bitter denunciation of England and sympathetically "toward Germany"; instances of individual "pro-German" feeling are cited as coming from other cities. A correspondent who signs himself "John o' Groat" speaks of "the basic qualities of national character" that are "common to Britain and the States."

A woman writing from Maine, "one "of many Americans as English in "blood as if born in England," puts the point in a way to reconcile many apparent inconsistencies: "Being an American," she says, "is not a mat-"ter of birth or race, but of heart's "desire."

Taking it thus, the nations must feel that our national opinion is not governed by whether one nation or another is engaged in war, but whether right and justice are in conflict with opposing forces. The desire of the heart that brings foreigners to this country is the desire for opportunity, and opportunity only can be guarded by just government. National opinion in America is on the side of just government.

BERNARD SHAW ON THE WAR.

The articles by GEORGE BERNARD SHAW on the European war, which will begin in THE SUNDAY TIMES tomorrow, will arouse even a larger measure of attention and discussion than might have been expected when their publication was first announced. The natural expectation would be that the celebrated master of "paradox" would treat the subject now uppermost in the world's mind in his accustomed ironical manner. But his mood is sincere, he does not gird at the war, he expresses his personal view of the causes and conduct of the great conflict with comparatively few of the literary whimsicalities in which he has been wont to indulge. That the view is distinctly individual and peculiar to SHAW may well be urged by all who do not agree with him, but it will be accepted by many as a fair statement of the case from the standpoint of the multitude of people in the modern world who do not accept the traditions of national greatness and are inherently opposed to militarism in all its expressions.

In the first installment Mr. SHAW discusses the vital subject of Junkerism in England as well as in Germany. All the Junkers, in his opinion, are not in Prussia. He finds them in the British Cabinet and the House of Lords. There is no need to commend any articles by SHAW to American readers. His "Common Sense About the War" will be eagerly read.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Machines, Too, Are Maltreated.

While war makes more wasteful and extravagant use of men than of any other "material," its reckless destruction of property values sometimes seems to reveal its insane quality even more clearly than do its homicides. That is presumably due to the curious fact that we are all the time rather more careful of "property" than of human beings, at least to the extent that both more willingly and more often do we make systematic efforts in utilizing for its protection the resources of science and the powers of the law.

At the present time, for instance, there is in progress a campaign by Federal and State officials against an epidemic among cattle, and it is a campaign the like of which is still to be seen against any one of several diseases to which humanity is subject, though they, too, could be as easily and promptly conquered by a resort to similar measures. To do it, however, would still be held an intolerable interference with personal liberty—the liberty to die as we please—and that this is held a precious one by many is shown by the survival among us of a minority, by no means negligible, of people who bitterly resent compulsory vaccination, though its beneficial effects have long been beyond reasonable question.

But war, being a form of madness, is not careful about or with anything. A striking illustration of this is the way it treats motor vehicles. These, in civil life, because of their great cost, usually get the tender handling their delicacy demands, and in return for it they give service fairly well proportioned to the expenditures their purchase and maintenance involve. War also has seen the utility of the motor car in its various forms, and the purveyors for the various armies are buying vehicles of this sort in enormous numbers. Once in the field, however, they are used in a way to disgust as well as grieve anybody with a proper appreciation of machinery, and as a result, it is said on good authority, when a motor truck of the very best construction is in the hands of soldiers engaged in active military operations, what an insurance man would call its "expectation," meaning its lease of mechanical life, is just one week. And even that depends on its escaping destruction by gun fire.

A Skillful Exertion of Pressure.

It illustrated the persistant and apparently irresistible tendency of irrelevant questions to intrude themselves into the "teacher mother" problem, that the Mayor was asked whether he didn't think a teacher with a husband able to support her should retire and let some self-dependent woman have her position. That, the Mayor replied, was a "collateral" question, and he refused to be diverted from what he said was the one point at issue—the right of teacher mothers to a leave of absence.

That was wise, but it would have been still wiser, perhaps, had the Mayor stuck to the contention that the Board of Education has only one duty—that of getting and keeping the most efficient teachers it can. Its members, as such, have no concern with, and should not consider, the status of teachers as individuals in greater or less need of earning money for themselves. The public schools are institutions the sole purpose of which is to give to children the best instruction attainable. That they also provide a living for the teaching force is purely incidental, and confers no "rights" on either the married or the celibate, or at any rate none that is not a direct consequence of efficiency.

This is, of course, a narrow view to take of what is, after all, a part of the whole social situation, but it is the only one the board can safely tak and the attempts to force others upon it are not the less ill-advised and injudicious merely because those making them talk much and loudly about the sacredness of motherhood. Motherhood is indeed sacred. Nobody denies it. Nevertheless there are many tasks with the performance of which it, as everybody knows, is to a greater or less degree incompatible.

The majority of the School Board have hitherto been, and still are, of the opinion that teaching in the public schools is one of those tasks. The Mayor evidently inclines to the opposite opinion, and he is bringing to bear upon the Commissioners a gentle but firm pressure which, whatever one may think of its probable effect, one cannot help admiring, so adroitly politic is its exercise and so skillfully is it calculated to avoid the hot quarrel in which a less tactful man with the same purpose would inevitably find himself soon engaged.

Credulity's Limits Are Passed.

Some of us who found it, if not easy, at least possible, to believe the story of the Russian picket boat that sacrificed itself to save the more valuable unit in Russia's naval force lack the credulity required for accepting as authentic the order or address which, according to a dispatch from Petrograd, the Kaiser recently sent to his troops in East Prussia.

This remarkable document, reduced to its bare bones, is to the effect that having beaten the French on one side and the Russians on the other, it behooves every patriotic German to help save his country from ruin by joining in a last desperate stand against its onrushing foes. Even Mr. CHESTERTON, firmly as he believes in the capacity of Germans to be illogical and to put contradictions in the same sentence, would hesitate to charge the Kaiser with naiveté like this or to see even the simplest of his soldiers reading such an appeal with straight faces.

It is a fairly safe assumption, therefore, that some Russian romancer with more humor than the majority of his class either wrote the whole address out of his own head, or else that he so manipulated its original phrases as to make them—well, amusing.

Explaining Domestic Tribulations.

According to the report just made to Mayor MITCHEL by his Committee on Food Supply through the Chairman of its Executive Committee, the present complaints about the cost of living are in considerable measure due to the incompetency of many housekeepers either to buy food or to prepare it to the best advantage.

This incapacity, the report says, is most prevalent among the women of two widely separated classes. One of them consists of the daughters of poverty, whose only training before marriage has been in shops and factories, and who therefore enter upon the conduct of a household with less than no preparation at all. The other is made up of those born to wealth, or in circumstances of the kind called comfortable, and allowed by injudicious parents to grow up without instruction or experience in managing a home. The consequences in both cases are extravagance in buying food materials and waste in using them.

The remedy suggested is a further emphasizing of domestic training in the public schools. That, if well done, will obviously help to relieve the evils so plausibly described, but one inclines to wonder if they can be so easily and simply cured.

MRS. REID'S HOLDINGS.

She Has Increased Her Interests in The Tribune Since Husband's Death

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you permit me, as counsel for Mrs. Whitelaw Reid and also for The Tribune, to correct some inaccuracies contained in the brief article in today's issue of THE TIMES regarding the account filed by Mrs. Reid as executrix of Mr. Reid's estate in the Surrogate's Court of Westchester County, and particularly to those contained in the headings.

The article states that, in her account as filed, "Mrs. Reid noted the sale of Securities of The Tribune Association amounting to $205,000," and the headlines read, "Sells Tribune Bonds. Widow of Whitelaw Reid Reduces Her Holdings in Newspaper." As a matter of fact, instead of reducing her holdings in the newspaper, Mrs. Reid has, quite independent of what she received from Mr. Reid under his will, very substantially increased her interests in The Tribune, so that today she holds considerably more of its securities than was held by both of them at the time of Mr. Reid's death. The Tribune securities, amounting to $205,000, the sale of which your article states Mrs. Reid noted in her account, and on which these headlines were based, were very old mortgages on The Tribune Building, originally held by the Seamen's Bank for Savings, and later taken over by Mr. Reid, and which, in closing the estate, Mrs. Reid thought it best to turn back to that bank. HENRY W. SACKETT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is interesting to note the effect which the great war has already had upon the vernacular. Not only has the fan's jargon become military, (that was to be expected,) but the most casual remarks of our more every-day speech are interspersed with expressions which would have been unintelligible six months ago. For example, the "scrap of paper," which promises to be classical. Can it be more easily forgotten than the Gordian knot or the sword of Damocles? Again, for a man to have fought "like a Belgian" would have meant nothing in June. In July it implied not only determined valor, but a fine patriotism never associated with the Trojans. Then, to take another task, a man looking for something with which to compare a massacre is not half so apt today to say a "second Bartholomew's" as a "second Louvain."

In the British press we read repeatedly of the Huns. The twentieth century barbarian has overshadowed his brother of the fifth century for all time.

We are in the fourth month only of a war which may last for years. At its end the world's material wealth will have been depleted immeasurably. Millions will have been consumed in property, in shot and powder. Millions of men will have died. For those who survive little will have remained but their languages, tongues that have been enriched by a thousand and one new and bitter and ironic connotations. For that, and for that alone, they can thank Prussedersey.

A Confederate Submarine.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I notice in a recent number of your paper statements about the submarine boat being practically an American invention. Then you give the credit to J. P. Holland, who, you state, built his boat in 1877.

I wish to state that I believe the first practical submarine was built in Mobile during the war between the North and the South. I saw this boat while it was being constructed, I think in 1863. (I was a boy belonging to an infantry command in the Confederate Army.)

This boat never made an attempt to go to the northern fleet in Mobile Bay, but the inventor of her (Lieut. Dickson of the Twenty-first Alabama Regiment of Infantry) took her to Charleston, got up a new crew, and went with her, he being in command, and sank a United States man-of-war in Charleston Harbor, the Housatonic. The submarine was never seen again, and it is thought that she was lying under the big steamer that she destroyed, so the credit belongs to the Confederate States for building the first submarine. A. C. DANNER.

Starving the Railroads.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I want to express the appreciation of your editorial articles on the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I have no doubt the great bulk of your readers feel, for, notwithstanding the "politico-demagogic" belief that downing the railroads means votes, the thoughtful part of the community realizes that the starving of the railroads is a fatal mistake, and that the commission is inflicting a great wrong not only upon the railroads but upon the entire country. Keep up the good work. W. D. F.

AN ORGANIZED ARMY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In a recent number of THE TIMES you remarked editorially that no one political party could capitalize and monopolize, as an issue, the dangers of our military unpreparedness as illustrated by the events of the past three months in Europe. I cordially approve your comments; the matter is national, not partisan.

If we hope to win at football we assume, without question, that organization and team work of the players must be brought to the highest point of efficiency possible. War is a vast contest in which success depends on the same two elements, which must be developed in time of peace—a fact to which ninety-five per cent. of Americans appear to be oblivious. No mere wonderful example of team work and efficiency has ever been shown than that given by the German Army since Aug. 1: not a detail has been overlooked or neglected, and it has taken the next three most powerful nations of Europe to stop Germany's advance—if stopped it be.

In enacting military laws our Congress has always dealt in terms of number of men and of regiments, not in the tactical units by which war must be prosecuted. The smallest such unit is the division, which is not provided for by law, and which must be improvised after the trouble has begun, by assigning regiments and officers, catch as catch can, hunting for artillery, wagons, mules, food and forage, and often forced to fight while getting ready to fight.

It is true that by Executive order we have three improvised divisions, no one of which is complete and no two of which are alike. As a matter of fact, we could with slight additions to present authorized units of the army organize a complete field army (the new name for the old army corps.) For the benefit of the non-technical reader may I define: A division is the command of a Major General; in our service it is made up, theoretically, of three brigades (nine regiments) of infantry, one brigade (two regiments) of field artillery, one regiment of cavalry, a battalion each of engineers and signal corps, and four each of field hospitals and ambulance companies; war strength about 20,000. A field army normally consists of three such divisions and some additional troops, usually a division of cavalry, a brigade of heavy field artillery, and probably a brigade of infantry.

In units of regiments needed for a field army we would need:

Thirty regiments of infantry: we have just thirty.

Twelve regiments of cavalry: we have fifteen.

Nine regiments of field artillery: we have six.

Five battalions of engineers: we have three.

Fife battalions of signal corps: we have them.

Fourteen each, ambulance corps and field hospitals: we have seven each.

Assuming that Congress will see the advisability of such a co-ordinated, effective organization, as demonstrated and pleaded for by our Chiefs of Staff for years, only two material things are needed to complete and create an effective field army: More field artillery, only three regiments. Second, the recall to the United States of all organizations on foreign service.

To make the latter possible another policy must be substituted for that now in effect, by which the local military forces charged with the care of our over-sea possessions, the Philippines, Hawaii, Alaska, and Panama, shall be troops in no way belonging to any field army we may have; the necessary garrisons in each case should be determined and made permanent for its own particular place and work, and identified by local regimental names and numbers.

BELGIAN WORKS OF ART.

Dr. Bode Does Not Favor Proscription Lists by Germany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As unpleasant insinuations have been appearing recently as to Dr. Bode's wishes or intentions with regard to the disposition of the works of art in Belgium, and possibly France as well, I beg that in justice to him you will allow me to state his own sentiments on the subject, as nearly as possible in his own words. In the October number of Kuenst and Kuenstler was published an article by Dr. Emil Schaeffer on "War Indemnity in Works of Art," giving a list of the works of art owned by the Belgian State and municipalities which he thought should be handed over to Germany. I translate the following from Dr. Bode's reply to this article, which was published in the Berlin Lokal-Anzeiger of Oct 8:

"The undersigned declares that he holds quite the opposite opinion regarding the retention of works of art in the enemy's country. With proscription lists, such as exist for France in the imagination of Ugo Ojetti, and as Herr Schaeffer has thought them out for Belgium, I have no sympathy whatever. On the contrary, my conviction is that all civilized nations ought to retain the creations of their own art and the works of art which legitimately belong to them, and that it is our duty to protect the monuments of a hostile country just as we should our own. * * *

It was precisely in order to save the works of art in Belgium for the Belgians that the present writer recommended the sending of one of our museum officials to Belgium. Since that time Director von Falke has been working zealously to insure the safety of the treasures in that country, acting in behalf of the Belgian Government in common with our military authorities, who, before his arrival, and in spite of the fact that the conduct of the populace was a violation of the law of nations, were doing what they could for the preservation of the monuments, even with danger to themselves, in both Belgium and France, especially at Rheims. The endeavors of the Berlin museum authorities will be directed toward seeing that, after a victorious ending of the war, Germany does not follow the example set by England in the removal of the Parthenon sculptures, and by France under Napoleon I., in plundering the artistic treasures of nearly every country in Europe.

In these words Dr. Bode has placed himself on record in the most emphatic manner that he could, and, believing as I do that they are entirely sincere, I think we need feel no uneasiness as to the ultimate fate of the paintings in Belgium if he has a voice in the decision. EDWARD ROBINSON.

Belgian People Grateful.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As a reader of your paper and being a daughter of Belgium, I have read and see with great interest all your publications and illustrations in regard to my native country. The sympathy which has arisen during the last few weeks all over the United States for the starving Belgians, and the evidence of the fact of the present movement of supplying these starving people, who without any fault or intrigue have been the victims of circumstance, is really great, and will be a never forgotten evidence of the generosity, humanity, and the open heart of the people of the United States, and will stand forever as a permanent monument in every Belgian heart.

Coming to this country a short time before the outbreak of hostilities for the purpose of visiting my two married sisters, and being marooned here without any news from home and having a brother who is a Lieutenant in the Belgian Army, no one can better appreciate the generous and never-to-be-forgotten movement which has taken place in behalf of my unfortunate compatriots. In the measure that the animosity for our annihilators shall grow, so shall increase our esteem and admiration for all Americans, considering them as the real saviors of so many starving people. Knowing the hospitality of the Belgian people, permit me to say that they will repay the generosity of this country to the fullest extent at the first opportunity. MRS. ANNE POLET

TAXI AMENDMENT HEARING.

The General Welfare Committee of the Board of Aldermen gave a public hearing yesterday on the proposed amendment to the public hack ordinance which will compel all motor taxicabs operating on the public streets of the city to take out licenses and come under the rates passed by the Aldermen several months ago.

William H. Barnard, President of the Mason-Seaman Transportation Company, of which the Yellow Taxicab Company is a part, said the proposed amendment would be confiscatory and would practically put his company out of business.

He said that while the company maintained several hundred cabs as public hacks, on telephone or hotel calls, they also maintained several hundred other private machines which operated under call and which cost far more to maintain than the so-called public cabs, and, therefore, justified an extra charge of ten cents a mile above the rate for public cabs.

Commissioner of Licenses George H. Bell maintained that the private service was not as good as the public service and asked that the hearing be adjourned to give him an opportunity to produce proof of what he said. "I can bring proof," said the License Commissioner, "that this proposed amendment will be of inestimable benefit to the people of the city who use taxicabs."

"Pass it and you will put us out of business," replied President Barnard.

Counsel for the Hotel Men's Association argued against the amendment and said there had been no complaint of the charge for private service, while drivers and owners of independent taxicabs said that it would work a benefit to them and to the city.

MGR. DUNN AS CHANCELLOR.

Appointed to Office Bishop Hayes Held—Father Myhan Transferred.

The Very Rev. John J. Dunn, diocesan director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, has been appointed chancellor of the New York Archdiocese, succeeding in that important office Bishop Hayes, who held it for many years. Mgr. Dunn comes from St. Gabriel's Parish, on the east side, and before taking up the society work was attached to St. John the Evangelist Parish on the upper east side. Under his direction the society, working chiefly for Catholic foreign missions, has put the United States next to France in amounts of annual gifts to Catholic Church world extension.

The Rev. Thomas F. Myhan, for twelve years pastor of St. Ann's Church in East Twelfth Street, has been appointed by Cardinal Farley, the pastor of the important parish of the Blessed Sacrament, Broadway and Seventy-first Street, succeeding there the late Mgr. M. A. Taylor.

Father Myhan is a native of this city, and was for a time secretary to the late Archbishop Corrigan, and earlier assistant at historic St. Peter's in Barclay Street. The Blessed Sacrament parish on the upper west side numbers 7,000 persons.

GOVERNORS WANT POWER.

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 13.—Complaint that Governors as a rule do not have sufficient power to remove State officers and were therefore subject to adverse criticism because of the acts of subordinates, was voiced today at the Governors' Conference by Gov. Elias A. Ammons of Colorado and other State Executives. Gov. Ammons declared that recent industrial difficulties in Colorado ran the State deeply in debt, destroyed much property, and cost more than 200 lives, all because other State officers were not amenable to the desires of the Governor and defied his orders.

Govs. Joseph M. Carey of Wyoming, William Spry of Utah, and S. V. Stewart of Montana protested against what they termed lax methods of regulating shipment of tuberculous cattle.

Special to The New York Times.

Parker today granted an order for the recount of the votes in Bergen County upon the application of Randolph Perkins, counsel for ex-Senator John D. Prince, Republican candidate for Congress in this district, who was defeated by Congressman Hart.

E. C. BENEDICT LOSES POINT.

Demurrer In General Rubber Company's Suit Overruled.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday affirmed the judgment of the lower court in overruling a demurrer of E. C. Benedict in a suit instituted against him by the General Rubber Company to recover $185,000. The case now will go to trial before a jury.

The General Rubber Company's complaint alleged Mrd. Benedict, as a Director, was cognizant of the misapplication of its funds by Harold J. Hutter, its agent at Para, Brazil. This $185,000, the complaint says, was used by Hutter in the Moju Rubber Company, which was organized and backed by the defendant when he visited Brazil. The Moju company failed.

COLORED FEELINGS.

My friends are scarce,
My foes are many:
Joys, blessings, hopes—
I haven't any.

I hate myself, and you, and you,
On those sad days when I feel blue!

I have no foes—
Have had them, never;
My friends are many—
And have been, ever.

I love the whole wide world, I think,
On days when I feel—well, say, pink.

LURANA SHELDON.

TO MAKE FUNSTON A MAJOR GENERAL

Vera Cruz Commander to Fill Vacancy When Gen. Wotherspoon Retires on Monday.

SCOTT NEW CHIEF OF STAFF

His Promotion and That of Gen. Bliss Are Also Listed—Funston Passed Over Many Times.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—Announcement was made by Secretary Garrison this evening that upon the retirement of Major Gen. W. W. Wotherspoon next Monday, Brig. Gen. Frederick Funston, commanding the United States occupation force at Vera Cruz, would be promoted to the rank of Major General to fill the vacancy. This action will prevent a resumption of attacks in the Senate on nominations for the grade of Major General which have been made in recent years. Considerable feeling has been aroused among Senators who maintained that Gen. Funston had been made the victim of discrimination in promoting over his head officers junior to himself. Gen. Funston has been a Brigadier General since April 1, 1901, and for years has been at the top of the list.

Announcement was made also that Brig. Gen. Hugh L. Scott, the present Assistant Chief of the General Staff of the Army, would be appointed Chief of the General Staff to succeed Gen. Wotherspoon, and that upon the retirement of Major Gen. Arthur Murray on April 29, 1915, Brig. Gen. Scott would be promoted to the grade of Major General. It was announced by Secretary Garrison that Brig. Gen. Tasker M. Bliss, who is in command of the troops on the Mexican border, would be appointed chief of the Mobile Army Division of the General Staff, and that upon the retirement of Major Gen. William H. Carter on Nov. 19, 1915, the vacancy would be filled by the appointment of Gen. Bliss.

Secretary Garrison said that Gen. Funston would remain in command of the occupation force at Vera Cruz until it was withdrawn, and that Gen. Bliss would be retained in command of the military forces on the Mexican border for the time being.

Upon the promotion of Gen. Funston the vacancy in the list of Brigadier Generals will be filled by the promotion of Col. Henry A. Greene of the Tenth Infantry. The vacancy caused by the retirement of Brig. Gen. Ralph W. Hoyt will be filled by the promotion of Col. William A. Mann of the Infantry, now on duty with the General Staff. The vacancy in the list of Brigadier Generals caused by the promotion of Gen. Scott will be filled by the promotion of Col. Frederick S. Strong of the Coast Artillery.

All these changes were decided upon by President Wilson and Secretary Garrison at a conference today. In selecting Colonels for promotion to the rank of General the rule was followed by promoting in each case a Colonel of the branch of the service to which the general officer whose place he was selected to fill had belonged.

There has been a revival of interest recently in the case of Gen. Funston, and it was evident that if he was again jumped in making the promotions strong opposition would develop in the Senate. Gen. Funston was 49 years old last Monday. He has been retarded in obtaining promotion heretofore through the fact that he was younger than most officers who had attained that high rank and also by the circumstances that he was appointed to the regular army as a Brigadier General from the volunteer forces.

Gen. Funston won his appointment as a Brigadier General in the regular service through his sensational capture of Emilio Aguinaldo, head of the Filipino Revolutionary Government and Army. He had served in the Cuban revolutionary army prior to the war with Spain and went to the Philippines as Colonel of the Twentieth Kansas Volunteer Infantry. He became a Brigadier General of volunteers in 1899 and was serving in that rank when appointed to the same rank in the regular army. He was then only 35 years old, but President McKinley found that the only two grades in the regular service to which he could make appointments from civil life or the volunteers were Second Lieutenant and Brigadier General, and Funston's age and service entitled him to a higher reward than a Second Lieutenantcy.

Gen. Scott, who will become Chief of Staff of the army next week, is a noted Indian fighter. He saw much active service in the Philippines and was in command of troops at the Mexican border when he was promoted to be a Brigadier General and assigned as Assistant Chief of the General Staff.

WOMEN TEACHERS HISS MISS STRACHAN

District Superintendent, Criticising the Teacher-Mothers, Arouses Storm at Meeting.

MISS RODMAN SUSPENDED

But Both She and Mrs. Wagner Will Present Themselves for Duty at Schools on Monday.

Miss Grace Strachan, District Superintendent of Schools in Brooklyn, who endeared herself to the women teachers of the city by effecting the passage by the Legislature several years ago of the Equal Pay bill, was jeered at and hissed last night by a group of 400 or more of these women teachers and their sympathizers who assembled in the auditorium of the Washington Irving High School to hear a discussion of the teacher-mother question.

Disapproval of Miss Strachan's expressed views was so pronounced that the Chairman, Prof. Howard Woolston of the College of the City of New York, formally apologized for the attitude of the hostile part of the audience. Miss Strachan, however, was not perturbed. She thanked the Chairman for his intercession and then replied:

"I expected a hostile demonstration and came prepared for it."

The meeting had been called at the instance of the League for the Civic Service of Women, and it was generally known that both sides of the question raised by the dismissal by the Board of Education of teacher-mothers would be heard. There were thirteen speakers on the platform, including Miss Strachan, and a number of them, all speaking against the action of the Board of Education in dismissing teacher-mothers, had been heard before Miss Strachan's turn came. When she took the platform she scanned the audience critically and commented on the fact that it was the first time in her life when she must expect an unfriendly reception from teachers.

Referring to the charges preferred against Mrs. Lora M. Wagner, the Staten Island teacher, whose suspension was ordered several days ago because of absence from school to bear a child, Miss Strachan said that she would have voted with the majority in the Board of Education for her suspension if she had been a member of the board. Immediately the hissing began. Her own observations, she said, were based on experience of many years and the study of the 1,000 teachers and the 34,000 children directly under her supervision, she said, gave her reason for believing that the Board of Education had acted properly.

"And if the women of the city were to vote on the question," said Miss Strachan, "95 per cent. would stand by the Board of Education."

Children's Welfare First.

The welfare of the 700,000 children in the public schools, Miss Strachan argued, and not the welfare of a handful of teacher-mothers, was to be considered first in the teacher-mother controversy. The city, she said, "hired" women to teach, and expected efficient services from them.

Miss Strachan stopped at this point and her next sentence gave rise to the most pronounced hissing of the evening. She weighed her words carefully as she said:

"Women teachers, as well as other teachers, contract with the city to teach and it is a part of the contract to maintain a good physical condition for the faithful performance of duty, continuous performance of duty. To undertake a second contract, I think, is unwise and is an immoral thing."

"Immoral, immoral," was echoed all over the room, above the hubbub of disapproval. In a moment Miss Strachan went on:

"I believe it is immoral," she said, "because a teacher is pretending to serve two masters."

Miss Strachan regretted the notoriety given to the few teachers who had been suspended after giving birth to children. There was no reason for the newspaper criticisms, she said. The system maintained and the taxpayers had been well served by the Board of Education. She looked for an amicable settlement of the teacher-mother question, she said, but hoped that no iron rule would be passed to hold for all future cases. Each case, she said, should be viewed on its individual one and should be viewed on its own merits with efficiency as the guiding standard. Married women with children, she said, should be allowed to make new applications and should be treated just as unmarried teachers.

There was one member of the Board of Education on the platform who agreed with Miss Strachan's views. He was John Martin, who at other times has been at odds with the Brooklyn Superintendent.

Dr. Ira S. Wile, another member of the board, in a vigorous speech attacked the board for its action and held that married teachers should receive leaves of absence for the care of bearing children. He attacked the board as being inconsistent. A third member of the board, William G. Willcox, while leaning to the view that applications for leaves of absence should be allowed and that each case should be considered separately by the board, would not commit himself definitely. He announced that the question would be officially investigated by a special committee, and that any change of policy would be retroactive.

Speakers Assail Board.

Other speakers were Mrs. Marion B. Crothen, Mrs. Charlotte Perkins Gilman, Miss Fola La Follette, Deputy Commissioner of Correction Burdette G. Lewis, Prof. W. P. Montague of Columbia University, and Miss Henrietta Rodman, all of whom talked in favor of leaves of absence for teacher-mothers.

Interest centred in Miss Rodman because of her suspension earlier in the day by order of Supt. Maxwell of the public schools on charges of gross misconduct and insubordination. She was cheered many times during the evening. Miss Rodman in private life is Mrs. Henrietta De Fremery, and she is so listed on the payroll of the Board of Education. She is a teacher in the Wadleigh High School, and has been very active in the case of teacher-mothers suspended from duty. She has shown particular activity in the case of Mrs. Wagner.

It was announced at the Board of Education yesterday that Miss Rodman's order of suspension had not been served, but that it would be served before Miss Rodman could present herself for duty on Monday morning.

When Miss Rodman heard this last night she was asked what she would do.

"I'll present myself for duty, as usual," she said.

"Will you undertake to teach as usual?"

"I certainly will," she replied.

"Will you resist if physical force is used to prevent you from teaching?"

"O, I don't think so," she replied. "I am going to see a lawyer tomorrow, and after that I will know what to do."

Mrs. Wagner, too, it was learned at last night's meeting, would fight her case. She expects to attend the Curtis High School as usual on Monday. If she is prevented from teaching she will take her case into the courts.

TEACHER-MOTHERS' ALLY.

Mrs. Hale Congratulates Mayor Mitchel on His Policy.

Mayor Mitchel gave out yesterday a copy of a letter he received from Beatrice Forbes-Robertson Hale, President of the League for the Civic Service of Women of 315 East Seventeenth Street, in which Mrs. Hale expressed deep appreciation for the Mayor's letter to President Churchill of the Board of Education in reference to teacher-mothers. In her letter Mrs. Hale said:

"Any educational system which tends to create a large class of sterile women on the one hand, or on the other to impair its own efficiency by continually dismissing tried teachers in favor of beginners, is bound to fail. The profession of teaching is one in which women are especially needed. It will always remain a woman's profession and women will always bear children. These two facts, which have been made mutually destructive by the present board, can readily be reconciled by the use of a little common sense, as has been done in France, where teachers not only receive leave of absence for maternity, but receive it on full pay.

"The present policy of the Board of Education creates a feeling of deep resentment among teachers and their friends, for it not only penalizes the loyalty and removes many of the finest teachers from the schools, but it seems to indicate an autocratic attempt to regulate the private lives of citizens by dictating to them the circumstances under which they shall work. To grant leave of absence for illness, but not for childbirth, seems, therefore, not only a negation of humanitarianism, but a negation of democracy."

CHICAGO TO REPLACE LONDON FOR PLAYS

Frohman Plans There Productions He Had Intended for War-Affected City.

BRINGING ENGLISH STARS

Charles Frohman will leave for Chicago this morning to arrange what he says are the most novel plans of his career. Mr. Frohman goes West to see if he cannot carry out in Chicago the Spring and Summer theatrical schedule which he had originally intended for London, but which was upset when the war put England indefinitely off the theatrical map.

Mr. Frohman's Duke of York's Theatre in London is now closed except for matinée performances. A number of English actors and actresses under long-term Frohman contracts are still on his hands. Some of these plays and even more of the English players will be made use of by Mr. Frohman in New York; but the bulk of the intended London productions are such that they cannot be so well transferred to New York as to Chicago. Mr. Frohman has accordingly resolved to make Chicago his extra outlet during the coming Spring and Summer, just as every other Spring and Summer for the last twenty years London has been his field for extra theatrical operations.

"This illustrates," said Mr. Frohman last night, "one effect of the war on the American theatre—revolutionary to an extent. Probably neither I nor any of the other score or more of American managers who each year at the first sign of Spring book passage for London will have any thought of doing so this year. For one thing, nearly every English playwright is directly or indirectly engaged in the war, and those that are not have stopped playwriting entirely. For another, with all lights out in London at night, small use can be made of any except provincial English theatres for play producing. Besides, except in rare cases, no English producer feels like speculating in London, even with first-class American successes, since currency is becoming scarcer and scarcer all over England.

"Anticipating these conditions, I have already made arrangements for Miss Marie Lohr, Miss Irene Vanbrugh, and Godfrey Tearle—three of his best known and best equipped of English artists—and all under contract to me—to come to America, so that I may be enabled to make use of these three people for an all-star production in Chicago, independent of another that I intend for New York in the Spring. If the Chicago venture prospers the output can later be made use of in New York. But, from the Spring on, so far as I am concerned, Chicago will understudy London as an extra theatre centre until the war is over."

JAMES K. HACKETT FINED.

James K. Hackett, the actor, who recently inherited a large fortune, was fined $75 yesterday for shipping game into the State without first getting a State license.

"A small party, including Mrs. Hackett and I, have been shooting up in Maine for a week or so," said Mr. Hackett at the Vanderbilt Hotel last night. "I brought back with me two does and a buck, and two partridges, which were consigned to the American Express Company under the legally signed and licensed tag issued by the Maine State authorities. This game was seized by the Game Warden under the laws of the State of New York, because, as he claimed, it was necessary to secure from the State a shipping tag which costs nothing. I was fined $75 because I had not approached the authorities at the cost of a two-cent postage stamp for a shipping tag."

HEATED HOUSES DRY THE SKIN

The heat of the furnace or radiator is comforting and necessary—but it dries the skin distressingly.

Before your hands and face become harsh begin the use of VELOGEN two or three times a week.

Apply it liberally at night after a thorough washing, rubbing it in gently and removing the excess with a soft cloth. After the use of VELOGEN cotton gloves on the hands when retiring help.

In the morning after washing again apply a very little VELOGEN well rubbed in. This simple and pleasant method will entirely prevent the harsh dryness and redness of the skin.

All druggists sell VELOGEN—35c a tube.

THE NEW YORK SYMPHONY.

Harold Bauer's Notable Performance of Brahms's First Concerto.

What gave the concert of the New York Symphony Orchestra yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall its especial distinction was the performance by Harold Bauer of Brahms's first pianoforte concerto, Op. 15, in D minor. Not that any comparisons are necessary between this and Weber's "Oberon" overture and Mozart's C major symphony, but these we have, potentially at least, always with us; while only upon rare occasions do we have the concerto, and only by an unusual and happy conjunction of favorable circumstances so magnificent a performance of it.

Mr. Bauer plays it, evidently, with the greatest love and reverence, and with an intimate knowledge of its content derived from deep study of it. He had played it in New York three years ago with the Philharmonic Society; apparently before that the concerto had only been heard twice here—once played by Conrad Ansorge in 1896, and once by Rafael Joseffy in 1906. Virtuosos, thus, do not look upon it with favor; it gives little opportunity for a virtuoso's powers to shine in the traditional way. Nor is it effective or "grateful," as a concerto is expected to be. When Felix Weingartner classed Brahms's four concertos as four more symphonies, only with obligato instruments, the remark was peculiarly applicable to this one, for Brahms originally conceived it as a symphony and began it as such. He was dissatisfied, and turned two of its movements into a sonata for two pianos —one afterward appeared as part of the "German Requiem"—and then he again changed them into a concerto with orchestra.

The concerto has something of the austerity and reserve that characterize much of the music of Brahms's earlier years; and this is especially true of the first movement. In this, as well as in the adagio, he rises to some of his loftiest heights and gives utterance to some of his most personal and characteristic modes of expression. It is music of a deep and reticent beauty, of grave majesty; in the adagio and final rondo, especially, of the most intimate poetical spirit.

But its beauties are not to be fathomed except by one who approaches it with love and in entire sympathy. So Mr. Bauer approached it; and in this work, apparently so inaccessible to the general, he achieved a remarkable triumph. He played it with a most admirable devotion, with a complete divination of all that Brahms put into it. The magnificent epic ruggedness of the first movement, the high poetical eloquence of the adagio, the intense life and energy of the rando, were all laid bare to his listeners, who could thus enter with him into a full appreciation of the work. In accomplishing this, as difficult a task as confronts the interpretative musician in all the range of modern music, Mr. Bauer achieved a noble success, and gave his audience a delight such as comes from the possession of a new artistic experience.

The orchestra did itself great credit in the playing of the "Oberon" overture and the C major symphony. There was a greater homogeneity of tone, a better quality, more finish of ensemble than were to be heard in previous performances of the orchestra this year. There was also on the programme Mottl's transcription for orchestra of Liszt's piano piece "St. Francis of Assisi Preaching to the Birds." The piece gains neither in dignity nor importance in being put on the orchestra.

FOUR KEATS BOOKS SOLD.

Auction of Mrs. Lovejoy's Library Realizes a Total of $18,651.

The war has not yet affected the auction prices of valuable books in this city, the two days' sale of the library of Mrs. J. F. Lovejoy of Pittsburgh, Penn., which was concluded at the Anderson Company's rooms yesterday, realizing a total of $18,651.

George D. Smith paid the highest price of the sale, $1,875 for an Italian "Office of the Virgin Mary," a manuscript on vellum, of 232 octavo leaves, executed probably in Florence in the second part of the fifteenth century. It is decorated with five exquisitely painted miniatures. He also obtained for $1,250 a copy of the extremely rare work in defense of the Quakers, written by John Rous and others, printed in London in 1659, and entitled "New England a Degenerate Plant." Only two other copies, it is said, have appeared at auction.

An interesting feature was four books from the library of John Keats, the poet. His copy of Spenser's "Faerie Queene," 12mo, London, 1715, with Keats's initials and "Vide Spectator No. 540" on the title page, and numerous marked passages throughout the work, went to Mr. Smith for $900. It was given by the poet to his brother, George, in 1816, two years before the latter left England for America, and was in possession of the family since that time. Charles Scribner's Sons paid $215 for a copy of Oliver Goldsmith's "Grecian History," with autograph inscription on the title page: "To John Keats from his ardent friend, B. R. Haydon, 1817." On the title-page is also written "To George Keats, 1818." John Keats was introduced to Haydon, the painter, by Leigh Hunt.

Mr. Smith obtained for $275 "An Introduction to Astronomy," by John Bonnycastle, with the label: "Assigned as a reward for merit to Mas. John Keats at Mr. Clarke's, Enfield, Mid., 1812." On the title page is written "John Keats to his brother, Geo., 1818." When the poet received this prize he was a schoolboy at the private school of John Clarke, at Enfield, whose son, Charles Cowden Clarke, the well-known Shakespearean editor, was assistant. M. S. Morrison paid $600 for a first edition of "Poems, by John Keats," London, 1817, a presentation copy from John and George Keats to Georgiana Augusta Wylie, who afterward became the wife of George Keats.

The Joseph Jefferson Edition of Washington Irving's works was knocked down to Gabriel Weis for $230, who also gave $210 for the scarce Outward Bound Edition of Rudyard Kipling's "Writings in Prose and Verse."

"The Works of Sir Thomas More, Knyght, sometyme Lorde Chancellour of England, wryten by him in the Englysh tonge," folio, London, 1557, went to J. McCoy for $150. Mr. Smith paid $135 for a record of the "Assembly of the English Colony of Rhode Island and Providence Plantation," folio, Providence and Rehoboth, 1776. A collection of eight heads drawn in pencil by W. M. Thackeray on a 12mo sheet of drawing paper, was bought for $105 by Mr. Smith, for who also gave $405 for a holograph letter by Thackeray, dated Charleston, S. C., March 11, (1853), and addressed to his daughter, Harriet. The same bidder paid $125 for a first edition of "The Whole Workes of W. Tyndall, John Frith and Doct. Barnes, three Worthy Martyrs," London, 1573, and $126 for John De Vigo's "Most Excellent Workes of Chirurgerye," 1543.

P. A. B. WIDENER'S BIRTHDAY

Financier Celebrates Eightieth Anniversary at His Office.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—Peter A. B. Widener celebrated his eightieth birthday today by going down to his office in the Land Title Building at the usual hour. As in former years Mr. Widener's friends transformed his offices into a floral conservatory, and many men widely known in financial, business, and professional circles called in person to pay their respects.

Owing to impaired hearing Mr. Widener does not take as keen an interest in public affairs as he did formerly. On his last birthday he said he was "not feeling very well," and added that "there are too many people talking now."

MAYORS ADVOCATE UTILITY REFORMS

Municipal Ownership, Local and State Regulation Discussed at Philadelphia Conference.

MAYOR MITCHEL IN CHAIR

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—The advantages and disadvantages of State regulation, local regulation, and municipal ownership of public utilities were discussed by leading city executives, members of public service commissions, and other experts at three sessions of the conference of American Mayors here today. Mayor Blankenburg of this city presided at the morning session; Mayor Harrison of Chicago in the afternoon, and Mayor Mitchel of New York at night.

Mayor Harrison, who was one of the leading advocates of municipal ownership, said great good would come from public ownership of all utilities in the tremendous responsibilities of local government.

"Let a municipality operate all its utilities, and self-interest will induce each citizen to take a more active part in the affairs of local government," he said. "He will awake to the realization that American citizenship is not a mere perquisite; that it is a duty, a responsibility, an obligation.

"The first requisite of public ownership is a rigid civil service that appoints, holds and promotes absolutely on merit. Without it public ownership would be a public disaster. With it, public ownership would be a tremendous blessing to every community. The best of service at the lowest paying rate, the highest wages, and the best working conditions would still leave enough in the cash box materially to reduce the burden of general taxation."

Delos F. Wilcox of New York said:

"Public utility investments should be placed upon a non-speculative basis, and their security should approximate that of municipal bonds. To the establishment of the non-speculative character of these investments cities should not undertake to make good past losses.

"So far as future investments are concerned, the cities should assume the risks of loss due to unforeseen causes, and should substantially guarantee the integrity of all investments made at the request or with the approval of public authority.

"Public utility service, as a necessary public function, ought not to be dependent upon a throw of the dice by the manipulators of stocks and bonds. It ought not to furnish an opportunity for any man or set of men to get rich. It ought to furnish to multitudes of people of comparatively small means a safe and conservative investment for their savings.

"The elimination of the speculator and the stock jobber from the utility field and the establishment of utility investments upon a safe, conservative, non-speculative basis is to my mind a fundamental condition precedent to good service, permanently low rates, and adequate public control."

Stiles P. Jones, Secretary of the Voters' League, Minneapolis, who spoke on "What Certain Cities Have Accomplished Without State Regulation," strongly favored municipal ownership of utilities. He opposed the vesting in the State the regulation of cities' utilities as "a weak and cowardly dodging of plain civic duty and responsibility."

John M. Eshelman, President of the Railroad Commission of California, spoke in favor of State regulation as opposed to competition, but said that "unless some method could be devised to obtain investment in public utility enterprises in private ownership on the basis of a return comparable to the interest rate upon which a municipality or other Governmental agency could borrow money, the tendency would be to substitute public ownership for private ownership under regulation."

ACTORS AID WAR RELIEF.

Benefit Matinee at Lyceum Theatre Yields $3,000 for British.

England was the star of the special benefit matinée given yesterday afternoon at the Lyceum Theatre, and when the long bill was brought to a close, shortly before 6 o'clock, it was announced that the sale of tickets, flowers, programmes, and souvenirs had increased the funds of the British War Relief by about $3,000.

France was represented by Mlle. Gabrielle Dorziat, who gave the "Marseillaise" magnificently; Scotland had Burr McIntosh to speak for her, and Ireland had the Tipperary song of Tommy Atkins, sung delightfully by Andrew Mack. But for the most part the afternoon was English, from the speech before Hardenur, recited by Mr. Cooper-Cliffe, to "He Is an Englishman," given by Eugene Cowles at his best. There was Clifford Brooke, rocking the little nipper's cradle and singing the lullaby Chevalier wrote, and Beatrice Forbes-Robertson speaking the lines of Henley's "England, My England."

Even Mr. Faversham's contribution, the third act of "The Squaw Man," though its setting is a Montana ranch, is as English as Charing Cross Station, and though the burlesque melodrama "Gruesome Grange," which wound up the bill, was never calculated to invoke the patriotic mood, it came to the end yesterday afternoon with all the cast standing, while, led by George Giddens, they joined in the strains of "God Save the King."

Quite the most engaging trifle of the afternoon was a one-act play written by Clare Kummer, who leaped into fame some years ago as the woman who wrote "Dearie." "What Do You Know About That?" is so amusing and so briefly done that it ought to find its way into some programme designed to reach not one audience but many.

Walter J. McNair.

Walter J. McNair, United States Examiner of Limoges chinaware at this port, died yesterday at his home, 202 Edgecombe Avenue. Mr. McNair served on two commissions sent to France to adjust the differences between importers, manufacturers, and the French Government regarding the values at which Limoges ware should be permitted to enter this country. He was well known to the importing trade, and had been attached to the Customs Service eighteen years. Mr. McNair was identified with National Guard circles, having served several terms of enlistment in the Eleventh Separate Company of Mount Vernon. The funeral services will be held tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock from St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, Convent Avenue and 141st Street.

INDICT PITTSBURGH BANKERS

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 13.—The Federal Grand Jury late this afternoon returned indictments against Oscar L. Telling, ex-President of the First-Second National Bank, and Francis H. Richards, formerly cashier of the same institution, charging them with embezzlement, misapplication of funds and making false entries in the books of the bank, and in the reports to the Controller of Currency. A bench warrant was issued for Richard's arrest and he was taken into custody tonight. Telling is a fugitive from justice and is believed to be in Europe.

The old First-Second National Bank failed on July 7, 1913, and was closed for ten months. The First and Second National Banks were consolidated early last year. At the time of the failure of the First-Second National Bank, which precipitated the famous Kuhn disaster, it was stated that the peculations of Telling were responsible for the condition of the bank.

YALE TACKLES PRINCETON TODAY

Ellis Are Favorites, but Penfield Has Improved Tigers' Play Greatly.

Yale and Princeton will clash in their annual gridiron battle at the Palmer Memorial Stadium in Princeton this afternoon, at 2 o'clock. The Tigers' new football field has a seating capacity of 40,000, and it is expected that the largest gathering that ever invaded Jungletown will witness the game this afternoon. Special trains will leave the Pennsylvania Station at frequent intervals from 8:35 A. M. to 11 A. M. The regular traffic between New York and Princeton will be suspended on account of the extensive special train service.

On account of Princeton's poor showing against Harvard last week, Yale is the ruling favorite. If the Tigers are not able to diagnose Yale's double and triple passes any better than they sized up the Harvard attack, Yale will not have a difficult time of it. It is believed at Princeton that too many coaches have disturbed the harmony of the eleven and during the past week Coach Penfield has had full charge, with numerous other advisers sitting silently on the side lines.

The Tiger adherents firmly expect that the eleven will make a far better showing today than they did last week. It is Princeton's final contest and the season's work has led up to this match as a climax. Princeton's trouble against Harvard seemed to be an inferior knowledge of football and the last week's coaching, it is believed, will make a big difference in the work of the team. Princeton will line up the same as the eleven faced Harvard with the exception of Brown at end instead of Shea. Brown and Highley will be the first string ends, while Lambreton and Shea will be the second choice. The Tigers were weak at both wings last week and were slow in getting down under kicks. Their indifferent playing placed the brunt of the heavy work on the secondary defense. It is believed that this fault will be eradicated in today's play.

Up to the time of Yale's defeat at the hands of Washington and Jefferson, the Yale team looked like the best Eli eleven of years. That defeat, however, showed the Blue defense to be very weak. This same fault was in evidence last week against Browne. It is a notable fact, however, that in both of these games, Yale did not have her full strength in the game. Yale's offensive game under Hinkey has been thoroughly developed and it is expected that Yale will spring many highly effective ground-gaining plays this afternoon.

Yale's back field looks much supérior to Princeton's. Aleck Wilson at quarter back should prove a star. He is far more aggressive than Ames, the Tiger quarter back. Harry LeGore, who will do the kicking for Yale, is a better punter than either Driggs or Law, the Tiger kickers, and has an able line smasher. Carroll, Knowles, and Ainsworth round out one of the best back fields Yale has had in years.

Capt. Talbott of Yale, who has been out of the game a great deal this season on account of injuries, will start the game at tackle, but he will not go through because of the hard game expected with Harvard a week hence. In Loughbridge and Sheldon Yale has two substitute tackles who are almost as good as the first-string men, and both of these players will be heard from today.

Yale's defense this season has been troubled by the forward pass. Both Washington and Jefferson and Brown fooled the Elis repeatedly by aerial football tactics. Princeton's forward pass made no headway against Harvard, but the play was only used a few times. If there is little wind today it is expected that Princeton will use this play extensively. The Tigers have a peculiar formation for one of their forward passes, in which the whole team spreads across the field. It is a spectacular play, but is wide open that the opposition has plenty of time to spot the players throwing and receiving the pass.

Yale will place much reliance on her new star, Le Gore. In fact, Hinkey has practically built the Yale attack around him. Le Gore will be the man that the Tigers will have to watch. All season he has been the pivotal point in the Yale machine. He circles the ends from fake punt formations, he plays the double-role of the thrower and receiver of the forward pass, and Yale also relies upon him to do the punting and drop-kicking. It looks as if Le Gore would be the busiest performer the Elis have had since the days of Ted Coy. Yale's back field is rich with substitutes, however, and the Blue will have plenty of surplus material to put in against the Tigers if the Princeton defense should happen to be too gruelling on the Yale regulars.

Wilson, the Yale quarter back, has been held in reserve for this game. He has been carefully handled and is said to be at top form. In every game in which he has been at quarter back Yale's team has shown remarkable work. He is a cool, trustworthy field general and will get the maximum of work out of his men.

PALMER PRESENTS STADIUM.

First Big Game to be Played on New Gridiron with Yale.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 13.—Princeton's new football stadium was formally presented to the university this afternoon by its donor, Edgar A. Palmer of the class of 1903. Mr. Palmer made a short speech, to which Dean McClenahan responded for the university. The entire undergraduate body marched to the new concrete structure, which will be the scene of its first big game with Yale tomorrow afternoon. The students cheered Mr. Palmer, practiced their songs, and concluded with a long series of cheers for the team.

The 'Varsity players took possession of the stadium early in the afternoon. Frank Hinkey sending his squad through a signal drill and punting practice. A high wind made the catching of kicks most uncertain, and unless the gale abates by tomorrow the backs will have a hard time handling their opponents' punts. The Yale team finished its workout by 4 o'clock and returned to New Brunswick, where the Elis have their temporary training quarters.

The Princeton squad held its final drill of the season on University Field behind closed gates. In practice, like Yale's, was confined to signal practice and kicking. Penfield was again in supreme authority, assisted by Eddie Hart and "Biff" Lea.

The coaches had no comment to make tonight upon the outcome of the game tomorrow. There is, however, a feeling of quiet confidence that the Tigers will redeem the overwhelming defeat sustained at Cambridge last week. The team has developed by leaps and bounds the last week, and there is a belief that the eleven will enter the contest with Yale at least 50 per cent. stronger than it was against the Crimson.

The announcement that Glick would get into the game has encouraged the Princeton supporters, inasmuch as he is the strongest ground gainer in the Tiger back field. He has completely recovered from the injury he received at Cambridge, and is expected to be in the best of shape when he goes into the fray tomorrow.

YALE CAMPUS IS DESERTED.

Hundreds of Students in New York and Will Follow Team Today.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Nov. 13.—Yale presented a deserted college campus tonight. The departure of the Eli football squad of thirty-two players for Princeton was followed this afternoon by the exodus of hundreds of Yalensians, who will spend the night in New York and go to Princeton tomorrow.

Every member of the eleven was benefited by the rest of the last few days, and the slight bruises have almost entirely disappeared. Coach Hinkey insisted that there was no talk of eleventh-hour changes.

Yale will use more substitutes than in any game with Princeton in years, probably two complete elevens. Should she succeed in accumulating a safe lead through a margin of two touchdowns, the first-string backfield would be quickly retired, saving its strength for the Harvard game next Saturday. Knowles, Wilson, and Le Gore have returned to the eleven this week after an absence of three weeks, but they are not hardened enough to endure an entire game.

Yale has not exhibited many of its best plays, and if Princeton can be conquered by the line attack and the varieties of the passing game that have been already displayed, most of the scoring material which is relied upon will be reserved for the stubborn Harvard defense. Betting odds ranged from 5 to 6 to 7 to 5 favoring Yale, with few Princeton takers.

Yale's past success in winning on the home grounds of Princeton was taken into account in the betting odds and in the general hope of victory. Two years ago the teams tied, 6 to 6; four years ago Yale won, 3; and seven years ago Yale won by 12 to 6, and the Tigers have failed to win from Yale in Princeton since 1898, when a fumble allowed a Princeton touchdown there and a victory by the score of 6 to 0. Yale has won twenty games to Princeton's ten in their long series, and nine have been tied. Tomorrow's will be the fortieth in their gridiron history.

ADELPHI ACADEMY DEFEATS POLY PREP

Fast Game by Brooklyn Teams for Brooklyn Scholastic Football Title.

Adelphi Academy scored a 14 to 7 victory over Poly Prep yesterday at Washington Park, Brooklyn, and to a great extent clarified the scholastic football situation. Neither team had lost a game this season, when they faced each other on the Federal League ball field, and the defeat of Poly Prep means the elimination of that institution in the championship, while Adelphi will play the winner of the Commerce-Bay Ridge contest, for the scholastic title. In the five games played between two teams since 1903, Adelphi has won four.

The contest attracted nearly 5,000 enthusiastic followers of the two teams, while a band played popular airs for the rival elevens, in which the spectators joined the students in the new words set to the music.

In spite of the absence of Capt. Alford the Adelphi team was regarded as the favorite, owing to a powerful, consistent backfield. The confidence was not misplaced as the only touchdown, made by Poly Prep, was the result of a twenty-yard right end run, by MacDonald, when the latter caught the Adelphi end of the line and secondary defense, off their guard.

While the result showed the Adelphi team to be superior to that of Poly Prep, the latter back field developed a strong offense, but the line failed to hold on the defense. A number of forward passes were tried, but only three were successful. The majority of the gains were made by the old style of football—line plunging and end runs. Delayed and double passes were essayed, but without much success.

Leyser and Love were seen to advantage for the winners. The former was the most consistent ground gainer on the team, and both scored touchdowns. Love tallied on a mass play in front of the goal posts, when he was pushed through the centre and Leyser after two clever runs broke through the opposing tackle for the second touchdown. Bronder stood out conspicuously for Poly Prep. He punted well and proved an excellent ground gainer. The lineup:

Adelphi.	Position.	Poly Prep.
Hammond	Left tackle	Sutton
O'Brien	Left guard	Reuter
Bardwell	Centre	Parsons
Mackenzie	Right guard	Lee
Jaquillard	Right tackle	Bronder
Story	Right end	M. Redmond
Leyser	Quarter back	MacDonald
Ball	Left half back	Ryder
Vaughn	Right half back	Wood
Love	Full back	Hardenbrook

Touchdowns—Leyser, Love for Adelphi; MacDonald for Poly Prep, goals from touchdowns—Mackenzie (2) for Adelphi; Bronder for Poly Prep. Substitutes—Charles for MacDonald, Sayles for Ryder, MacDonald for Charles, Libby for Story, Dunham for Mackenzie, Bowne for Libby, Hamlin for Leyser, Smith for O'Brien, Alford for Leyser, Doblin for Fishbeck, Leyser for Vaughn. Referee—George Beavers, Jr., West Point. Umpire—Dr. A. P. Way, Swarthmore. Head linesman—Dr. Couiger, Brown. Time—Four twelve-and-a-half-minute quarters.

Maine Marches on West Point.

ORONO, Me., Nov. 13.—The football team of the University of Maine left yesterday for the contest on Saturday with the Army at West Point. Maine is sending a squad of men that represents the remnants of the team she had during the height of the season, several of her best men having been injured. Maine is this year proud of a record that shows six victories to only two defeats, making an aggregate score of 222 points to 40 on the side of her opponents. The men of Maine and Army have met twice before. Saturday also are to be watched with much interest, for after the Maine and Navy game it would seem that a good line of dope could be arranged. Colby defeated Maine in a hard-fought battle, 14 to 0. Maine will depend upon Gorham and Ruffner to do the kicking in the game against the Army. The team left Orono Thursday afternoon, and because of the rather long ride of nine hours each way, will arrive at West Point but a few days before the game. The line-up will be as follows: Donahue, left end; Allen, left tackle; Rudman, left guard; Capt. Baker, centre; Wark, right guard; Gulliver, right tackle; Scanlon, right end; Beckwithel, quarter back; Gorham, left half back; Martin, right half back; Ruffner, full back.

Lehigh in Trim for Villanova.

Special to The New York Times.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, Penn., Nov. 13.—A high south wind that swept across Taylor Stadium this afternoon created a good opportunity to teach the Lehigh back-field men to judge and handle punts under adverse conditions. This was supplementary to the finishing touches put on the team prior to the Villanova game tomorrow. The full squad was out, and all the men who will likely get into the contest were tried out finally in the new plays during the signal drill. The full week of rest for Hoban, Sawtelle, and Scruggs has brought them around finely, and they got into uniforms for the first time this week. Hoban, Master of Arts, is the only real rookie on the team. The reputed strength of the Main Liners has caused Coach Keady to abandon his original intention of reserving most of his stars in view of possible injuries for the Lafayette game, and the full strength of the local team will start the contest, but with two exceptions. Early will replace Scruggs at centre, as Keady wants to see how he will perform under fire, and Bona will take Frank Green's place at right guard.

Dartmouth in Full Strength.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 13.—Dartmouth College plays the University of Pennsylvania on Franklin Field tomorrow in one of the most important games of the season. The Dartmouth eleven will be at their full strength, and they are confident of scoring a victory. Barring the Princeton game, in which the men did not play up to their capabilities, the team has had a remarkable season this year. They have defeated all of their rivals by large scores.

Pennsylvania will have all her regulars in the line-up, with the exception of Urquhart. Koons will take his place. Matthews or Moffit will replace Vreeland in order to get more strength to the back field, while Norwald will go in at right guard, with Dorizas at left guard. Henning may replace Russell at left tackle. Coach Brooks feels that the line will more than hold its own, but back field is the problem that is puzzling Coach Brooks. He does not feel very sure of it, and Pennsylvania will not win unless the back field plays 100 per cent. better than it did last Saturday.

Navy Expects Hard Game Today.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Nov. 13.—Colby is expected to give the Midshipmen a hard struggle tomorrow afternoon, and the coaches have promised that the full strength of the Navy team will be used for a while, at least. It will be the last chance to see the team under pressure before the Army game, as no chance of injuring the regulars will be taken the following Saturday against Ursinus. There was a long drill in signals and formations this afternoon, and some kicking and passing, but no scrimmage. The team will line up tomorrow as follows: Left end, Capt. Overesch; left tackle, Kennedy; left guard, R. H. Jones; centre, Perry; right guard, Graf; right tackle; Schlorsbach, right end; Jackson, quarter back; Miles, left half back; Creig, right half back, Blodgett; full back, H. Harrison. Mitchell, Failing, Collins, Culbert, and others will probably get a chance in the back field at some stage of the game.

Stevens Not in Best Shape for N.Y.U.

Stevens "Tech" eleven held its final practice yesterday afternoon at Castle Point Field in preparation for the game with New York University this afternoon, which will be played in Hoboken. The decisive defeat administered to the Stevens boys by Rensselaer Poly last week has instilled a large amount of fighting spirit in the team, and the work this week has been of very snappy order, despite the fact that four substitutes have been used in the line-up. It is very doubtful if all the regular men will play today, as Webb, who usually takes care of the kicking end of the game, is still on the sick list, and Todd and Harsloff, the two strongest half backs, are out on account of injuries. In the event that they cannot play Poole and Marshall will be put in as half-backs, while Soper is expected to fill in at full back. The probable line-up will be as follows: Howell, Koinbie or Ives, ends; Lee, tackle, and Middleton, tackles; Moeller and Olds, guards; Hill or Graydon, centre; Anderson, quarter back; Herraloff, left half back; Todd, right half back; Webb, full back.

HARVARD MEN AT PRINCETON

'Varsity Players Will See Yale and Tigers in Battle.

Special to The New York Times.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 13.—The Harvard football team is scheduled for a game with Brown tomorrow, but unless there was an eleventh hour shift in the plans of the Crimson coaches, Robinson's Providence players, who held Yale to 14 to 6 score a week ago, will go up against a complete substitute team in the stadium tomorrow.

Last week nearly the entire Yale back field came to Cambridge to see Harvard play the Tigers, and this week most of the Harvard 'Varsity men and the majority of the coaching staff left for Princeton to see Yale and Princeton.

The work on Soldiers' Field this afternoon was entirely for the substitutes. There was not a regular man in the hardest of the drill, although a few of them were on the sidelines and took part in the signal practice.

This afternoon coaches Haughton, Leary, Dewey, Wigglesworth, Farmenter, and Lothrop Withington, and Manager Richards went to New York, and with them were Jeff Coolidge, Bradlee, Trumbull, Logan, and Mahan of the 'Varsity team. Parson was held at Cambridge, as were Pennock, Weston, and Wallace, while Hardwick was expected to take a late train and join the party at Princeton in the morning.

The Harvard substitutes made a great showing at the end of the Princeton game last week, and will have a real chance to go through a game tomorrow. The regulars had a hard scrimmage Thursday and this let them out for the week. There was a short signal drill for the first team today, and when it returns from Princeton it will have two days of vigorous work, starting for New Haven Thursday.

Amherst's Big Game with Williams.

Special to The New York Times.

AMHERST, N. H., Nov. 13.—Half an hour of signal drill was the only work today for the Amherst football team in preparation for its final contest tomorrow with Williams, on which the success or failure of an Amherst football season depends. The fine work of recent work of the Williams team in holding Princeton to a tie score and winning from the Springfield team, which decisively defeated Amherst, the men have been spurred on to their utmost best by Coach Riley has been assisted by Hubbard, 1907, an All-American man, and Gettell, the former Trinity coach during the last week. Owing to an injured hand he is doubtful if Lind will be able to play his position at guard tomorrow. The Amherst line-up will probably be as follows: Left end, Brown; left tackle, Knowlton; left guard, Cross; centre, Kimball; right guard, Shumway; right tackle, E. Goodrich; right end, Swasey; quarter back, Tow or Cooper; left half back, Warren; right half back, Rider or Fashley.

Columbia Classes to Play Football.

An interclass football series has been arranged at Columbia University, and several stars from other colleges have taken a hand in coaching the teams from the various classes of the students on Morningside Heights. Dave Hinshaw, well known in Haverford football, has taken the freshmen in charge, and his proteges, fresh from their school elevens, show plenty of life in spite of the fact that their mentor cannot get around as lively as in the old days. Arthur Howe, the Yale star and All-American quarter back, is drilling the sophomores in the off minutes between his classes at the Union Seminary, and the juniors are looking to G. Lamade, formerly quarter back at the University of Missouri, for instruction. This is Lamade's first year at baseball and football player, has volunteered to train the senior eleven. The series will begin on Saturday afternoon, Nov. 21, when the sophomores and freshmen will clash, and on the following Saturday the seniors and juniors will try their skill in handling the pigskin. The game between the winners will wind up the series on Nov. 24.

Army Team Weak for Today's Game

WEST POINT, N. Y., Nov. 13.—The Army team is in the worst possible shape for the game with Maine tomorrow. The lay-off of yesterday was productive of no particular good to the team so far as tomorrow's game is concerned, except in the cases of McEwan and Oliphant. These two headliners were the only ones of the 'Varsity squad to participate in the stiff signal drill which was all the work the team got today in final preparation for the contest. The other cripples hobbled around but did not get in the drill. The poor physical condition of the men has made it necessary for the coaches to do a lot of shifting in the Army's line-up for tomorrow, and Maine will face a patched-up team when it trots out on the gridiron tomorrow. Today's practice saw McEwan at centre, Herrick and Jones, guards; Larkin and Parker, tackles; Kelly and Tully, ends; Oliphant at quarter back, Leitz left half back; Capt. Mitchell, right half back; and Coffin, full back, and the coaches stated tonight that this would be the Army's line-up at the start of tomorrow's game. Unless some of the other 'Varsity players get back to form the chances of another Army victory tomorrow do not look particularly bright. The Maine team arrived here this morning, and worked out on the Army's gridiron in a secret drill in the afternoon. They are a husky looking lot and are confident of putting up a stiff fight.

Rowan Fordham's Quarter Back.

"Billy" Rowan will get his first chance to start a game with the Fordham football warriors when he lines up in the quarter back position against the Vermont eleven at Fordham Field today. Although this is the only chance expected in the Maroon and Green, considerable worry was evident yesterday because of the battered condition of the players and the reported weight and steam-roller tactics of Vermont. Yale and Conklin are far from being in playing form, but owing to the small number of players at his disposal, Coach Wymard expects to be forced to use both men in today's game. May and Capt. Wymard have only been back in uniform for two games, having been forced to leave the Navy game. Practice yesterday was of the lightest nature seen at Fordham this season, as no chances were being taken.

BOYS PLANNED TO SEE FOOTBALL CHEAP

Quite the most remarkable stunt yet undertaken by college students to attend a football game was nipped in the bud by heartless railroad authorities who had at first apparently fallen in with the plan of the boys. Four hundred students of the Michigan Agricultural College arranged with a hustling freight agent of a Michigan road to ship them in box cars from East Lansing, Mich., where the college is located, to State College, Penn., the town where the Penn State College is located.

Teams of the two colleges played football yesterday and the Michigan lads wanted to see it. Cash was short for the trip. A budding genius conceived the plan to have the student body shipped in freight cars as live stock or perishable freight, from Lansing to the Pennsylvania town and return at a cost of between $4 and $5 a head, the boys to provide their own feed and water and to travel on fast freight schedule. Of course there was a protest by college officials and parents of the adventurous boys, as the trip would have taken about a week.

As the boys had no written contract with the freight agent with whom they made the arrangement, they could not force the railroad company to carry out its promise, but the company easily found a way out of its agreement. On the pretext that because of the quarantining orders issued by various State Commissioners of Agriculture against the shipment out of the State of Michigan of any "live stock," owing to the prevalence of the foot and mouth disease, they contended that regulations might be enforced against half a dozen box cars filled with such very "live stock" as undergraduates of an agricultural college, which might lead to the quarantining of the students at their expense. So they canceled the agreement actually entered into by their agent. The venturesome students, therefore, lost their chance to be "rooters" at yesterday's game. The railroad contracting agent was reproved for trying to evade the regulations regarding the transportation of passengers at less than published rates and shifted to hustling for merchandise freight and fruit shipments.

Michigan Aggies Beat Penn State.

STATE COLLEGE, Penn., Nov. 13.—The Michigan Agricultural College football eleven celebrated its first invasion of the East by defeating Pennsylvania State here today by the score of 6 to 3. Lamb scored a placement goal for Penn State and Julian tallied a touchdown for the Aggies.

The Aggies played a magnificent game throughout, the backs, Julian, Deprato, and H. Miller, tearing through State's right tackle for long gains. Smith, left tackle, also played a wonderful game for the Westerners. State was twice held for downs inside the Aggies' five-yard line. Capt. Tobin of Pennsylvania State, only four days out of the hospital, was rushed into the game, but his efforts were futile.

EACH TEAM EXPECTS TO WIN

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Nov. 13.—A light signal drill today completed the Michigan football team's preparation for tomorrow's game with Cornell. While the Wolverines were exercising on Ferry Field, the Ithacans practiced at the Country Club in Detroit, where they will remain until tomorrow, coming to Ann Arbor only in time to start the game.

Both teams are in fine condition for the contest, and each expects to win tomorrow. Michigan's defeat of Pennsylvania by a large score last week naturally inspires a great deal of confidence in the followers of the Maize and Blue team.

EASTON, Penn., Nov. 13.—All afternoon and well into the evening the Lafayette 'Varsity gave dash up and down March Field, restricted only by the speed of "Bunny" Lerch in calling the signals. The gates were tightly closed for the Lafayette team not only practiced the signals to be used in the game with Albright, but those which will be used in the game with Lehigh one week from tomorrow. In addition to the signal work the kickers all tried their respective "boots." Marshall worked a long time on the kick from placement. All the work of the afternoon went with snap and dash. Coach Crowell hopes to use as many substitutes as possible in the game tomorrow in order to have as many men as he can ready to go into the Lehigh game.

Ban on Deficient Harvard Men.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 13.—Permission to witness the Harvard-Yale football game at New Haven next Saturday, will be refused to Harvard students who failed to attain a high-ranking at the Fall examinations, according to an announcement by the college authorities today. As a result many students have canceled train reservations, which were made weeks ago.

Charge Against Schoolboy.

Charges of professionalism will be made against Charles Broughton of the Central High School, the remarkable schoolboy runner, before he competes in the interscholastic cross-country run to be held by Columbia University this afternoon. Broughton, interscholastic record holder for two miles, and winner of many important schoolboy races during the past year, is alleged to have made himself a professional through being employed as an attendant at a Bloomfield (N. J.) playground. The charge is a technical one, but will have to be considered by the interscholastic authorities. The name of the complainant has not been made known, but he is said to be coach of a rival Newark high school, which has met defeat at the hands of Central teams this season.

Courtney, at 65, Works as Usual.

ITHACA, N. Y., Nov. 13.—In fine health and full of vigor in body and mind, Charles E. Courtney, oarsmen, today celebrated his sixty-fifth birthday. He received a number of congratulatory messages, and a group of the oarsmen called upon him this evening, but the old man did not take a holiday. He went to the boathouse at 8 o'clock, as usual, and did not return home until 6:30 o'clock this evening. Courtney seems no older than he was at 60 and his capacity for work appears to be undiminished.

Big Field Chases Fox.

LA GRANGE, Ky., Nov. 13.—Splendid hunting and trailing marked the meeting of the National Fox Hunters' Association here today, a fox being in sight almost immediately after casting off this morning. More than 100 men and women followed the hounds. Today marked the beginning of the annual derby, which will be finished tomorrow.

The election of officers resulted as follows: President, L. Wooldridge, Versailles, Ky.; Secretary-Treasurer, Luther B. Dickerson, Nicholasville, Ky. A field of twenty-five dogs will start in the derby tomorrow, one having been dropped today.

Columbia Seniors Win in Tank.

By defeating the freshmen yesterday afternoon in water polo by the score of 12 to 0 the Columbia seniors won the interclass championship. Louis Mouquin, Captain of the 'Varsity six, and Hastings, at goals, were the stars for the seniors, their team work counting for the two touch goals. Rogers, another 'Varsity player, scored the thrown goal for his team.

RUBIEN FOR SECRETARY.

A. A. U. Delegates Oppose Salary for Position.

The first of the delegates to the Amateur Athletic Union meeting on Monday at the Waldorf-Astoria to arrive in New York reached here yesterday. President Alfred J. Lill, representing the New England Association on the Board of Governors, led the advance guard into town. With him came Joseph B. Maccabe and Joseph Conway, of the St. Mary's A. A., Cambridge, also delegates from the New England Association. The West was represented by George James of the Olympic Club, San Francisco, from the Pacific Coast Association, and A. S. Goldsmith, Seattle A. C., delegate from the Pacific Northwest Association. Everett C. Brown of Chicago, formerly an A. A. U. President, arrived here late last night. Other delegates, who will number about forty, are due here today, for some must attend the preliminary committee meetings scheduled for tomorrow afternoon at the Waldorf.

The visiting representatives nearly all favor Frederick W. Rubien, President of the Metropolitan Association, for Secretary-Treasurer of the A. A. U. President Lill said last night that Rubien was the ideal man for the position, and would surely receive his vote unless Bartow S. Weeks decided at the last minute to be a candidate. The other New England delegates also favor Rubien.

Mr. James was not aware that the name of any candidate for the position held for years by James E. Sullivan had been made public, but when acquainted with the fact that Mr. Rubien was in a receptive mood, he heartily agreed with Mr. Lill that the New York man was the proper choice.

"Under no circumstances will I support a move that will establish the Secretary-Treasurership as a salary position," asserted President Lill. "I have heard some talk that a movement has been made to give an annual salary to the new Secretary, but this is directly against the principles of the A. A. U. and cannot receive my indorsement. I believe I share the opinion of a large majority of my fellow delegates."

TWO MORE RELIEF SHIPS FOR BELGIUM

TO SAIL ABOUT NOV. 25

Belgian Committee Which Is Supplying Cargoes Appeals for More Money—Gifts to Other Funds.

Two more Belgian relief ships, both chartered by the Rockefeller Foundation, will sail from New York for Europe in about ten days. One of these ships is the 7,000-ton British steamship Agamemnon, and the other the 3,000-ton coastwise liner Nueces. These ships will carry cargoes of food supplies worth $400,000 furnished by the Belgian Relief Committee of 810 Bridge Street.

In announcing the chartering of these steamers yesterday the Belgian Committee issued the following statement:

Food supplies are being accumulated at the Bush Terminal, Brooklyn, by the Belgian Relief Committee for the steamer Agamemnon, the second of a series of supply boats to leave New York for Belgium. The Agamemnon, which was placed at the disposal of the Belgian Relief Committee by the Rockefeller Foundation, will sail about Nov. 25, carrying about $200,000 worth of food supplies purchased by the Belgian Relief Committee for distribution under expert supervision to the famine-stricken districts of Belgium. At about the same time another steamer, the Nueces, also will be sent out. The cargo of this vessel, as well as that of the Agamemnon, will be provided by the Belgian Relief Committee at a cost of approximately $200,000. The purchase of these two shiploads of provisions, together with remittances of cash to Minister van Dyke at The Hague and Minister Whitlock at Brussels, have practically depleted the Belgian Relief Fund, to which, up to yesterday, $457,289.87 had been contributed.

The committee most urgently appeals to the public to provide the means of provisioning other steamers, which should go forward at once. The urgency of the situation cannot be overestimated. All cash contributions are being turned immediately into food supplies, purchased at rock-bottom wholesale prices for large lots, and the committee assures contributors that 100 per cent. of their contribution, in the form of purchased food supplies, shall reach the mouths of starving Belgian women and children. The food requirements necessary to even approximate sufficiency for the merest living needs of the vast numbers of homeless and helpless Belgians are greatly in excess of anything yet placed at the disposal of the committee. The imperative need is that the four or five steamers besides the Agamemnon and the Nueces already practically arranged for by the Rockefeller Foundation shall be filled immediately with supplies and started on their way to Belgium. The suffering among the women and children and other noncombatants in that country from lack of food is daily becoming more acute, and there is no doubt that every day's delay means an increasingly heavy toll in death, sickness, and suffering.

Gifts to the Belgian Fund.

The Belgian Fund was increased by $9,313.19 yesterday. Subscriptions should be sent to J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, or the Belgian Relief Committee, 8-10 Bridge Street. The new gifts, cents omitted, were:

Hospital Units in Germany.

In Southeast Germany, not far from the Russian and Austrian borders, are two of the hospital units recently sent to the European war zones by the American Red Cross. This announcement was made at the local Red Cross offices yesterday. Unit G, which is supported by Kansas City, with Dr. F. Bradbury in charge, is at Kosel, attached to a military hospital, while Unit I, with Dr. Charles H. Sanders, formerly a resident physican of Garfield Hospital, Washington, D. C., in charge, is at Neiwitz, 30 miles away, caring for wounded in a factory that has been converted into a hospital.

Both of the hospital units sent to England by the American Red Cross are now working at Paignton, where Dr. Howard W. Beal of Worcester, Mass., is chief surgeon of what is called the American Red Cross Hospital.

RELAX STATE QUARANTINE.

Authorities Modify Cattle Regulations—Government Needs Funds.

ALBANY, Nov. 13.—An order lightening the State quarantine, imposed because of the epidemic of the foot and mouth disease among cattle, was issued tonight by Commissioner Huson. It becomes effective at noon tomorrow. After that time, except from Erie, Seneca, Wayne, Kings and Queens counties, uninfected cattle, sheep or swine may be shipped in cars or driven on public highways, shipments of hay, fodder and farm produce may be made, and poultry may be transported. This action was taken in order that the various stock yards might have cattle on hand for the resumption of business Monday.

An outbreak of the disease in Fairport, Monroe County, was reported here today. An investigation was ordered immediately.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—There is a shortage of funds for the campaign against the foot and mouth disease epidemic. As a result conferences were held today between Secretary Houston and other officials of the Department of Agriculture. Officials fear that unless some plan can be devised to make more money available immediately the department will be hampered seriously in its work. Orders were issued today that not more than $200 worth of cattle in a herd should be slaughtered without special authorization from the department, unless the owner of the herd agreed that payment should be contingent upon Congress appropriating the money. The quarantine against hay was modified by the department today so as to provide that hay cut before Aug. 1 last may be shipped in interstate commerce without disinfection if baled prior to Nov. 1.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—An order lifting the embargo on live stock shipments to Chicago was issued by the State Board of Live Stock Commissioners today. Railroads were notified they could accept shipments to be delivered in Chicago at midnight Sunday, when the Union Stockyards will be reopened. All shippers must file with the transportation company an affidavit that the stock shipped is not affected with and has not been exposed to the malady.

Dr. Simon Flexner, who spent two days here studying the foot-and-mouth disease, left tonight for New York, carrying with him many specimens. Dr. Flexner said the cause considered the study of the scourge to be the most difficult problem of his career.

SALT LAKE CITY, Nov. 13.—The National Wool Growers' convention today adopted resolutions calling for a Congressional appropriation sufficient to enable the Government to bury and destroy all herds of live stock in which the foot-and-mouth disease appeared.

Indications of the foot-and-mouth disease were found yesterday on cattle on farms near Jamesville, Brooklyn Borough, by Dr. H. D. Gill of the State Department of Agriculture and Dr. J. D. Dunkel of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry. The cattle will be kept under observation until the symptoms are more definite. In the meantime the farms are under quarantine.

The destruction of 289 cattle on the Goldstein farm and of 40 cattle on the Fechter and Wicker farm at Maspeth will begin today. About 150 cattle, all that can be disposed of in one day at Barren Island, will be slain today on the farms and the carcasses will be sent to Barren Island.

Health Commissioner Goldwater obtained yesterday from Commissioner Adamson permission to use two old fire engines to generate steam, which will be used in disinfecting the vans used in removing the carcasses and in disinfecting the barns on the farms. After the conference yesterday, Dr. Goldwater issued orders that only pasteurized milk should be sold in this city, and ordered employes of his department to see that the order was enforced. A large part of the milk consumed here already is pasteurized.

DEATH ENDS FROLIC IN AUTO

Miss Elizabeth Dayton Crushed Under Overturned Car in Pelham Parkway.

A night spent in pleasure seeking by three young women and two men ended yesterday morning in the death of one of the young women and the narrow escape of the others of the party. An automobile in which they were speeding to their homes shortly before 7:30 o'clock turned turtle in Pelham Parkway, near the New Rochelle Road.

Miss Elisabeth Dayton, 20 years old, of 5,391 Decatur Avenue, the Bronx, was killed instantly. James F. McGuire, 26 years old, of 562 West End Avenue, who was sitting beside her driving the car, was pinned under the automobile with her, but suffered only bruises and cuts. The other occupants of the automobile were thrown clear of it, and escaped with superficial injuries.

McGuire, the owner of the automobile, is the son of the late James F. McGuire, one of the founders of the firm of Alart & McGuire, manufacturers of pickles in Brooklyn. He inherited a moderate fortune from his father, it is said, and since his graduation from college has been living with his sister, Mrs. David Rubenstein. He was arrested on a technical charge of homicide by order of Coroner Flynn, who will hold an inquest this week. McGuire was released in $2,000 bail, furnished by Edward J. Cudding of 1,400 Lexington Avenue, who was the young man's guardian until he became of age.

Miss Dayton was the daughter of Mrs. Paul Askenasy, who lives with her husband at 2,071 Broadway. Less than a week ago Miss Dayton went to live with her aunt, Mrs. Jennie C. Weyman, in Decatur Avenue. The others in the automobile were Miss Violet Van Schaick, 16 years old, of 13 Franklin Avenue, New Rochelle; Miss Anna F. Willy, 22, of Winthrop Avenue, New Rochelle, and William H. Roche, 25, of 68 West Sixty-eighth Street.

The girls were collected at 9 P. M. at the Goldstein farm and of 40 cattle on the Fechter and Wicker farm at Maspeth will begin today. About 150 cattle, all that can be disposed of in one day at Barren Island, will be slain today on the farms and the carcasses will be sent to Barren Island.

Health Commissioner Goldwater obtained yesterday from Commissioner Adamson permission to use two old fire engines to generate steam, which will be used in disinfecting the vans used in removing the carcasses and in disinfecting the barns on the farms. After the conference yesterday, Dr. Goldwater issued orders that only pasteurized milk should be sold in this city, and ordered employes of his department to see that the order was enforced. A large part of the milk consumed here already is pasteurized.

5,000,000 GIFTS OFF TODAY ON XMAS SHIP

Collier Jason to Sail with $3,000,000 Worth of Presents for Children in War Zone.

WILSON SENDS MESSAGE

Cash and Articles Came from All Parts of the Country—Joliet Convicts Gave Shoes.

The collier Jason, laden with 5,000,000 Christmas presents for youngsters in the European war zone, had her hatches battened down last night in preparation for her departure this morning at 10 o'clock. James Keeley, owner of the Chicago Herald, who conceived the idea of sending some cheer at least to the small sufferers across the ocean, will be on hand to wish the ship Godspeed. President Wilson sent this message last night:

U. S. S. Jason: My best wishes for a safe voyage. May the good ship carry comfort and relief to the distressed and suffering.
WOODROW WILSON.

If the kindly thoughts which go with the gifts, the sacrifices which many of them represent, and the generous labor which produced others have their reward then there can be no doubt of the success of the Jason's voyage. For it is impossible to estimate even the thousands of men, women and children who will watch over the Jason's voyage with the knowledge that their gift is snugly packed in her holds.

It is a conservative estimate, says Mr. Keeley, which places the retail value of the cargo at $3,000,000, for who esa e dealers did their share toward making the Jason's trip a success by cutting prices in a way which, but for the good cause, would have made rivals shudder. With $43,000 Mr. Keeley bought more than 150,000 articles of clothing.

But it was not alone from Chicago that the gifts came. Here The New York World championed the cause. The Philadelphia North American took it up, as did The Kansas City Star, The San Francisco Chronicle, The Cleveland Plain Dealer, The Pittsburgh Leader, and other papers all over the United States, until 215 of them were concerned in the enterprise.

The gifts they collected came from the homes of the wealthy and the poor alike. From the former often came money, welcome for the wise purchases it enabled the managers of the fund to make. It was by the gifts of the latter that the Christmas spirit might be measured to the smallest.

From a mother came this letter, inclosing $1.11 and addressed:

Dear Children:

I have two little boys. They have no father. They are poor like some of you, and last Christmas their cousins received some gold fish. This year my little boys have been saving their money to buy some goldfish for themselves this Christmas. This is the goldfish money.

One youngster, who sent $1, wrote that he had sold his bull pup to get the money. A check for $231 from a school Superintendent in Iowa represented, he wrote, nothing but copper. The whole $231 was composed of pennies contributed by his children.

In the cargo are many beautiful dolls, but there is one, ragged and well worn. Once a sixteen-year-old girl was sent to Joliet prison for twenty-five years. It doesn't matter what she had done, but she was sent as a child that they let her take her doll. Always she kept it with her, her sole companion in her imprisonment, and this is the ragged doll now on its way to cheer some other little girl.

From Joliet also came between 500 and 600 pairs of shoes. The convicts made them, and when they asked permission the Warden granted it at once and offered the leather. But that wouldn't do. They wanted to earn every cent's worth of material that went into those shoes. So they held a public contract show and with the proceeds bought leather and findings. Then they made the shoes—no gift of the State, but of their own labor.

Apparently the Christmas ship had only one unexpected result. Some elderly women who for months, and some of them years, had been members of a Western sanitarium became so interested in knitting and sewing that they forgot their ailments, and Mr. Keeley says it's a fact that some of them quit the health resort and went home nappy and well.

The task of distributing the gifts abroad was a difficult one, but as it is now settled the presents for England and Belgium will be landed at Falmouth, where the British will attend to the distribution. Those for France will be landed at Marseilles, while from Genoa the Italian Government had offered a special train to carry Austria's allotment to her. Austria will move them along to Germany. Montenegro and Servia will be reached by way of Salonika in Greece, and Norway and Sweden have promised to look out for Finland.

How to reach Russia was a problem, for every one feared the German mines, but it was solved at last by loading the presents aboard a ship sailing for Archangel, the most northerly port in Russia, which sails today also. From Archangel the Government will bring them down to Petrograd on a special train.

JOBS HANG ON DUMBBELLS.

Heavy Weights Used in Civil Service Tests Shown to Commission.

Exhibitions of dumbbell lifting marked yesterday's session of the investigation of the Municipal Civil Service Commission by the State Commission. Two dumbbells, one weighing forty pounds, and the other fifty, were exhibited to show medical tests given to candidates for Civil Service positions, and Special Deputy Attorney General Frank Moss, counsel for the State Commission, announced that men who had been rejected on the physical test as defective would perform feats of strength to prove that they were physically fit. The only exhibition, however, was given by Mr. Moss and Dr. Henry Moskowitz, President of the Municipal Commission. They raised the dumbbells several times amid applause of the spectators.

It developed that Miles S. Vickery, 37 years old, of 522 West Fifty-eighth Street, was one of the victims of the weight-lifting test. He is a hunchback, 4 feet 2 inches tall, and weighs ninety pounds. He was rejected three weeks ago for the position of court stenographer for poor physique and defective vision. He said he had had eighteen years' experience as a public stenographer and had worked in civil, municipal, and Supreme Courts. Once he had worked thirty-two hours at a sitting without feeling any ill effects, he said. He has received honors in the Federal examinations, and was high on the Civil Service list, being able to write 180 words a minute. Mr. Moss said it was a strange proceeding to disqualify him because he could not lift a dumbbell.

"It looks as if the State body was making fun of the weight-lifting test," said Dr. Moskowitz. "The dumbbell test is really the first move in the process of elimination. It exposes defects, such as joint diseases. It is, of course, not a life insurance examination, but it is the simplest and most expeditious means of detecting gross defects."

Dr. H. P. de Forest, one of the medical examiners of the local body, testified that about 50,000 prospective Civil Service employes are examined each year.

When President Neu of the State Commission was asked if he had any comment to make regarding the charges made against the commission by Mayor Mitchel in Philadelphia on Thursday night, he said:

"His attacks is in line with his previous statements and actions, and too scurrilous to answer. He ought to be ashamed of himself."

The Mayor was quoted as saying, among other things, that the State Commission's chief activity was to find exempt positions for their own families and to break down the public charities in the interest of persons unknown.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Furniture Not to Pay Duty Under the Cotton Schedule.

The Board of General Appraisers, in sustaining a protest by F. B. Vandegrift & Co. yesterday, disposed of an involved tariff question dealing with the classification to be accorded furniture covered with cotton velvet. Since the velvet predominated in value in the articles over the wooden parts and upholstery, the Collector exacted duty at the rate of 47½ per cent. ad valorem under the Tariff act of 1909. This paragraph relates chiefly to heavy women's dress fabrics. The importers asserted at the hearing that the furniture is properly dutiable as manufactures of cotton at the rate of 45 per cent. ad valorem.

When the issue is finally settled by the Customs Court, it will have a bearing on the return to be made by customs officers on importations made under the present tariff. The contention of the importers was that the furniture cannot be properly classified as was done for the reason that paragraph imposes duty on the merchandise enumerated therein according to the number of square yards contained, and that, as the furniture although in chief value of velvet, is also composed of wood, upholstery, stuffing, etc., which commodities are not susceptible of square yard measurement, it is dutiable according to the component material of chief value. Judge Cooper, in his decision for the board, holds that the articles in controversy cannot be regarded for dutiable purposes as manufactures of goods made or cut from velvet, but must be held dutiable as claimed, the Collector being reversed.

The Dennison Manufacturing Company and the Stone & Downer Company lost yesterday in protests as to the tissue and wrapping paper provisions of the present tariff law. The merchandise was invoiced as tissue paper and assessed for duty at 30 per cent. ad valorem under the specific provision for this kind of paper. The claim was for a rate of 25 per cent., as wrapping paper not specially provided for. It appeared from the proof that a very large, if not the chief use of the tissue paper is for wrapping purposes. Judge Fischer says there is no dispute as to the facts. The only issue presented, says the General Appraiser, is whether the goods are more specifically provided for as tissue paper than as wrapping paper claimed.

In finding against the claims of the importers, the board concedes that the tissue paper is likewise a wrapping paper, at the same time it is equally true that as such it belongs to a certain definite and distinct class of wrapping papers well known and recognized in trade and commerce under the name of tissue paper.

TWO DETECTIVES INDICTED.

Gambardella and Damico, Charged with Extortion, Held by Grand Jury.

Detective Sergeant Liborio Gambardella of the Third Detective Bureau and Detective Agidia Damico, who were arrested on Thursday night after Dominico Muccio, a coffee house proprietor, had passed to them $25 in marked money, were indicted yesterday for extortion and were held in $4,000 bail each by Judge Mulqueen in General Sessions. The complainant, Muccio, said that the two had told him that they were excise officers and would arrest him for selling liquor without a license unless he paid them $50. The marked money was prepared by Capt. Cray at Police Headquarters. Two detectives waited outside, and when the proprietor blew his nose they went in and arrested Gambardella and Damico and found the marked money in Gambardella's possession.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

So rapidly are events moving along the line of improvement that it seemed likely yesterday that revised estimates would have to be made in respect to the probable time of resuming Stock Exchange activities. Exchanges of views which were had in important financial circles yesterday, led to the belief that a partal resumption of Stock Exchange trading might be undertaken in the very near future. This expectation was strengthened by the decision of both the Stock Exchange Committee and of the committee of unlisted bond dealers to relieve State and municipal bonds of all price restrictions. Thus one important department of the bond market is restored to natural conditions at least so far as domestic transactions are concerned. The first milestone has thus been set toward the return of the Stock Exchange to a free and open market which is essential to the real exercise of the Stock Exchange's functions.

In short-term notes and in bonds the upward movement has lately been so rapid as to lead bond dealers to look for a reaction, although none was manifesting itself yesterday. Short-term securities were in continued active demand at advancing prices and many bonds showed large gains. This buying reflected in general the more hopeful sentiment prevailing in financial circles and specifically the increased ease in money, which promises, bankers believe, to become still more accentuated later on.

A very prominent international banking-house lowered its rate on standing call loans from 6 per cent. to 5½ per cent., the first reduction of this kind made under 6 per cent., although a number of new loans have recently been made at 5½ per cent.

A good deal of money was available at that rate yesterday and in some instances of very specially desirable loans the rate was as low as 5 per cent. Some of the high-grade note issues outdistanced even this decline selling on an interest basis as low as 4¾ per cent. Bank acceptances, which lately were selling on a 4½ per cent. basis, were yesterday changing hands as low as 4¼ per cent. Such tangible evidence of an increasingly comfortable banking position, the continuance of which has been bestassured within the last few days through the very decided change for the better in exchange rates, has naturally enough served to arouse increased cheerfulness.

Official action taken yesterday assured the reopening of the Cotton Exchange on Monday, when trading will be resumed without any restrictions. The New Orleans Cotton Exchange will also resume trading on that day. This was another quarter in which the return of normal conditions was heralded. Not unnaturally under the circumstances both Cotton Exchange and Stock Exchange seats commanded higher prices. Reports again renewed yesterday that Austria might seek peace with the Allies on her own account, contributed something to the day's cheerfulness, although these reports were received with great reserve. The security markets and the financial situation, generally, cannot be regarded as having been freed of the possible influence of war news which the markets would regard as adverse, and this was one of the reasons why a tone of caution pervaded some of the financial sentiment of the day, although the real improvement which had taken place in underlying banking conditions was every where recognized.

DISCUSS DISCOUNT RATES.

Reserve Board Will Probably Make Announcement Today.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The Federal Reserve Board spent practically all of this afternoon in a discussion of the rediscount rates to be fixed for the twelve reserve banks. It was said that the members were so nearly in accord as to the rates to be fixed that an announcement would be made after a meeting to be held tomorrow morning. Members of the board look upon the initial rates as largely experimental, and it is not unlikely that they will be readjusted just as soon as the banks have had an opportunity to test the demand for accommodation.

There has always been conviction that the new system must be set in operation with as little friction as possible, and modifications in the direction of liberalizing and improving the machinery of credit being made later as progress was made in bringing the business of the whole country under the system. The action now taken probably will not be adhered to indefinitely.

It is regarded as the course that the bankers collectively desire to follow and have advised, but at the same time, the Reserve Board recognizes that a high rate of discount will not go far to relieve business needs or to increase business activity, and sooner or later the board will expect to consider modifications that must be accomplished in different parts of the country.

Whether ultimately an attempt will be made to fix a uniform rate for the whole country remains to be seen, but it is known that that is what more than one member of the board has in mind. A discount rate around five or six per cent. will enable member banks to do business just as they do now so far as rediscount is concerned. At the same time the effect of reserves, it is claimed, will be essential to maintain an undisturbed level.

It was reported tonight that the board had decided on a rate not greater than six nor less than five per cent., this to be changed later if found unsatisfactory.

CUTS STANDING CALL RATE.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Make First Reduction to Below 6 Per Cent.

Kuhn, Loeb & Co. yesterday reduced their rate on standing call loans from 6 per cent. to 5½ per cent. This is the first reduction on standing call loans to below 6 per cent., although in a number of instances within the last few days new call loans have been made at 5½ per cent., and in exceptional cases at 5 per cent. The reduction in rates by this banking house was commented on widely as another factor contributing to the improvement which has been manifesting itself in the money market and financial situation generally.

Loans which were standing when the Stock Exchange closed are not being called, but the money market lately has become so free that it is now easy to obtain money with which to pay off standing call loans if borrowers desire. This is one reason why it was thought that the reduction announced yesterday would tend to bring about other reductions. So long as it was not feasible to make new loans differences in rates did not result in shifting of loans, but now there is a considerable amount of money which is available for new loans and thus for the replacement of old loans.

Since the Stock Exchange closed, borrowers have reduced their loans on collateral in considerable amount and in the majority of cases have strengthened the margins on their loans. Some reductions recently have been made contingent upon the deposit of additional collateral. Where opportunities of this kind have been offered to lenders, all but a relatively small percentage of them have availed themselves of the lower rate by depositing additional collateral.

24 NEW BANKS AUTHORIZED.

Controller of Currency Issues Report for October.

The monthly bulletin issued by the Controller of the Currency shows that in October twelve formal applications for conversion of State banks or reorganization of State or private banks were filed and five formal applications to organize national banks by individuals, not connected with existing State or private banks.

In the same month twenty-one applications were approved, eleven of these being for conversion of State banks or reorganization of State or private banks. Twenty-four banks, with a total capital of $1,295,000, were authorized to begin business, of which twelve with a capital of $315,000 had individual capital of less than $50,000, and twelve, with a capital of $315,000, had individual capital of $50,000 or more.

On Oct. 31, 1914, the total number of national banks organized was 10,652; of which 3,074 had discontinued business, leaving in existence 7,578 banks with an authorized capital of $1,072,492,175, and circulation outstanding, secured by United States bonds, $739,716,693, and by other securities, $361,119,940. Circulation to the amount of $20,632,278, covered by lawful money deposited with the Treasurer of the United States on account of liquidating and insolvent national banks and associations which had reduced their circulation, is also outstanding, making the total amount of national bank circulation outstanding $1,121,468,911.

FORD ASSETS GROW.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Nov. 13.—Total assets of $61,632,257.16 and a surplus of $48,827,032.07 are shown in the balance sheet of the Ford Motor Company for the year ended Sept. 30, 1914. Despite complaints of general business depression, these figures are practically double the corresponding figures of last year, when assets amounted to $35,033,919.86 and the surplus was $28,124,173.68.

Cash on hand and in the banks on Sept. 30, 1914, amounted to $27,441,468.79, against $13,225,710.82 at the same time last year. Buildings and building fixtures now reach the total of $10,714,928.45, compared with $4,615,156.82 last year. There are also tremendous increases in the items of factory equipment, office furniture and fixtures, power plant, machinery, tools, patterns and patents.

The surprise to the bankers who received the statement of the company today is the enormous gain of cash on hand despite the distribution of profits among employes under the new profit-sharing system.

REDUCES MINIMUM RESERVE

Clearing House Adopts Requirements of New Laws.

The Clearing House Association approved unanimously yesterday the amendments to the constitution recommended by the Clearing House Committee to reduce the reserve requirements of the association to those of the Federal Reserve act and the new State banking law, with a minor exception in the case of trust companies.

The association also acted favorably on the application of the Federal Reserve Bank for admission as a clearing member." This puts it on practically the same basis in respect to the Clearing House as the Sub-Treasury.

PROVISIONS.

Reports of a fair cash demand for meats, as well as predictions of moderate receipts of hogs, had a stimulating influence on the provision market during the first part of the day, and there was a fairly active demand through commission houses believed to be for the account of stock yard interests. The break in the grain markets, however, caused weakness during the afternoon, and the market closed below the previous closing level. Receipts of hogs at Kansas City were 13,000 head; Omaha received 5,400 head and St. Joseph 9,800 head.

COTTON.

The Board of Managers of the New York Cotton Exchange made the announcement yesterday morning that the Exchange would open for unrestricted trading at the usual hour on Monday. This statement was received with intense satisfaction on the floor, which was crowded with members and others who had gathered together in anticipation of some such action. The New Orleans Exchange will also reopen on Monday, and for the first time since last Summer all three of the big futures markets will be in operation next week. The last ballot under the international agreement of September was held yesterday afternoon resulting in the liquidation of 22,500 bales of December contracts at prices ranging from 8.50 down to 7.51c., of which the new corporation sold 21,300 bales. December contracts on the curb here sold off to 7.46c., but Liverpool advanced a point, and Southern spot markets continued steady.

Liquidation of December contracts through the Voluntary Committee again made considerable progress, total sales for the day amounting to 45,500 bags, including switches from December to May at 55 points. Early in the day the selling through the committee caused an easier feeling in the market, and prices declined to a basis of 5.35 for December, but on the decline there were evidences of a better trade demand, and the market rallied about 15 points, closing quotations being at the best of the day with December quoted at 5.50@5.55; March at 5.85@5.90; May, 6.05@6.10, and July at 6.85@6.90. The local spot market was unchanged, with Rio 7s quoted at 6¼c.

COTTON EXCHANGE TO OPEN MONDAY

TRADING SUSPENDED JULY 31

As Soon as Possible Trading Will Be According to New Standards Under Cotton Futures Law.

The New York Cotton Exchange will reopen for unrestricted dealings next Monday. At the same time the New Orleans Board will reopen, and as the Liverpool Exchange has been in operation for several days, next week will see the three primary future markets of the world in action for the first time since the local board was closed on July 31.

The Board of Governors held a long meeting yesterday morning, a part of the time being devoted to a discussion of the meeting at Washington on Thursday between officers of the Department of Agriculture and cotton men. When word was received that the Governors were in session brokers gathered in large numbers on the floor, and when the formal announcement of the reopening came enthusiasm broke forth.

In a more detailed notice later in the day the Governors requested that trading in old-style contracts be confined as far as posible to the liquidation of outstanding obligations. The Inspection Bureau of the Exchange made preparation during the period of inactivity to certificate cotton under the standards established by the recently enacted cotton futures law. As the exact form in which contracts are to be worded to conform to the Government idea of proper grading has not been fixed, it is expected that considerable leeway will be given brokers during the early stages of business.

The Governing Board desires that until further notice trading on "calls" be in the old-style contract for the November and December option, in new and old style for January to May delivery, and in the latest contracts for later positions. All trades except on the calls will be, as far as possible, in the new contracts, unless otherwise specifically stated.

The syndicate of banks which has engaged to advance $1,500,000 to carry something like 200,000 bales of cotton comprised in contracts outstanding when the Exchange closed, until they can be liquidated, will begin its offices as soon as the Exchange opens. It is planned for a corporation managed by several brokers to buy at 9 cents a pound that portion of the cotton which cannot be carried by the brokers long on contracts, and sell as much of it as possible when the market is well under way. If the price should fall to 7½ cents the syndicate will take over the unliquidated portion at this figure. The syndicate will receive back the funds advanced through payments made by the brokers aided, the money to be raised by a tax of $1.25 laid upon the brokers for each 100 shares sold or bought by them.

The reopening will end one of the most trying periods in the history of the Exchange. When business was suspended on July 31, after three firms had failed, one with 80,000 bales outstanding, it was found that an international account existed which involved fully 340,000 bales in addition to a large outstanding interest of local and Southern origin. Steps were taken to liquidate the "straddle" with Liverpool, and in a measure were successful, although a substantial account still remains to be disposed of.

The reopening of the board was reflected in a further rise in the price for Cotton Exchange seats. The quotation was advanced to $9,000 yesterday from $8,000 on Thursday. Two seats sold last month at $7,000 each.

New Orleans Exchange to Open.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 13.—The New Orleans Cotton Exchange will open for unrestricted trading Monday, Nov. 16. This decision was reached by the Board of Directors of the Exchange at a meeting today, after it was announced that the New York Exchange would open on that date.

Edward L. Stevens's Library Sold.

Numerous friends and acquaintances of the late Associate City Superintendent of Schools Edward L. Stevens attended the sale of his library by the Merwin Company yesterday morning and afternoon. There were no costly items in the collection. The highest sum paid was $9 by L. V. Cass for some colored and plain lantern slides with imported lantern for exhibiting the same. The total for the sale was $870.

NATION'S GREAT GROWTH.

Foreign and Domestic Bureau Issues Report for Period of 1800 to 1914.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13.—The enormous growth of the United States during the last half century was shown in a report issued today by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. While the report is for the period 1800-1914, the meagre statistics for the first half of the century makes them comparatively unimportant.

After pointing out that since 1850 the population of the country has more than quadrupled, being now more than 100,000,000, the report says:

"In the same period, however, foreign commerce has grown from $318,000,000 to $4,259,000,000 and the per capita value of exports from $16.96 to $23.27. National wealth has increased from $7,000,000,000 in 1870 to approximately $140,000,000,000; money in circulation, from $278,000,000 to $3,419,000,000, and New York bank clearings from approximately $5,000,000,000 to over $85,000,000,000, while for the entire country bank clearings have grown from $52,000,000,000 in 1887, the earliest year for which figures are available, to $174,000,000,000 in 1913.

"Evidences of improved social conditions among the people are also found in the statistical record. For example, 19,000,000 children are now enrolled in public schools and about 200,000 students in colleges and other higher institutions of learning, and the total expenditures on behalf of education approximate $500,000,000 a year, the result being a rapid increase in general intelligence and a marked decrease in illiteracy.

"Over 22,000 newspapers and periodicals are published and the report shows a steady growth in the number of libraries in the country.

"In 1850 depositors in savings banks were 251,000 in number; today the number is 11,000,000 with deposits, exclusive of those in other savings institutions, aggregating $4,375,000,000, or more than one hundred times as much as at the middle of the last century.

"Increased activity on the farms, in the factories, and in the great transportation industries has also developed during the last half century. The value of farms and farm property increased from $4,000,000,000 in 1850 to $41,000,000,000 in 1910; the value of manufactures from $1,000,000,000 to over $20,000,000,000 and the number of miles of railway in operation from 9,021 in 1850 to 268,033 in 1912. In the last quarter century the number of passengers carried has increased from 492,000,000 to 1,004,000,000 and the volume of freight handled from 632,000,000 to 1,845,000,000 short tons. Nearly 20,000,000,000 pieces of outgoing mail matter are handled annually by the Post Office Department, which disbursed in this important public service last year $262,000,000, or $2.70 per capita."

MORE FOREIGN ORDERS.

Motor Trucks, Overcoats, Blankets, and Sweaters Wanted.

Speaking yesterday of the orders received by his company from foreign Governments for automobiles and other supplies for military purposes, A. C. Vanderpoel, manager of the export department of the Driggs Seabury Ordnance Corporation and the Bessemer Motor Truck Company, said the contracts call for the delivery of 470 motor trucks. These are intended for the British, French, and Russian armies, and will be shipped as rapidly as they can be assembled.

The contracts call for the immediate shipment of 40 Vulcan trucks, ranging from one to seven tons, and 30 Bessemer trucks in three weeks' time. These latter vehicles must have a capacity of from one and one-half to two tons. The contracts specify that 200 Vulcan trucks of the capacity named above are to be sent forward in sixty days, and an equal number of the Bessemer trucks within the same period.

Mr. Vanderpoel also is filling contracts for 60,000 army overcoats, 200,000 blankets, and 100,000 sweaters. The latter are to be forwarded within thirty days. Mr. Vanderpoel seemed to think that he will have no difficulty in getting the goods within the contract time. Large quantities of shoes also are wanted.

COTTON TARIFF AGAIN CUT.

Another customs case involving the Jacquard section of the Tariff act of 1913 was decided yesterday when the Board of General Appraisers sustained a protest by M. Bauer. The merchandise covered by the protest is cotton table damask and cotton damask table covers all woven on the Jacquard loom. It was returned for duty at the rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem under Paragraph 258 of the present law and was claimed to be properly dutiable at 22 per cent. under Paragraph 263, providing for cotton table damask.

The assessment made by the Collector was based on the theory that the goods are "all other Jacquard figured manufactures of cotton," as specified in Paragraph 258. Testimony was introduced by the Government tending to show that there is a class of cotton table damask manufactured in this country on the Dobby looms, but Judge Cooper says it is evident the great majority of that imported is manufactured on Jacquard looms. The sole question for decision was which of the two provisions is the more specific and more aptly describes the merchandise. The construction to be placed on Paragraph 258 was discussed by the board in the case of M. Gardner & Co., where the tribunal held that the clause "Jacquard figured manufactures of cotton" was indefinite and ambiguous, and did not as specifically cover the goods in question as the provision for "cotton towels" and "cotton cloth woven figured."

MATANZAS NOT YET IN.

Boat Carrying Dyestuffs Is Expected to Show Up Today.

The elusive steamship Matanzas, laden with a cargo of dyestuffs consigned to color firms in this city, again disappointed the expectant merchants yesterday by failing to arrive. The vessel was due on Monday and, every day since, anxious inquiries have been received at the office of C. H. Ruhl, the consignee. As the day wore on yesterday, telephone calls became more frequent, but to all the same answer was given that nothing had been heard from the ship since she left Rotterdam Oct. 30.

Mr. Ruhl, himself, seemed to think the Matanzas would get in this morning. In order that a steady supply of dyestuffs and other German products may be assured, Mr. Ruhl has chartered ships flying the American flag to ply between Rotterdam and this port up to the end of January. The steamer Sun, which left the Dutch port this week is expected here about Nov. 22, while the Obidense, leaving here next week, will bring a cargo of dyestuffs which should reach here in December.

Another ship to be utilized by Mr. Ruhl in relieving the dyestuff situation, is the Massapequa, which left New York Nov. 3 with relief supplies sent to Europe by the Rockefeller Foundation. He has chartered this vessel for the return voyage, and she will be loaded at Rotterdam with dyestuffs, cyanide of potassium, and possibly German sugar beet seed. Other vessels will be chartered as occasion requires.

DRY GOODS SALES IMPROVE.

Holiday Wares Moving Freely and Retail Trading Reported Excellent.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 13.—Marshall Field & Co. in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"Holiday articles in the dry goods trade are moving more freely and there are some reports of excellent retail sales.

"Wool dress goods are in demand and prices of woolen fabrics are advancing, due to the inability of manufacturers to secure the finer foreign wools.

"The cotton market has been firmer during the week."

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Edward W. Browning Buys Seventy-first Street Residence —Deal in Old Chelsea—$210,000 Apartment Sale in Bronx—$18,000 for Fifth Avenue Store—Broadway Business Rentals.

Of chief interest in the realty market yesterday was the purchase by Edward W Browning of the four-story residence at 31 West Seventy-first Street, covering a plot 25 by 102.3, between Central Park West and Columbus Avenue. The property was acquired from Lucius M. Stanton, who is one of the veteran west side residents, having occupied the house for the last twenty-five years. LeRoy Coventry was the broker in the transaction.

Mr. Browning has been an active buyer and operator in the Seventy-second Street section of the west side, and is now completing three thirteen-story hotels on 25-foot plots, respectively at 43 and 118 West Seventy-second Street and 126 West Seventy-third Street. While no definite plans are yet decided the Seventy-first Street plot is likely to be improved in a similar manner in the near future. For the property Mr. Browning paid $37,000, subject to a mortgage of $20,000.

Deal On West 29th Street.

An investor has purchased from the estate of Henry V. Mead, 342 West Twenty-ninth Street, a three-story high-stoop brownstone private dwelling on a lot 16.6 by 100. H. V. Mead & Co. negotiated the sale.

$210,000 Bronx Sale.

Another important deal in the Hunts Point section of the Bronx, which has been remarkably active this Fall considering general market conditions, was reported yesterday by the Podgur Realty Company, who sold to an investor the five-story apartment house on the northeast corner of Southern Boulevard and Aldus Street.

The structure was completed about two years ago and occupies a plot fronting 100 feet on Southern Boulevard and 110 feet on Aldus Street. The site forms part of a larger plot, measuring 100 by 94, which the company purchased in August, 1912.

In June of last year it disposed of 84 feet on Aldus Street, which it had improved with an apartment house. The property sold yesterday was held at $210,000.

$18,000 For Fifth Avenue Store.

The lease was recorded yesterday from Ida L. Frese to James L. Rosenberg of the store in the altered building at 379 Fifth Avenue, 24.6 front, between Thirty-fifth and Thirty-sixth Streets, for $18,000. The term of the lease is twenty years and seven months from Nov. 1, 1914.

A Recent Buyer.

Charlotte Harrison is the buyer of the apartment house at the southwest corner of Northern Avenue and 180th Street, sold recently by the M. Morgenthau, Jr., Company for the Haven Construction Company. She acquired title, taking the property subject to a mortgage of $90,000, and giving back a second mortgage of $16,780.

Bronx Borough.

Kurz & Uren have sold for the Thomas D. Malcolm Construction Company 3,042 Park Avenue, the six-story, new law apartment house, having a frontage on Park Avenue of 62 feet by an average depth of 80 feet.

The M. Morgenthau, Jr., Company has sold for Teresa Wallach the vacant lot on the east side of Washington Avenue, adjoining the southeast corner of East 185th Street and Washington Avenue, in the Bronx. The purchaser is a builder. The lot is part of the Bassford estate, and was purchased by Mrs. Wallach twenty years ago.

New Jersey.

Morris Friedlander has purchased the Lawyers' Building, on corner of Main and Academy Streets, Pasaic. It occupies a plot 51 by 100, and was held at $150,000.

The four-story apartment houses with stores at 354 to 358 Springfield Avenue, Newark, have been purchased by Benjamin M. Weinberg for investment.

Bank Enlarges Grand Central Branch.

The Corn Exchange Bank has leased space on the ground floor of the Transit Annex, now under construction at 6 to 10 East Forty-third Street, connecting with the main building at 5 and 7 East Forty-second Street, where the ground floor is occupied by the bank's Grand Central Branch. The extra space will be the bank room for ladies' use. There will be an arcade entrance from Forty-second to Forty-third Street. Homer Foot, Jr., was the broker.

Business Leases.

Nelson, Lee & Green have leased for Jesse W. Ehrich, lessee from Kline & Jackson of the property at the southwest corner of Broadway and Ninety-sixth Street, the store there to Oscar B. Abbott. Alterations will be made for a restaurant.

Porter & Co. have leased for D. & J. Tobin, Tobinell Lifshitz the store located at 306 West 125th Street.

Ernest F. Hafner has leased for Mrs. Margaret Buckley to the Pacific Motor Car Company the building at 210 West Fifty-fourth Street, 25 by 100.5, adjoining the six-story structure on the southeast corner of Broadway. Extensive alterations will be made, connecting both buildings for automobile salesrooms.

Madison Avenue House Lease.

The four-story dwelling at 301 Madison Avenue, adjoining the northeast corner of Forty-first Street, has been leased by the Douglas Robinson, Charles S. Brown Company for Ida E. Bliss and Justine A. Stafford to Edward H. Proudman.

Real Estate Notes.

A meeting of the Real Estate Owners' Protective Association has been called for Monday evening at the Hotel Majestic, Seventy-second Street and Central Park West.

A building loan of $115,000 has been made by the City Mortgage Company to P. McMorrow Sons for a new building on the south side of 123d Street, 240 feet west of Lenox Avenue, a plot 59.11 by 100.11.

TRACE SPLIT CHECKS OF SIEGEL BANK

Former Cashier Describes the Method of Dividing Loans Into Unequal Amounts.

MONEY TO FIRM'S ACCOUNT

Advertising to Hint That It Was a Savings Bank—"Nothing Proved," Says Siegel.

Special to The New York Times.

GENESEO, N. Y., Nov. 13.—Frank L. Champion, cashier until the receiver took charge of Henry Siegel & Co., private bankers, was called as a witness this afternoon in the trial of Mr. Siegel on a charge of grand larceny. The former cashier told how nearly all the $2,500,000 deposited by 15,000 individuals was loaned to the Siegel-Vogel mercantile enterprises. The witness testified that at the direction of his employers he had drawn "split checks" to conceal the transfer of the borrowed funds from one store to another. These checks were not charged to any account, he said, but were held merely as cash items, and though representing hundreds of thousands of dollars they were bundled up and kept only as a memoranda in his cash drawer.

The examination of Mr. Champion, which was conducted by Assistant District Attorney Arthur C. Train, evoked testimony tending to show that an effort was made to give the impression that the private bank was a Savings Bank under the law. The prosecution exhibited a form of newspaper advertisement, announcing the opening of the private bank in the Fourteenth Street Store, which Mr. Champion said he had prepared at the instruction of his employers. At the bottom of one of these advertising forms was this notice:

> To publish our ad. under any of the above classifications is a violation of the State banking law. Our ads. can be placed with the ads. of savings banks in papers where no classification is given or when they are classified as follows: "Financial," "Dividends," "Interest Notices," "Private Bankers," "Interest."
> We prefer to have our ad. at top of savings banks, but classified as "Financial." If our ad. cannot be placed either over or in the adjoining column to savings banks, or under it, differently classified, don't publish."

Testimony was given that depositors were attracted to the private bank of Henry Siegel & Co. by small iron "savings banks," described in thousands of circulars distributed through the Fourteenth Street store. The distribution of these small iron "savings banks," it was held, gave the impression that the private bank was a savings bank. One of the circulars, on which was a picture of one of the little iron banks, read as follows:

> THIRTY-FIVE CENTS FOR ONE DOLLAR SAVINGS BANKS.—Although the regular price of these banks—little safes—has always been $1, as we sell them at 35 cents each, because the understanding is that the banks are to be opened only in the Fourteenth Street Store. WE KEEP THE KEY.
> You pay us 35 cents. We give you one of the banks. You take it home and begin to save money. When you wish to have the bank opened you bring it to us. We will open it and you do as you like with your savings. That is your affair.
> The banks are brand new, made of the finest steel, beautifully oxidized and fitted with a device to prevent money from being improperly extracted.
> THE FOURTEENTH STREET STORE.
> HENRY SIEGEL, President.

The morning and the early part of the afternoon session's of the court were consumed by the examination of Louis A. Keidel, Oliver I. Pilate and Alfred J. Oxenham, assistant cashiers of the National Bank of Commerce. From the testimony of the first witness the prosecution endeavored to show that starting with the balance on April 20, 1910, giving the defendant the benefit thereof, the amount of withdrawals by check, etc., between April 20 and June 14 greatly exceeded the amount of the deposits on account of the Fourteenth Street Store, but that the account was credited during that period with the proceeds of the four notes discounted on the strength of credit statements of Feb. 1, 1910, and, further, that in order to pay the check of $684.05 indorsed to Austin Nichols & Co. it was necessary to have recourse to the avails of one of these four notes, because the deposits had been exhausted.

Mr. Pilate and Mr. Oxenham both testified that it was on the strength of the alleged false statements that they had been induced to approve the loans obtained by Siegel and Vogel.

Nothing Proved Says Siegel.

Mr. Siegel apparently is well satisfied with the progress of the defense. At the hotel late this afternoon, following the adjournment of court, he said:

"They haven't proved anything on me yet. I didn't get that $684.05. Austin, Nichols & Co. got it."

The people of Geneseo are taking greater interest daily in the trial. Toward the middle of the afternoon every available seat in the large courtroom was taken. Some of the women who attended each session of court now bring their knitting, and today one of them almost completed a fine wool sock before adjournment.

Mr. Champion gave the most interesting testimony of the day. He testified that he was employed in Chicago in 1903 for about ten months by Mr. Siegel in a private bank there. The defendant instructed him how to conduct that institution. He left that bank when it was discontinued in 1905, went South and after two months went to Philadelphia.

When the Fourteenth Street Store was started in 1904, he wrote to Mr. Siegel who, in reply, requested him to come to see him. He was informed by Mr. Siegel and Mr. Vogel that they wanted to start a private bank in the Fourteenth Street Store and desired him to take charge of it. He did not recall whether they called it a "savings bank." He explained, however, that there was no question about the advertisement of the private bank as a savings institution because the laws of the State forbade it.

Mr. Champion then told how Mr. Siegel had instructed him to order 200 small metal banks which were sold to the customers of the Fourteenth Street Store to encourage them to deposit their savings. He identified the advertisement form and the circulars advertising the opening of the private bank.

Mr. Siegel visited the private bank two or three times a week, according to Mr. Champion, and discussed its condition. He had access to its books and papers. The witness then identified the bank's ledgers which he helped to keep.

Q.—Did you send these to Siegel? A.—I sent them to the office.

Q.—Whose office? A.—Mr. Vogel's office.

Mr. Champion testified finally that Mr. Siegel and Mr. Vogel occupied the office jointly. He explained that the bank and the Fourteenth Street Store started business at the same time. When he was asked if the money deposited in the bank was invested, he said bonds were bought and loans were made to individuals. The bonds, he said, were sold at a profit about five years ago.

Mr. Champion said Mr. Siegel did not tell him how the funds were to be used. He conducted the bank as he had conducted the bank in Chicago. He testified that the bank had accounts with the different Siegel-Vogel stores, and when asked what became of the physical cash admitted that some went to those institutions. That was what was generally done, he admitted.

Trace Loans to Stores.

The witness then qualified more specifically that he had sent money direct to the Simpson-Crawford Company, the Henry Siegel Company of Boston, and Henry Siegel Company, wholesale.

Q.—What was the first loan made? A.—To the Fourteenth Street Store.

Q.—When was it made? A.—Aug. 1, 1904, $10,000.

Q.—The first loan made to anybody? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did the Fourteenth Street Store give the bank a note for that loan? A.—I believe it did.

Q.—Did you demand and receive a note? A.—Notes were filled out for the Secretary of the store when loans were made.

Q.—What was done with them? A.—Kept in the offfice of Mr. Vogel.

Q.—By that you mean also the office of Siegel? A.—Yes.

Q.—When loans were made to the Boston store, did the firm give notes? A.—I believe so.

According to Mr. Champion the first loan to the Boston store was made on Jan. 31, 1906. It was $15,000.

Pieces of torn paper which Mr. Champion identified as notes he had made out at the time of making loans to the Fourteenth Street and Boston stores, were exhibited by Mr. Train, but the witness could not find anything on them to indicate that they ever had been executed.

Q.—Did the bank make a loan to one enterprise of $20,000 about July 11, 1912? A.—Yes, Simpson-Crawford, $20,000.

Q.—Was that loan repaid? A.—I can't say.

Q.—Was interest paid on it. A.—Interest was charged against the store's account on our books.

"How was that money sent to Simpson-Crawford?" asked Mr. Train as he displayed before the witness two checks. These were identified as the checks by which the loan referred to was made. They were drawn on the National Park Bank to the order of Henry Siegel & Co., bankers, signed by Frank E. Vogel, and indorsed to the Simpson-Crawford store. The first was for $7,379.58 and the second for $12,620.42, in all $20,000.

These two checks illustrated an "ordinary split" which made it possible for the Simpson-Crawford Company to deposit the checks in different banks, both of which were lending money to the allied Siegel-Vogel stores.

Two Sets of Books.

Mr. Champion's following testimony went into the details of a loan of $25,000 made on Oct. 17, 1911. He explained that two sets of books were kept, one by the bookkeeper of the store, which showed only the credits to the stores indentified by numbers. The Simpson Crawford Company was No. 1, the Fourteenth Street Store No. 2, the Boston store No. 3, Henry Siegel's personal account No. 4, blank account No. 5, and the Siegel Stores Corporation of Chicago No. 6.

The names of the individuals or stores were shown by a private ledger kept in the bank. According to the witness there were times when no entry of loans was made in the books, these charges being made as "cash items slips," deposited in his cash drawer.

Mr. Train obtained an admission from Mr. Champion that there were about $688,000 in loans represented only by these cash item slips on Sept. 18, 1913. Although these ran over a considerable period they had not been posted in any of the books of the bank. These loans included a personal loan of $154,000 to Henry Siegel.

When Justice Clark adjourned court until 10 o'clock on Monday morning he announced that a letter addressed to one of the jurors, which he believed had some bearing on the case, had come into his possession. He warned the jurors not to discuss the case. A threatening letter has been received by Mr. Siegel, but he received similar messages in New York City and seems to regard them with no feeling of uneasiness.

SLIM CROWD HEARS WHITE.

Few Ministers Occupied Seats Reserved for Them at Carnegie Hall.

To an audience that only half filled Carnegie Hall, Bouck White told last night of how he came to be sentenced to six months in the Workhouse after disturbing the services of the Calvary Baptist Church last June.

Congressman-elect Meyer London, who made the speech of welcome, said that he had doubted the propriety of accepting the invitation to attend, and that if Bouck White should turn out to have been a genuine church disturber, he was not entitled to sympathy, but that he had faith in White.

"White made a mistake," he said, "he never should have gone there. I account for his going on the score that he is a dreamer and not a practical man. He should have left that preacher alone to his prayer for there was special need in the Rockefeller Church that the preacher should have as long a time as possible to pray for the sins of his congregation.

Most of the seats on the stage that had been reserved for clergymen were vacant.

White, in arraigning Calvary Baptist Church and the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, of which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is a member, commented on the absence of his brother clergymen and said they would live "to rue the day they found it convenient to be silent in the face of issues such as he brought to the Protestant Church."

A resolution was passed calling upon Dr. Woelfkin to meet Bouck White in debate upon the theme "Did Christ teach the immorality of being rich?"

BOY RABBIT HUNTER FREED.

Jersey Game Board Gets Young Phillipson Out of Jail.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Nov. 13.—Oscar Phillipson, the 19-year-old boy from North Plainfield, who on Nov. 5 was committed to the Somerset County Jail for 120 days by Justice Thomas Snape for killing rabbit out of season and using a repeating rifle, obtained his release late this afternoon and is now at his home. The lad was released in $250 bonds furnished by ex-Mayor Newton B. Smalley of North Plainfield after a conference in the office of W. S. Angleman of counsel for the boy, at which President Ernest Napier of the State Game Commission, Game Warden William Hoblitzel of Rahway and Mr. Angleman were present. Mr. Napier agreed to pay personally the costs of the court, amounting between $8 and $9, and after Justice Snape signed the bond at the committing Magistrate, the party went to Somerville in Mr. Napier's automobile and got Phillipson. The boy was delighted, and the automobile ride home, he said, was the first one he had ever had.

WOMAN HURT IN AUTO CRASH

Three Gloucester City Men Go to Jail as Result of Collision.

CAMDEN, N. J., Nov. 13.—Lawrence Bowe, a contractor; Jacob Anderson, a politician, and William Blessing, owner of an automobile garage, all of Gloucester City, are in jail there as the result of an automobile accident on the Woodbury Pike outside of Gloucester City yesterday morning.

Margaret Siegel, 30 years old, of 862 North Thirteenth Street, Philadelphia, whose name was also given as Flossie Funk, is in the Cooper Hospital here, where it is said she cannot survive the injuries she received in the accident. Her skull is fractured, her right arm badly torn, and one eye is destroyed. The members of the party were at Westville last night and were very gay. They were returning at high speed when the auto crashed into a farm wagon. The girl was hurled out through the wind shield.

FIGHT FIRES NIGHT AND DAY IN JERSEY

SKY AGLOW IN ORANGES

Dr. Abbott's "Three Beeches" Destroyed Near Trenton—Wide Areas of Timber Land Burn.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 13.—"Three Beeches," the home of Dr. Charles C. Abbott, naturalist and author, at White Horse, a short distance from Trenton, was completely destroyed this afternoon by fire, said to have started in dry grass from sparks from an engine on the Amboy division of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The house was built in 1804 by the grandfather of Dr. Abbott and was worth $12,000. It contained antique furniture, manuscripts, and books worth $18,000.

The Trenton Fire Department was unable to save the house. Late last night the fire was still raging in the grass and brush in the neighborhood of White Horse. The high wind fanned the flames.

Nearly all the fire apparatus of Staten Island was called out last night to fight a fierce forest fire near Egbertsville, also known as Tipperary Corners. Late in the afternoon a high wind drove the fire in the direction of the new $4,000,000 Sea View Hospital owned by New York City and the $2,000,000 New York City Farm Colony. Scores of farmers turned out with wet sacks to help the firemen. Last night several acres of woodland and farm land had been burned over and the danger still threatened the City institutions.

Oil, which was being heated in a huge kettle containing 106 gallons, in the Texoleum factory at Kenilworth, N. J., caught fire yesterday morning. Sand and dirt banks were hastily constructed to prevent the burning oil from flowing in the direction of other factory buildings.

Fanned by a southwest wind, forest fires raged near Caldwell, N. J., yesterday and last night, and hundreds of men were fighting them for a distance of fourteen miles on each side of the Passaic River. No buildings had been destroyed, and the fire had not got beyond the meadow lands where it started.

Fire started in the eighty-acre Grover Cleveland Park, which is being developed as a pleasure resort, but it was fought out with wet bags after it had consumed the dry grass on several acres.

The houses of Paul Antonio and Domanico Fassio near Athenia in Acquackoneck township were destroyed by a fire which destroyed several acres of timber and farmland.

Farmers along Sparta Road near Newton, N. J., formed a bucket brigade in the afternoon and saved the house of Joseph Roof, although his entire farm, including a large peach orchard, was laid waste by flames believed to have been caused by sparks from a Lackawanna train catching in dry grass. A total of two m'les of wood and farm land in the neighborhood was burned over.

Fire supposed to have been caused by careless hunters burned over several acres near Pine Brook, but was under control last night.

Sparks from an Erie train are believed to have caused a forest fire which raged about Mountain View, N. J. More than a hundred men fought the flames all day and patroled the edge of the burned area last night watching for further outbreaks.

Employes at the Du Pont Powder Works at Wayne, N. J., were called away from the works to try to keep a forest fire at a safe distance from the powder plant. The flames burned over an area of three miles, but last night the powder works were out of danger.

From South Orange last night flames could be seen for miles about of the fires which for two days have been devastating large tracts of timber and grazing land in South Orange, West Orange, and Northfield. The local fire department and many of the residents were in the lines beating back the fire.

Throughout the day a large number of workmen, the mounted Essex County Park police, and volunteers worked to keep the flames from spreading to the South Mountain Reservation, one of the most beautiful parks in New Jersey. By hard work the flames were beaten back from the paddock on South Orange Avenue, where 200 deer are herded.

Trees and wood-piles valued at many thousands of dollars have been destroyed in the Oranges, and countless birds, rabbits, squirrels, foxes, and raccoons have been burned to death.

WEALTHY MEN FIGHT FIRE.

F. D. Philips's $60,000 Home at Lawrence, L. I., Destroyed.

The volunteer firefighters of Lawrence, Cedarhurst, Inwood, Woodmere, and Hewlett, L. I., led by Assemblyman-elect Thomas W. McWhinney and Postmaster J. E. Morgan Dodd of Lawrence, worked hard yesterday to save the $60,000 Summer home at Lawrence of Frederick D. Philips, a lawyer, whose city home is at 125 East Fifty-seventh Street.

The blaze did about $7,000 damage to the house, which adjoins that of ex-Attorney General Wickersham, but the volunteers, among them many of the wealthy neighbors of Mr. Philips, carried out paintings, bric-à-brac, and rugs worth upward of $100,000. None of the furnishings was damaged.

CLEARS UP BOY'S SHOOTING.

Father Admits Accident Young Victim, Near Death, Concealed.

Although told that he was dying, Harold Myers, 10 years old, of 741 Jerome Street, East New York, lay in the Kings County Hospital from Nov. 1 until last night stubbornly sticking to his story that the bullet wound in his abdomen had been inflicted by a man who had shot him without provocation as he was picking mushrooms near his home. He had never seen the man before, he said, and could give no reason for the shooting, but he stuck to the story, even when bordering on delirium. The police were convinced the lad was trying to shield some one and would not accept his account of the shooting, but, though they tried in every way possible, they could not shake him.

It was last night that the truth came out, quite accidentally, through no fault of the boy's. The mother told the story that cleared up the mystery. She and her husband, Frederick Myers, a fireman employed in the Mutual Life Building at 32 Nassau Street, Manhattan, quarrelled last night and in the course of their altercation Myers called in Mounted Patrolman Carroll from the street. Carroll had just entered the house, when Mrs. Myers said that if anyone was to be arrested it should be her husband because he had shot her son. Myers broke down, according to the police, and admitted the shooting, saying that it had been accidentally done. He was cleaning a rifle, he said, that he thought was unloaded. His wife corroborated him in this, but he was arrested and charged with felonious assault.

When Harold was told in the hospital last night that his father had confessed he began to cry.

"Papa's the best friend I've got," he said, "and I would have died before I told on him. Besides, he didn't mean to do it."

The police and surgeons who have been near the boy have often admired his pluck, and they said last night that if he recovered it would be because of his strength of will.

KILLED TRYING TO SAVE MAN

Clerk Plunges Through Glass Roof in Federal Building to Death.

James Watson, a clerk in the office of District Attorney Marshall, fell to his death yesterday in the Federal Building, as he tried to assist Harry Buzzy, a painter, who had fallen down a large ventilating pipe in the interior court of the building. Both were removed to the Hudson Street Hospital, where Watson died a few hours afterward. Buzzy is badly injured.

Buzzy was engaged yesterday morning in painting the interior of a huge ventilating pipe. He was seated in a swinging seat a few feet from the roof, and, perhaps overcome by the fumes, lost his balance and fell. At the third floor the great tin pipe curved, and Buzzy broke through at this point and came out on the glass roof. He lay senseless under the windows of one of the rooms of the District Attorney's office in which Watson was working. Watson threw open the window and jumped out to do what he could. Apparently he ran to Buzzy, found him too seriously injured for one man to move, and dashed on to get further aid.

He stepped on a loose board, which tilted, throwing him through the glass roof. He shot through headfirst to the room forty feet below, striking on the stone floor.

Ambulances from the Hudson Street Hospital were summoned, and Dr. Valentine and Dr. Slater attended to the injured men. Watson had a fratured skull and internal injuries; Buzzy's back was broken. Watson died in the hospital an hour later.

He was 40 years old and lived at 135 West Eighty-third Street. He has left a widow and one son. He was known in the office as one of the most willing workers of the entire staff.

The greatest enemy of your skin

In the care of your skin have you reckoned with the most powerful, the most persistent enemy it has—the outside enemy?

Skin specialists are tracing fewer and fewer troubles to the blood—more to bacteria and parasites that are carried into the pores of the skin with dust, soot and grime.

Examine your skin closely. If it is rough, sallow, coarse-textured or excessively oily, you are providing the very best soil for the thriving of these bacteria.

How to make your skin resist this enemy

Begin this treatment tonight: With warm water work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap in your hands. Then with the tips of your fingers rub this cleansing, antiseptic lather into your skin, using an upward and outward motion. Rinse well with warm water, then with cold. If possible rub your face for a few minutes with a piece of ice.

Rub its lather in.

Use this treatment for ten nights and you will see a marked improvement. If your skin should become too sensitive, discontinue until this sensitive feeling disappears. Woodbury's Facial Soap is the work of an authority on the skin and its needs. Use it regularly in your daily toilet and keep your skin clear and fresh, free and healthy, and its insidious enemies will invariably meet defeat.

Woodbury's Facial Soap costs 25c a cake. No one hesitates at the price after their first cake.

For sale by dealers everywhere.

You can make your skin what you would love to have it.

Do this today

Tear out the illustration of the cake shown here and put it in your purse as a reminder to get Woodbury's. Tear out the cake now. Take it to your druggist or toilet counter today. Begin tonight to get the benefits of this facial soap.

LIGHTED BOMB PUT IN TOMBS COURT

POLICE GUARDING OFFICIALS

Deputy Commissioner Lewis Says Miss Davis and Magistrates Are Menaced.

PATROLMAN PUTS OUT FUSE

A high explosive bomb loaded with slugs and revolver cartridges and with fuse burning was found beneath a seat in the Tombs Court in Centre Street at 9:30 o'clock yesterday morning. A policeman nipped the fuse in time to prevent an explosion, which would have caused havoc and probably death in the courtroom, where Magistrate John A. L. Campbell was about to ascend the bench.

Three days ago a bomb menaced the lives of Judge Louis D. Gibbs and City Marshal John C. Hoefling in the Bronx. This was thought to be the work of white slave sympathizers seeking vengeance for the seven men Judge Gibbs had sent away for long prison terms.

Magistrate Campbell sentenced 179 of the so-called Army of the Unemployed to prison last Winter, and imposed prison terms on Alexander Berkman, the anarchist, and Bouck White.

The attempt on his life caused Burdette G. Lewis, Deputy Commissioner of Correction, to disclose an architest plot to wage a campaign "of opposition" against Mayor Mitchel, Miss Katharine B. Davis, Commissioner of Correction, and Magistrates Campbell and Simms.

Plot of Anarchists.

The plot was hatched at a secret meeting of anarchist leaders in the neighborhood of East Seventieth Street early in last September. Speech was guarded, and a resolution which named Mayor Mitchel and the others was a model of euphemistic composition. There was not a word or phrase in it which might not be submitted to public scrutiny, said Mr. Lewis. The meeting caused Police Commissioner Woods to create a special squad of old-time detectives to guard threatened officials against acts of violence.

What doubt the Police Commissioner might have felt regarding the purpose veiled by the resolution was lessened Wednesday night when for blocks around the new $1,000,000 court house the Bronx was shaken by an explosion. His doubt was removed entirely yesterday morning.

Today the best detectives Chief Inspector Schmittberger and Inspector Fourot can recommend to the Commissioner are at work to smash the Anarchists' ring and make yesterday's the last of their outrages which shall endanger public officials of this city.

For weeks, Commissioner Woods worked in secret. Special squads watched Anarchist gathering places here and other men were investigating in neighboring towns and cities.

Mayor and Others Guarded.

After Mr. Lewis first carried his alarm to Mr. Woods, Mayor Mitchel, Miss Davis, and Magistrates Campbell and Simms were watched by extra guards when they ventured forth at night or when they stepped outside of their customary routine. Yet the attack on Judge Gibbs and that on Magistrate Campbell were made when the intended victims were in court.

Through Commissioner Lewis the police have been in constant touch with the movements of the anarchists, for information has come to him from convicts recently released from jail whom he has befriended and from an acquaintance in the underworld equalled by few of Commissioner Woods's detectives. That two bombs should have been exploded despite such close surveillance was not a reflection on the work of the police, Mr. Lewis said last night, but a revelation of the perfect organization arrayed against city officials.

Those who exploded the bomb in the Bronx left no clue to their identity. Yesterday's attempt added little to the knowledge the police already possessed, but it gave them one tangible clue, for a man, tall and slender and dressed in gray, was seen to leave the bench beneath which the bomb later was found. He had in his hand a lighted match. From his lips hung a cigarette, and those who saw him thought only that he was stepping into the corridor for a smoke before his case was called. Detectives throughout the city are looking for this man.

Policeman Seizes Bomb.

That he did not hear the roar of an explosion as, presumably, he rushed down the steps of the Criminal Court Building, was due to the courage and quick wit of Policeman George O'Connor of the Mulberry Street Station.

O'Connor was seated with five other policemen on the second row of benches from the rear, on the left of the courtroom, when he saw a thin blue strip of smoke rising from beneath the row of benches in front of him at his right.

He jumped across the intervening aisle, brushing aside several of the spectators, who were beginning to file into the room, and seized a rectangular package he found wrapped in a newspaper on the floor beneath the bench. Protruding from one corner of the package was the lighted fuse. The policeman pinched out the spark, tore away the fuse and threw it to the floor.

A dozen persons were in the room. Magistrate Campbell and Mrs. Campbell, who, with two friends, had accompanied him to the court room, had gone into his chamber just before the inci-

DUMB WOMAN FIGHTS DOGS ATTACKING BOY

Struggles Bravely Until Husband Arrives to Save Lad from Their Teeth.

When seven-year-old John Gottlock of 338 Schenck Avenue, East New York, went to call on little Alice Edwards, who is also 7 and lives in the upper part of a two-family house at 304 Schenk Avenue, Mrs. William A. Hannemann, who has the lower floor, noticed that the youngster couldn't get the vestibule door open, so she stepped from her own apartment and opened it for him. From the kitchen in the rear ran Nellie and Jerry, two big bulldogs, and before Mrs. Hannemann or the child could move Jerry sprang on the boy.

John fell over beneath the onslaught and the dog began to worry him. Nellie, Jerry's mother, seemed to realize that the younger dog was doing wrong, for she jumped on him and tried to drag him off, but excitement got the better of her and in an instant she had joined her offspring, tearing at the small boy, who lay still on the vestibule floor, too terrified even to scream.

Mrs. Hannemann beat at the dogs with her fist, but she is deaf and dumb, as is her husband, and she could not cry out for help. The little fellow had been bitten on the right arm, hand, thigh, and leg before the noise of the scuffle reached Mrs. Edwards upstairs and she ran down to see what was the matter. Then she got Hannemann and with a club he beat the dogs off.

John had fainted from fright and loss of blood when they picked him up and carried him to Mrs. Edwards's room, where Dr. William Stolworthy of Ainwood Street and Belmont Avenue was called. He cauterized the wounds and carried the little fellow home, afterward notifying the Health Department, which sent men to lock the dogs in the cellar, where they will be kept under observation lest they have rabies.

PRESIDENT SEES BROADWAY

He and Col. House Make a Trip on Foot Through White Light District.

President Wilson, like Haroun-al-Raschid of old, accompanied by Col. E. M. House, whose guest he is over the week end, made a journey on foot last night through many New York streets, chief of them Broadway and Fifth Avenue. The President and his host left Col. House's home at 115 East Fifty-third Street, a little before 9 o'clock and walked toward Sixth Avenue.

Like the Caliph of Bagdad and his Grand Vizier, they went unrecognized for several blocks as they progressed to Seventh Avenue and Fifty-second Street, and down the former thoroughfare to Broadway, but at Forty-fifth Street some one yelled:

"There's the President. There's President Wilson."

The President smiled and his good humor encouraged the crowd to tag at his heels so that at Forty-third Street nearly all Broadway in the immediate vicinity was moving along with him.

He stopped on the corner to listen to a suffragette orator who was haranguing the crowd, but he laughed and turned away when a suffragette tried to hand him a pamphlet. Four blocks below he stopped again, this time listening with apparent interest to some speaker who was telling how Villa was the savior of Mexico.

But the crowd was increasing all the time so that by the time he reached Forty-fourth Street there were more than 2,000 persons at his heels. He entered the Waldorf-Astoria, the Secret Service men preventing the crowd from following, took the elevator to the second floor and descending on the other side, passed out the Thirty-third Street exit.

He walked down Fifth Avenue and for five minutes stood gazing at an oil portrait of the late Mrs. Wilson in an art store window. He went little further after this, and at Twenty-sixth Street took a bus back to Fifty-third Street. As the President approached Col. House's home, two young men who were squabbling in front of it, ran away with a girl who had accompanied them, and a negro, who had waited all the evening, saying he wanted to see the President, watched him enter the house without accosting him.

HID WIRELESS PLANT.

German Apparatus Described as Device for Locating Mineral Deposits.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Nov. 14.—Apparatus described as a device for locating mineral deposits thousands of feet underground, established by men believed to be German engineers at Alamo, Lower California, materialized recently as a full-fledged radio station equipped to operate over a radius of 2,000 miles, and was seized by Mexican authorities, according to a letter received here today from William R. Madden at Ensenada, a coast town 110 miles from the Mexican border. The letter confirms advices from Washington that the plant was closed.

Alamo is a mining town, sixty miles back in the mountains from Ensenada at an altitude of about 4,000 feet.

The station, according to Madden, was erected by three German engineers, supposed to have been landed somewhere along the coast from the German cruiser Nurnberg, who accounted for their apparatus by saying that it was a new invention for discovering gold.

LORD ROBERTS DIES AT THE FRONT

Developed Pneumonia on His Visit to Indian Troops in France.

FRENCH SENDS THE NEWS

He Reports That a Chill Contracted Thursday Resulted in Death Last Night.

IDOL OF THE BRITISH ARMY

Won Fame as Conqueror of Afghans and Pacifier of Boers—In Harness Till the Last.

LONDON, Nov. 15.—Field Marshal Earl Roberts died last night in France from pneumonia. A telegram from Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British expeditionary forces on the Continent, apprised Earl Kitchener, Secretary of State for War, of the death of England's great soldier. The telegram read:

"I deeply regret to tell you that Lord Roberts died at 8 o'clock this (Saturday) evening."

Lord Roberts, who was Colonel in Chief of the Indian troops, had gone to France to give them his greeting. Soon after his arrival he became seriously ill. He suffered from a severe chill on Thursday, and pneumonia rapidly developed. His great age, 82 years, militated against his recovery, the crisis in the disease coming quickly.

The news of the death of Lord Roberts came as an entire surprise to England. The veteran's devotion to the interests of the army, his hard work in this connection, and his seeming good health had been the subject of comment since the beginning of the war. He was the most popular military figure in Great Britain, a national hero without rival in the affections of the people.

Despite his years he had never ceased hard work since his nominal retirement, and, as he had often remarked, he lived a rigidly abstemious life that he might preserve his strength for the service of his country. During the past five or six years, when the German war cloud had been growing, he prosecuted an active campaign to persuade the nation to adopt compulsory military service. His belief was that Great Britain required the training of the male population in arms rather on the plan of Switzerland than the longer terms of conscription enforced in the case of continental military nations.

By speeches in Parliament and addresses before meetings throughout the kingdom, by magazine writings, and letters he preached unceasingly and untiringly the necessity for the nation to have its men trained in the rudiments, at least, of the soldier's work, so that they could be called quickly to arms to defend the country against invasion.

In private conversation he expressed the conviction that Germany was planning to make war on Great Britain when she found an advantageous moment, and he believed that the supposed menace of civil war in Ireland was a factor in setting alight the present European conflagration.

Lord Roberts commanded none of the arts of the orator and usually read his speeches. His popular nickname, "Bobs," implied no lack of personal dignity. Although only 5 feet 3—a shade shorter than Field Marshal French—his figure and bearing were the embodiment of soldierly character.

His home at Ascot was a modest, unpretentious villa. For society he had neither time nor inclination, but he was the President of the Pilgrims and presided over many of the club's gatherings.

He worked night and day for the welfare of the soldiers from the outbreak of the war. He took the greatest interest in the Indians and issued an appeal for funds for their wounded and sick. He also made requests for sportsmen to contribute saddles for the army, which brought a ready response. He made other requests for the loan of field glasses to officers during the war. He wrote personal letters of thanks to all contributors.

One of his last speeches was made at a review of a battalion of volunteers, when he referred sarcastically to young men who played football and cricket at the present crisis.

The Government is expected to offer a tomb in Westminster Abbey, or St. Paul's, for the Empire's foremost soldier.

HERO OF INDIA AND AFRICA.

Roberts Won Glory in the Boer War, as in Afghan Campaigns.

Fifteen years ago, when England was engaged in a war as distressing, if not as large, as that of today, and was face to face with a situtation far more depressing, she remembered that she possessed a soldier of the first rank. He had spent all his fighting days in India, far from the intimate knowledge of the average man; but his fame as a General and as an administrator, and, above all, the love and trust he inspired in those who served under him, caused a general sigh of relief to go up when it was known that "Bobs," Lord Roberts, was to take command in South Africa.

Since his success in that war the great little soldier, fearless of public opinion and regardless of the views of the predominant party, spent the last years of his life in a campaign for the adoption of a system of national military service. Now, just as the truth of every word that he spoke, his assertions of the unpreparedness of England for war, and the possibility of raising a great army have been proved, he is dead. To the

RUMOR THAT GERMANY SEEKS AN ARMISTICE

Paris Hears That Berlin Has Hopes of a Rest During the Winter.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Standard's Paris correspondent telegraphs, under date of Friday:

"Foiled in her efforts to negotiate peace separately with the Allies, Germany is casting around for a means to obtain an armistice over the Winter. The fact that an armistice would prove of advantage to no one but herself does not seem to discourage Germany from mooting the idea. Emissaries have already set out to pave the way for a formal proposition to this end when the moment appears propitious, and high German opinion is quite sanguine as to the results.

"An armistice would be welcomed in Berlin, primarily on account of the rest it would give the German Army. All arms badly require a spell in which to recuperate; but an armistice would be chiefly employed by the Wilhelmstrasse in redoubling its efforts to sow dissension among the Allies. German statesmen are possessed of the idea that sooner or later they will stir up trouble in this connection, and they eagerly clutch at anything that will afford them a fresh opportunity to try their skill in this way."

BIG RESERVE FORCE READY IN FRANCE

Mobilization Practically Complete and New Army Soon to Go to the Front.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—It can be announced on indisputable authority and variously corroborative evidence that reports to the effect that France has already put practically her whole fighting force in the field are incorrect. Behind the army which holds the long battle line there are new armies which Gen. Joffre will doubtless bring into play at what he judges the psychological moment.

It is now generally admitted that the French were not prepared when the war began; that they had not sufficient clothing; that the artillery was not as complete as friends of France had hoped, and that the mobilization in consequence was seriously delayed. Nearly four months have now passed, however, and during that time an exceptionally capable Ministry has been exerting itself to the utmost to put things right and to complete the mobilization. There are grounds for believing that although the supply of boots and other clothing is not even yet quite what it ought to be, for all that most of what has been lacking has been made good, and the French mobilization is now nearing completion. It follows that for some time to come the French will be growing more and more efficient, while it is believed here that the efficiency of the German fighting machine will be proportionately declining.

GAVE THE IRON CROSS TO BRITISH OFFICER

German Commander Sent Back Savior of Wounded German but He Succumbed to Hurts.

LONDON, Sunday, Nov. 15.—A Paris dispatch to the Central News says:

"During the recent fighting the German troops, after a fierce charge, retreated, carrying all their wounded except one man. A British officer, who went out to bring in the wounded soldier, was himself wounded, but managed to drag the German soldier to shelter, where later both were picked up by a German ambulance.

"As a reward for his bravery and humanity the British officer received the Iron Cross from the German commanding officer. He was sent back to his own trenches, where he was recommended for the Victoria Cross, but succumbed to his injuries."

KING ALBERT IN PARIS, CITY IS DECORATED

Crowds Flock to Sign Address to Belgian Monarch on Occasion of His Name Day.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—The King of the Belgians has arrived in Paris for the celebration of his name day tomorrow. The city has been decorated with flags, and numerous fêtes have been arranged.

The Avenue de l'Opera was animated today for the first time since the beginning of the war.

Crowds of people filed into army headquarters to affix their signature to an address to the Belgian monarch on the occasion of his name day. A large number of motor cars have been brought together to carry the immense number of congratulatory postal cards and letters sent to the King by all classes of the French people.

A Te Deum is to be sung tomorrow in the Belgian Church in the Rue Charonne in the King's honor. This service will be attended by the Belgian residents in Paris, as well as by a large number of Belgian refugees.

HAVRE, Nov. 14, (via Paris.)—King Albert's name day will be celebrated enthusiastically at Havre and in the Belgian territory still in possession of the Belgians.

AT THE KAISER'S HEADQUARTERS

Times Correspondent Visits the Town in France Whence the Kaiser Directs His Armies.

WAR ON BUSINESS LINES

Emperor, Ministers, and Generals Work Swiftly and Efficiently and Live Simply.

KAISER AT CLOSE RANGE

GERMAN GREAT HEADQUARTERS IN FRANCE, Oct. 20.—The most vulnerable, vital spot of the whole German Empire is, paradoxically, in France—the small city on the Meuse where the Grosses Hauptquartier, the brains of the whole German fighting organism, has been located for the last few weeks. After a lucky dash through the forbidden zone of France held by the Germans, I managed to pay a surprise visit to the Great Headquarters, where, among other interesting sights, I have already seen the Kaiser, the King of Saxony, the Crown Prince, Major Langhorne, the American Military Attaché; Field Marshal von Moltke, and shoals of lesser celebrities with which the town is overrun. My stay is of indeterminate length, and only until the polite but insistent pressure which the Kaiser's secret police and the General Staff are bringing to bear on their unbidden guest to leave becomes irresistible.

It was a sometime TIMES reader, a German brakeman, who had worked in New York and was proud of being able to speak "American," who helped me to slip aboard the military postzug (post train) that left the important military centre of L— at 1:30 A. M., and started to crawl toward the front with a mixed cargo of snoring field chaplains, soldiers rejoining their units, officers with iron crosses pinned to their breasts, ambulance men who talked gruesome shop, fresh meat, surgical supplies, mail bags, &c. Sometimes the train would spurt up to twelve miles an hour. There were long stops at every station, while unshaven Landsturm men on guard scanned the car windows in search of spies by the light of their electric flash lamps. After many hours somebody said we were now in Belgium.

There are no longer any bothersome customs formalities at the Belgian border, but the ghost of a house that had been knocked into a cocked hat by a shell indicated that we were in the land of the enemy. Houses that looked as if they had been struck by a western cyclone now became more numerous. A village church steeple had a jagged hole clean through it. After more hours somebody else said we were in France. Every bridge, culvert, and crossroad was guarded by heavily bearded Landsturm men who all looked alike in their funny, antiquated high black leather helmets—usually in twos—the countryside dotted with cheery little watch fires.

In the little French villages all lights were out in the houses. The streets were barred like railroad crossings except that the poles were painted in red-white-black stripes, a lantern hanging from the middle of the barrier to keep the many army automobiles that passed in the night from running amuck.

Sedan, a beehive of activity, was reached at daybreak. Here most of the military, plus the field chaplains, got out. From here on daylight showed the picturesque ruin the French themselves had wrought—the frequent tangled wreckage of dynamited steel railway bridges sticking out of the waters of the river, piles of shattered masonry damming the current, here and there half an arch still standing of a once beautiful old stone footbridge. I was told that over 200 bridges had been blown up by the retreating French in their hopeless attempt to delay the German advance in this part of France alone.

At Great Headquarters.

Several hours more of creeping over improvised wooden bridges and restored roadbeds brought the post train to the French city that had 20,000 inhabitants before the war which the Kaiser and the Great Headquarters now occupy.

Wooden signs printed in black letters, "Verboten" (forbidden), now ornament the pretty little park, with its fountain still playing, outside the railroad station. The paths are guarded by picked grenadiers, not Landsturm men this time, while an officer of the guard makes his ceaseless rounds. Opposite the railroad station, on the other side of the little park, is an unpretentious villa of red brick and terra-cotta trimmings, but two guard houses painted with red-white-black stripes flank the front door and give it a look of importance. The street at either end is barred by red, white and black striped poles and strapping grenadiers on guard are clustered thick about it. You don't need to ask who lives there. The red brick house (it would not rent for more than $100 a month in any New York suburb) is the present temporary residence of the Over War Lord. Its great attraction for the Kaiser, I am told, is the large secluded garden in the rear where this other "man of destiny" loves to walk and meditate or, more usually, talk—though the few remaining French inhabitants could have a frequent opportunity of seeing him walk in the little closed public park if they were interested, but the natives seem outwardly utterly apathetic.

Servants of the Kaiser's household, in green Jäger uniforms, were lounging around the door for an early morning

WRECKED IN THE NORTH SEA

Big Superdreadnought Blown Up Off Irish Coast on Oct. 27.

RESCUES BY THE OLYMPIC

ENGLAND IMPOSES SECRECY

Doubt as to Whether a Mine or German Torpedo Caused the Disaster.

Mail advices brought to New York yesterday the report that the British superdreadnought Audacious, the third largest battleship in the English Navy, was sunk by a mine or a torpedo off the north coast of Ireland on Oct. 27.

The report coupled the White Star steamship Olympic with the disaster, saying that the officers and crew of the battleship were rescued in the Olympic's life-boats, and that all, or nearly all, those on board the Audacious were saved.

It is well known that the White Star liner diverted her course on her last voyage across the Atlantic and put in at Lough Swilly, Ireland, on Oct. 29. This was explained in cable dispatches on no less authority than the British Admiralty, by the fact that mines had been discovered in the steamship lane on the north coast of Ireland, and that the steamer had altered her course as a matter of safety. However, no mention was made of any naval disaster at the time. The British Admiralty is silent yet with regard to the Audacious.

The report of the loss of the battleship reached The Associated Press yesterday in a letter from some point in Ireland. It gave minute details of the disaster, quoting a passenger of the Olympic as describing the rescue of the crew and the sinking of the battleship.

Report of Audacious Disaster.

The Associated Press report says the Audacious was hit by a torpedo or disabled by a mine just before 9 o'clock on the morning of Oct. 27, and that with the possible exception of one or two men the whole crew of 800 officers and men was rescued by small boats from the Olympic, the rescues being made in a rough sea through brilliant and daring seamanship.

The battleship's cry for assistance was caught by the wireless operator of the Olympic, which was only about ten miles distant. The steamer rushed forward at full speed, while her crew made ready for their work. Volunteers were called for and double the number necessary to man the lifeboats responded. The crippled battleship was reached a few minutes after 9 o'clock and before noon all except 100 of her men had been transferred. By that time the battleship had a decided list at the stern, where, just below the water line, she had received her wound. Two of her engines were unharmed, but the one aft was put out of commission.

After taking off all the officers and men who would leave their ship, Capt. Haddock of the Olympic turned his attention to an attempt to save the warship. A cable was put aboard her, but it snapped as it tightened. Meantime the bulkheads began to give way, and it was soon apparent that it would be impossible to tow the ship or even keep her afloat. The cruiser Liverpool and several other warships which had come up stood by. Late in the afternoon it was decided to abandon the Audacious, and the officers and men who had remained aboard reluctantly left her.

Huge Warship Blows Up.

The flotilla of rescue ships continued to stand by, however, until 9 o'clock that evening, when a terrific explosion occurred on board and the Audacious plunged stern first and in a moment had disappeared. The explosion is supposed to have been caused by shells set loose by the listing of the battleship. A bit of armor plate torn from the sinking ship struck the deck of the Liverpool, cutting the legs from under a gunner. The man died a few minutes afterward.

The Audacious met her fate twenty-five miles off the Irish coast, which the Olympic was skirting. The Olympic's passengers saw the flash of the explosion and watched the mighty warrior sink. Then the Olympic turned her bow toward Lough Swilly. Small craft cleared the route to make sure it was free of mines. From Oct. 27 to Nov. 2 the Olympic lay at Lough Swilly, during which time no civilians were allowed to board her. Charles M. Schwab was the only passenger who left the ship before she docked at Belfast on Nov. 2.

Vice Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, Commander of the Home Fleet, visited the scene of the disaster on Nov. 1, and it was with him that Mr. Schwab went to London.

Even officers of the White Star Line were not permitted to board the Olympic at Lough Swilly, and all supplies were taken aboard by men of the navy. After the steamer entered Belfast harbor one of the waiters on board was arrested charged with being a spy and detained for examination.

The Olympic carried about 300 passengers. Nearly 100 of these were English reservists. All passengers other than British were denied passage from Belfast to Liverpool, and were compelled to go to Dublin, which is an open port, to take boats for England. Secrecy regarding the loss of the Audacious was enjoined upon the crew and passengers of the Olympic, who were urged to refrain from discussing the naval tragedy which they had witnessed pending a complete investigation. The crew of the Audacious was removed from the liner as soon as warships for the purpose were available.

Gallantry of Rescuers.

"The crew of the Olympic was magnificent," said one of the passengers. "A warship's crew could not have acted with greater courage and precision. Everything was in readiness for launching the boats as soon as the Olympic was within reach of the Audacious. The liner's crew was not daunted by the high sea which was running. Some of the boats were capsized, but the men were fit, and I understand that there was only one life lost in the sea."

While in the vicinity of Lough Swilly the passengers of the Olympic saw many small boats sweeping for mines, though with what success they could not know. Many of the passengers expressed the belief that the sinking of the Audacious possibly saved the Olympic, which might otherwise have entered a mine field. Others held to the theory that a submarine torpedoed the warship, basing their opinion on the fact that she was wounded astern instead of forward, which probably would have been the case if she had come in contact with a submerged mine.

The Audacious was of the King George V. class—third in tonnage and armament of the British warships. She was a sister ship of the King George V., Centurion, and Ajax, and all were commissioned in 1911 or 1912.

The Audacious had a displacement of 24,000 tons and was 596 feet in length. Her armament consisted of 10 13.5-inch guns, 16 4-inch guns, 4 three-pounders, with 3 21-inch torpedo tubes. In her trials she developed a speed of 22.4 knots, being slightly faster under trial than the other vessels of her class.

DENIAL FROM THE OLYMPIC.

Ship's Surgeon Says the Audacious Story Is News to Him.

Dr. J. C. H. Beaumont of the White Star liner Baltic, which arrived from Liverpool on Friday night, was surgeon on the steamship Olympic on her last voyage from New York, when she put into Lough Swilly. He said yesterday in an interview with a TIMES reporter in the Officers' Club on the White Star pier at the foot of West Twentieth Street:

"The first news I received of the sinking of the Audacious was in one of the evening newspapers today, and I was astonished to read that the passengers of the Olympic had witnessed the blowing up of the battle ship and the rescue of her crew by lifeboats from our ship. I cannot say whether the Audacious was blown up by a mine or torpedoed off the coast of Ireland, but I can vouch for the fact that neither the passengers now crew of the Olympic had seen or heard anything of such a disaster before I left the ship on Oct. 29.

"We sailed from New York on Oct. 21 for Greenock direct with the smallest number of passengers that the Olympic had ever carried. There were 35 first cabin, 18 second cabin, and 100 steerage

Summary of War News.

Field Marshal Lord Roberts died in France yesterday. He had gone to the battle front to visit the Indian troops, and contracted a cold which developed into pneumonia.

The sinking of the British battleship Audacious on Oct. 27 by a mine off the coast of Ireland, was reported by mail advices received in this city yesterday. The crew of 800 men were rescued, it is said, by small boats from the liner Olympic. The British Admiralty has not yet made any statement about the accident.

The result of yesterday's fighting on the battle line from the North Sea to Lille, was satisfactory for the Allies, according to the announcement of the French War Office. Two severe attacks by the Germans were repulsed, one near Ypres, with heavy losses.

The Germans report that their attacks of the past few days have been impeded by unfavorable weather. Slow progress is being made, however, and yesterday 700 prisoners were taken south of Ypres. The French forces were compelled to evacuate a commanding position at Berry-au-Bac, and suffered heavily by the attacks made by the Germans in the Forest of the Argonne.

The Russian General Staff reports that the main Russian Army has now advanced to a point about fifteen miles from Cracow. It is reported in Petrograd that the Germans will soon make another attempt to invade Russian Poland from Thorn.

Berlin states that two minor victories have been won by the German armies in East Prussia and Poland, resulting in the taking of about 2,000 prisoners. The battle near Soldau continues, it is said, with no result.

FIGHTING AMID COLD RAIN

MAKE GAINS NEAR YPRES

Kaiser's Troops Said to Have Been Pushed Back a Kilometer at Bixschoote.

GERMANS WIN IN CENTRE

Berlin Reports French Loss of Position at Berry-au-Bac—Savage Fights at Dixmude.

PARIS, Nov. 14, 10:43 P. M.—This official bulletin was issued tonight by the War Office:

From the North Sea to Lille the day has been good. Two attacks by the enemy, one to the northeast of Zonnebeke, the other to the south of Ypres, have been repulsed, the latter with heavy losses to the Germans.

Between the canal of La Bassée and Arras, and in the region of Lihons, the enemy has made two attempts, without result.

There is nothing else to report.

The afternoon bulletin said:

In Belgium a German attack against the head of the bridge at Nieuport resulted in failure, and various efforts at offensive movements on the part of the enemy in the region to the east and to the southeast of Ypres have been checked.

In the environs of Bixschoote we have progressed one kilometer toward the east.

Between the canal of La Bassée and Arras our troops have made minor progress.

In the region of Lassigny and in the vicinity of the Aisne as far as Berry-au-Bac, the Germans have attacked, but without success.

In the Argonne the fighting has recommenced with greater spirit. The enemy endeavored, but in vain, to recapture Four de Paris and St. Hubert. Particularly in the vicinity of Verdun several partial offensive movements on the part of the enemy were checked by the fire of our artillery before the forward movement of the enemy's infantry could be undertaken.

In the Woevre district and in Lorraine, where bad weather prevails, there is nothing to report.

Berlin Reports Ground Gained.

BERLIN, Nov. 14. (By Wireless to London.)—Military headquarters today gave out this announcement:

The fighting in Western Flanders continues. Our attacks during the past few days have been impeded by the rain and stormy weather and are, therefore, proceeding slowly. South of Ypres we have taken 700 prisoners.

The British attacks to the west of Lille have been repulsed.

At Berry-au-Bac we compelled the French to evacuate a commanding position.

Our attack in the Forest of Argonne has made good progress. Here the French again suffered heavy losses, leaving more than 150 prisoners in our hands.

GERMANS POUND ON AMID RAIN AND CHILL

But Allies See Slackening of Effort and No Longer Fear Noisy "Black Marias."

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

NORTHERN FRANCE, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—Broadly speaking, the Allies' line has not varied much since Tuesday. It runs from Lombaertzyde to Nieuport, which was further bombarded yesterday by the German heavy artillery, a church being partially demolished. From Nieuport it follows the canal to near Ypres, passing somewhat eastward of that place, and also eastward of Armentières.

Further south the Germans are now hurling fresh masses of troops upon this line, but their chances of successfully breaking it grow less. In one respect the bad weather is all to the advantage of the Allies. The transport of the German heavy guns is so impeded that their effectiveness is greatly diminished, and scouts can be of little use, as they cannot ascend without the gravest risk, and their observations, made in the perpetual rain, are of little value. But this affects both sides about equally.

The long nights at the front are a severe strain on the nerves. No lights whatever are permitted after 6 P. M., and unless there is fighting, the troops in the trenches and the villages within range of the German guns have to spend twelve hours at a stretch enduring anything but a rest cure. Conversation is only permitted in whispers. Cigarette smoking is, of course, forbidden.

But not every night is like this. Sometimes there is work to be done on the most desperate kind, and a sudden summoned call to arms means the instant departure in case of the men quartered in the villages, to a fierce conflict in the darkness. The soldiers say that those long nights of sleepless expectation of a sudden summons to make or repel an attack are the severest test they undergo.

"There is too much time for thinking then," said one to me. "You cannot help letting your mind dwell on the people at home. Your spirits drop lower and lower. If you could only shout or sing or jump about you would feel better, but you have got to be quiet and just think and think if you cannot sleep, and your heart aches."

The leaden skies, the low temperatures, especially at night, and the fatigue of the persistent fighting under these conditions all combine to depress the soldier. The long duration of the present battle of the road to Calais, like the previous one, illustrates the entirely new conditions of modern field warfare where anything like equal forces are opposed.

More and more one is inclined to think that Calais is only a German battle cry. They are feeding the German people with nonsense about the bombardment of Dover from Calais, but the only thing that really matters to the German headquarters staff is the turning of the Allies' left wing somewhere or anywhere.

Reason for Attacking Ypres.

To cut through at Ypres would, of course, be equivalent to turning it, and they are clearly concentrating their utmost strength on this persistent smashing attack on the Allies' line from Nieuport to Ypres.

Heroic efforts are being made to cope with the multitude of wounded sent down from the lines daily to the various bases. Huge trains, an eighth of a mile long, take a thousand at a time to Dunkirk or Calais, which are the respective main clearing houses of French and Belgian hospital administrations. Thanks largely to the generous and wise assistance of the British organizations, the measures taken are just and adequate, although fighting on this scale must strain the utmost preparedness.

The Germans leave their wounded exposed to the rain and cold and make no effort to dispose of their dead.

Several instances have been reported this week of German soldiers' bodies being found by the advancing Allies tied to trees and riddled with bullets. Evidently they were executed for refusing to obey the order to attack or for fleeing. Most of the German prisoners, taken now, are too exhausted to talk at all. They get hardly any food in their own lines, and seem to be light-headed in most cases.

Capture German Boy Fighters.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

A TOWN IN FRANCE, Nov. 13.—In spite of the desperate efforts that the Germans are making to break through the allied lines the signs are not wanting that the Germans are, to use the expression of an officer, "cracking up a bit."

Boys of 15 and 16 years are being taken prisoners, and at a town in France where several hundred prisoners of war were located for a day or two many of these youths were seen sobbing like women.

From an intercepted wireless message it seems that the German ammunition is running short, and there are other indications that when the present furious effort has spent itself a general advance of the allied forces will result.

The British officers and men exhibit indifference to the German shells. An officer who has been to the fighting line and back thus described his journey:

"All the way the wounded men were coming back, hit in every way. Some were walking slowly; some were being helped along. There was a terrific noise going on. Our guns and some of the French were shooting hard, and the infantry and machine guns were making a fearful racket, but that was a detail. What made the noise was the big German shells falling everywhere except in the right place. While I was there I don't think they touched a feather.

"I saw two or three 'Black Marias' drop among a lot of teams and wagons, which hastily moved on; but the shells were on the wrong side of the hedge. They come in fours, and these quartets are being impartially dumped about, but none fell on the road where our party was.

"The exciting part was having the great things whizzing along and wondering where the next explosion would be. They all detonated with a terrific crash, but the ground being very soft from the rain, there were no splinters about, and so there was really not much danger.

"I thought the country very like Essex. It is a bad country for a battle, as one cannot see anything for the trees and woods. Then we reached ——, and they shelled that with shrapnel, which accomplished nothing.

Like Epsom Road Derby Day.

"The road was an amazing sight, just like the Epsom Road on Derby day. The sides were lined with Belgians, partly to see the fun and partly as they had nothing to do or nowhere to go. They looked very pathetic.

"The road was a seething mass of vehicles, from the finest and most luxurious electric landaulette to barrows drawn by dogs. There was transport of every description, wagons, country carts, lorries, motor buses, traction engines, every conceivable thing. French troops, cavalry of all sorts, infantry, guns, and ambulances, some going one way and some the other.

"The paved road was only broad enough for one thing, and each side was a slimy mass of brown soup, several feet deep. When we had ridden off or skidded off we were in it. It was an awful job getting along, and it took us three hours to get back a few miles.

"Our men are doing very well; so are the French, who look very fit. They are really the tidiest of the lot."

BATTLE TO REGAIN DIXMUDE.

Allies Bring Up Reinforcements and Resume the Attack.

LONDON, Nov. 14. — Telegraphing from the Belgian frontier a correspondent of The Express says:

"Heavy reinforcements have been brought up before Dixmude by the Allies, who have resumed the offensive with great vigor, and there is every indication of an early reoccupation of the town by them.

"Fresh German intrenchments are being dug for the purpose of holding the town and big guns have been sent forward to new positions. The roads, behind the town, are filled with advancing ammunition trains.

"During attacks Thursday by the French, the Germans placed mitrailleuses in the tower of the railway station, which enabled them to command the southern approaches of the town and beat back successive bodies of infantry, which had succeeded in reaching the suburbs."

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 13 (via London, Nov. 14).—The correspondent of the Tijd says that the Dixmude fight on Tuesday was a fight for the dykes, and that whoever was master of the dykes was master of the ground.

"Machine gun fire had the advantage," the correspondent continues, "as heavy guns were useless on the morass. The Germans cleverly surmounted, in some places, the difficulties offered by the inundated land.

"The contending forces literally fought in water. It was a man-to-man struggle and one of great wretchedness. Some of the soldiers were completely exhausted with cold and their wet clothes stuck to their bodies and greatly impeded their movements.

"The Allies won ground, foot by foot, along the coast near Nieuport, which the Germans were prevented from entering. They were fearful of the British naval guns.

"The Allies' middle line, which occupied Dixmude, was obliged to yield, but Dixmude was not wholly occupied by the Germans, as the Allies retained the outer districts.

"The Belgian regiments made seven bayonet attacks in one night between Nieuport and Dixmude. The total of Belgian losses in killed and wounded is estimated at 10,000."

PARIS, Nov. 14.—Some hamlets in the neighborhood of Dixmude which have been taken and retaken three or four times are now in the hands of the Allies, who are strongly posted on a canal, the crossing of which would be of great importance to the Germans.

It is officially announced that two German regimental flags, found in trenches formerly occupied by the Germans on the Marne, have been handed to Field Marshal Sir John French by Gen. Joffre, as they were discovered opposite to the position then held by the British.

SAYS FRENCH HAVE DIXMUDE.

Report Passed by Press Bureau, Which Cannot Confirm.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Sunday, Nov. 15.—A correspondent of The Weekly Dispatch, telegraphing from the north of France under date of Friday, repeats the story that Dixmude is again in the hands of the Allies. The Official Press Bureau, while permitting the publication of the message, does not guarantee its accuracy. No official confirmation of the report of the occupation of Dixmude has yet been received here.

The correspondent says:

"Dixmude has been reoccupied by the Allies. The French, assuming a vigorous counter-offensive, have driven the jaded troops of the Kaiser out of the town and are once again in possession. The place has proved a snare to the Germans, who could find no cover among the heaps of ruin created by the bombardment of the town.

"The driving wind and rain of the last forty-eight hours have considerably interfered with operations along the Nieuport-Dixmude front. The artillery fire on each side has ceased, largely owing to the impossibility of aerial reconnoissance. The German infantry, moreover, have shown little sign of activity on that section of the line.

"Further south, between Dixmude and Ypres, the Germans continue to fall back. From Ypres the Allies have made marked progress.

"Armentieres has been subjected to another bombardment by the Germans. They are firing upon the town from Fort Denglos. The cannonade has been pretty severe. Several factories are on fire and much damage has been inflicted upon house property. The hospital has been evacuated, but so far the Town Hall has sustained no damage.

"A good deal of mystery has hitherto surrounded the fate of Lille. A woman, who just left the city, says that it is at present practically uninhabited owing to the large number of German corpses in the cellars of the houses, and that in consequence it has been evacuated by common consent of the belligerents.

"In the recent fighting a great number of Germans have surrendered. No fewer than 1,500 prisoners passed through here last night, and several more trainloads of them are expected."

Said to be Preparing to Destroy Canal Between Bruges and Sluis.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

AMSTERDAM, Nov. 14, (dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.) — From Lombaertsyde the Allies' patrols have approached close to Ostend, but the Germans have not yet succeeded in crossing the Yser.

Merckem and Essen, near Dixmude, have been entirely destroyed.

The Germans are reported to be concentrating at Courtrai. Both the railway and the roads there are busy with the forward movement of troops.

On the hills of Klinsberg and Muzie several guns have been placed in position.

The Germans, it is stated, are contemplating the destruction of the canal from Sluis to Bruges to inundate the district. All the houses between the Schipdouet and Leopold canals are being evacuated.

Allied aviators have dropped bombs on Bruges, setting fire to a number of petrol tanks.

BERLIN IS ENCOURAGED.

Regards News from Belgium as Indicating Progress.

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (via The Hague and London, Nov. 14.)—Today's news from the western war theatre increased the public confidence that the Germans were making satisfactory progress.

Major Moraht, military critics for the Tageblatt, referring to the fact that the prisoners taken at Nieuport yesterday were French, says he regards this as proof that the recent defeats of the Belgians have so thinned their ranks that the exhausted survivors had to be replaced by French soldiers. He says further that the losses in prisoners at Ypres indicates that the enemy's energy is flagging.

The French attempts to break down the German line at Soissons show, in the critic's opinion, that they believe the Germans have weakened their lines there in order to shift reinforcements to the northwest, but this is an error.

SAYS 'WE TAKE NO PRISONERS.'

German Soldier's Letter to Wife Reaches Chicago Brother.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—A record of a day's work of a soldier, burrowing into trenches, half filled with water to escape shrapnel, eating one meal a day, enduring the drenching rains and cold and the horror of writhing wounded, is told in a letter, received today in Chicago. It was written at Fort Norde, Missy, in the Aisne district, by Dr. Fritz Zeidler, a lieutenant in the German army, to his wife, who forwarded it to her brother, Dr. H. D. Wolff. In his concluding paragraph, Dr. Zeidler says:

"Our front stretches out in battle line about ninety kilometers. We are to get reinforcements. The Bavarians and the Crown Prince should already be here.

"When they come, then good-night, you English dogs! We take no prisoners and let no one escape alive. Our hatred is too great."

"It is geting worse," writes Dr. Zeidler at the outset of his letter. "The last five days have been the most horrible I have gone through. Our brigade, the Twelfth and Fifty-second Regiments, with some artillery, has a position north of the Aisne River, which has been opposed for the last five days by a superior force of English.

"Since that time we have been exposed to the heaviest artillery fire. For instance, of the seven groups with which I left Clottbus so proudly there are now but two groups and not a single non-commissioned officer. My valet is dead and my horse servant wounded.

"For three days our company has lain in a dirty, wet trench. You do not know how depressing it is when you can neither go forward nor backward and in front of you and behind you the explosion of these devil things. Every minute some one is being struck. We see them lying there and cannot help them. The wounded writhe and the dead lie with open eyes between us.

"So we drag through every long day, which becomes eternity before evening, when darkness stops the artillery fire. We get nothing to eat during the day, but at sundown they bring us a few kettles from the field kitchens, which we swallow eagerly and the wounded are taken away.

"Then we lie there further, in the rainstorm, unprotected, in the wet trenches and keep the English infantry at bay. In the gray of the morning we buryour dead, and at daylight the incessant artillery fire reopens.

"For the last eight days we have been unable to wash ourselves. I am astonished that I am still well.

"The day before yesterday I was wounded by a bullet in the lower right arm. It pierced my coat but made only a painful sear across my arm. Yesterday a schrapnel shell burst in our midst. A splinter tore open my left boot and severely bruised my foot. I had terrible pain it all day.

"Towards evening I was carried away on a stretcher and taken to a field hospital in an old French fort. There my foot was treated. I had something to eat and was put in a real bed once more. In two days I hope to be able to return to duty."

Important Points on the Western Battle Front

1. Unofficial advices say the German authorities are planning to cut the canal between Bruges and Sluis and inundate the district. No reason is given for this project, which might be a defensive step to check a possible landing of allied forces east of Ostend.

2. In the absence of official announcement it is plain that Dixmude has not been retaken by the Allies, who are, however, gathering a big force there to take the offensive. Various German assaults in this region have been repulsed, according to Paris.

3. To the north of Ypres, near Bixschoote, the Allies have moved forward a kilometer, according to the French official report, which says that German attacks to the south and southeast of Ypres failed. Berlin reports the capture of 700 prisoners in this region.

4. Between La Bassée and Arras the Allies are moving slowly.

5. Contradictory reports come about the fighting around Berry-au-Bac. The French official bulletin says the Germans attacked without success. Berlin, on the other hand, asserts that they forced the French out of a commanding position.

6. A new combat has begun in the Argonne district. Both sides claim successes. Paris tells of a check to the German offensive movements near Verdun.

REPORT AUDACIOUS SUNK OFF IRELAND

passengers, among whom were several reservists, including Grandon, a Victoria Cross man from the Nineteenth Hussars.

"On the morning of Oct. 28, Capt. H. J. Haddock, the commander, received a wireless message warning him of mines having been laid off the north coast of Ireland, and he decided that it would be dangerous to continue on to Greenock, and he put into Lough Swilly the same evening."

"Do you know if the warning of mines was sent out from the Audacious or some other warship, or whether it came from one of the short stations?" the doctor was asked.

"I do not know where the message came from," said he, "because that is a matter that the commander would keep to himself. It was generally conceded by the officers during the day that a warning had been received and that the course of the Olympic had been altered. On our arrival at Lough Swilly I received two urgent messages from my wife, who was in London, saying that the evening papers had printed a report that the Olympic had struck a mine and was blown up off the Irish coast.

"Thursday morning early," continued the doctor, "I received a telegram from Liverpool telling me to leave the Olympic at once and join the Baltic, as her surgeon, Dr. Hopper, had volunteered for service with the army. I left the ship on Oct. 29."

"Did Charles M. Schwab leave the Olympic with you at Lough Swilly?" Dr. Beaumont was asked.

"No, he did not," said Dr. Beaumont. "I was the first person to leave the Olympic on Oct. 29, the morning after her arrival in the harbor, and I traveled by train and steamboat across the Irish Channel to Liverpool. The only news I heard about the Olympic after I left her was that she took thirty hours going from Lough Swilly to Belfast because she went right down the west coast of Ireland and around past Queenstown to avoid the risk of hitting mines. Instead of taking the short course around the northeast coast, by which she would have made Belfast in a few hours."

Dr. Beaumont said the Olympic had a crew of about 900 officers and men on board on her last voyage. Her full complement was 1,700 in the height of the passenger season. He has been in the Atlantic passenger service for twenty years, and is well known to thousands of American travelers.

Germans Point to the Niger—Deny Ophelia Had Explosives.

BERLIN, Nov. 13. (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.).—It is officially announced that the sinking of the British gunboat Niger off Deal is proof that the British blockade is no protection against German submarines.

It is also declared officially that the allegations in the British press that the German hospital ship Ophelia, seized some days ago by the British authorities, had explosives on board, is a shameless calumny.

JUSTICE IN GEIER CASE.

Japanese Newspapers Comment on America's Neutrality.

TOKIO, Nov. 14. (Dispatch to the East and West News Bureau.)—Referring to the cruiser Geier, which was interned at Honolulu, the Jiji in an editorial says:

"We confidently believed that the American Government, following the precedent it set during the Russo-Japanese war, when it ordered the converted cruiser Lena to be interned at San Francisco, and the cruisers Aurora, Oleg, and Jemtchung at Manila, would also this time adopt the same just and impartial course and maintain its strict neutrality.

"Our faith was not misplaced. The American Government, by the order issued to the cruiser Geier, although some time was expended in making the decision, has once more demonstrated its sincere adherence to the policy of strict neutrality, and has thus forestalled any ill feeling between America and Japan that might have arisen therefrom. We rejoice that the affair was so satisfactorily settled."

very last he was devoted to the cause to which he had given so many years of toil, and the thought of the white-haired old man going day by day to the War Office to confer with Lord Kitchener and then hurrying to inspect some newly raised unit has had much to do with the success which the Government's call for men has met.

For "Bobs" occupied a position in British life which was unique. Not only was he recognized as a man supremely great as a soldier, but he was felt to have won his honors by his own ability and to value them only as they enabled him to assist the rank and file of the army and maintain the safety and honor of his country. There were days when there was a certain jealousy between the partisans of Lord Roberts and the only other British General of equal reputation, Lord Wolseley, but in that there was never any suggestion that he participated; for, as Kipling sang, "'E Don't Advertise." So his birthdays became notable events in the British calendar, whatever he did was received as the act of a man of profound wisdom and patriotism, and it was only his age which prevented his appointment rather than Kitchener's to direct the present war.

Lord Roberts was 82 on Sept. 30, and it is curious that exactly half of that long life had been spent on active service in India. He was the son of a General famous in the Indian service, Sir Abraham Roberts, K. C. B., and was himself born in India, at Cawnpore. Educated at Eton College, he was appointed to the service of the old East India Company and was gazetted as Second Lieutenant in the Bengal Artillery on Dec. 11, 1851. At this period of his life he was far from strong, and perhaps if medical regulations had been as strict as they are today, would never have qualified for his commission. He suffered from heart complaint and, it is said, was forced to keep sherry by his bedside as a stimulant.

It was the Indian Mutiny which gave him his first chance, and he seized it magnificently. He was the Deputy Assistant Quartermaster General of the artillery in the field force before Delhi and served throughout the bombardment of that historic city. For his services at the action of Bolundshur he received the thanks of his commanding officers, and at the engagement of Kudagang he won the Victoria Cross, by his single-handed pursuit of two sepoys, who were making off with a standard. They were armed with muskets; he had only his sword. One fired at point-blank range in Roberts's face, but the cap only snapped. The other he cut down with a single blow and captured the standard. The same day he engaged another sepoy, who was attacking a cavalryman, and killed him also.

For twenty years after the crushing of the Indian mutiny Roberts lived the life of the ordinary officer attached to the Indian army. He took part in the bloodless but none the less notable expedition to Abyssinia in 1867-8, and he had his experience of frontier fighting in the Lushai expedition of 1871-2. Most of the time, he was employed on the staff, and he had attained the local rank of General while he was still only a Major in his own regiment, the Royal Artillery. It was not until 1878 that his first great chance came with the outbreak of the Afghan war.

In that war—not for the last time he was to pluck victory for the British arms out of conditions which seemed well-nigh hopeless. The fortunes of the contest between Russia and England for the control of Afghanistan had for the time turned against the British, and Roberts had to be dispatched at the head of a small force Roberts was dispatched to teach him a lesson, and with one resistless rush he forced his way through the mountains and captured the enemy's stronghold at Peiwar Kotal. At once he became a marked man in England, and received for his services the K. C. B.

But his work was only begun. The British Commissioner at Kabul, Sir Louis Cavignari, and his staff were murdered the following year, and once more Roberts had to advance into the Afghan country. With only 6,000 men he started out, and in thirty days he had once more defeated the tribesmen and had occupied Kabul. How fierce was the fight he told years afterward in his autobiography, "Forty-one Years in India," and in a memorable passage describes his feelings as the glint of steel betrayed to him the stealthy advance of a hostile force on an isolated detachment which it was impossible for him to warn of its danger.

The Famous March to Kandahar.

At Kabul he was himself in some danger, but he could await the arrival of reinforcements. With them, however, came the news that Kandahar, 300 miles away, was in hourly danger of falling before Ayoob Khan. Once before the march from Kabul to Kandahar had been undertaken by a British force, and its retreat is one of the blackest pages in British military history. But Roberts, caring nothing for that, set himself to repeat that march and to risk all on its success.

For nearly three weeks he and his picked force disappeared from view; for three weeks he and his little army were traveling through mountain passes held by some of the finest fighters in the world; for three weeks he was beset with danger before and behind and risked treachery from every native he was forced to trust. But at the end of that three weeks he emerged at Kandahar, and Ayoob Khan was crushed.

A baronetcy and the Grand Cross of the Bath were the official honors he received for this great achievement, and he himself in his book remarks that his life was really in more danger from the feasting he received on his return to England than from all the hardships of the expedition. But above all he had established himself as the idol of the British Army. "Quick as lightning and tough as steel" he was called while he was still a young officer with his regiment, and he was known as a stern disciplinarian. Those who spoke to the little man never forgot the sharp, keen glance he could shoot at them or the quick, prompt way in which he could size them up.

But there was a very human side to him. Years afterward, as he visited Eton, he could tell the boys that in the midst of all the anxieties of the Afghan campaign he could remember when the Fourth of June, the school feast day, came around, and would gather the Etonians of the force and speak of the days at the old school. Wherever he went in that campaign he had with him a bodyguard of six native soldiers, two of whom never left his side, and he has spoken of his deep regret as the Kandahar force broke up and regiment after regiment filed past him down the Khyber Pass to the strains of Auld Lang Syne."

The little Bobs looks after yer grub and treats yer like a human Christian," was the tribute of the Tommies of his day; and Kipling interpreted their sentiments in his "Bobs":

See that little red-faced man,
That's Bobs;
Rides the tallest hoss he can,
Does Bobs.
If it bucks and kicks and rears,
'E will sit for twenty years,
With a smile round both 'is ears,
Will Bobs.

If a marker's lost 'is place;
Dress by Bobs;
If a gun 'as slipped its trace,
'Ook on Bobs.
'E's eyes all up 'is coat,
An' a bugle in 'is throat,
An' you will not play the goat
Under Bobs.

Put Down Burmese Uprising.

So with the conclusion of the Afghan War Sir Frederick Roberts took up again the life of an officer of high rank. He was recognized now as one of the best men in the army and twice was selected for active service in the next few years. Thus after the disaster to British arms in South Africa at Majuba Hill he was appointed Governor of Natal and commander in chief of the forces, but found peace declared before he could arrive at Cape Colony. Again when the Penjdeh trouble arose with Russia in Afghanistan he was designated as commander in chief of the force which was being assembled.

At the end of 1886 Burmah was giving a great deal of trouble, and although he was at the time Commander in Chief in India he took personal charge of the military operations, and stamped the Lacoit uprising out. In 1891 he organized the Hazara and Isazza Nagar frontier expeditions, and as a reward for his services as in preparing for any possible invasion of India as well as these campaigns he was raised to the peerage as Baron Roberts of Kandahar and Waterford.

A year later Lord Roberts left India, and it seemed that his active military career was over. He was then over 60, and it seemed likely that although he could fill such important posts as that of the Commander in Chief of the forces in India and become a Field Marshal and a Knight of St. Patrick, he had accomplished the chief work of his life and might look for peace in his declining years. Yet the most important of all his duties yet lay before him, and once again he had to step in where other men had made a mess of it.

His Work in South Africa.

In 1898, the South African War broke out and British arms met with a great reverse. To Roberts more than to most men the dark days of that December were terrible. His only son and heir was a Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery. Hearing that a battle had been fought by Sir Redvers Buller on the Tugela River, Lord Roberts went down to the War Office for news. Like other fathers he sought the casualty lists. As he entered the room he heard an officer say: "My God, there's Bobs's son!" "What's that? What's that?" the veteran cried, and then read his son's name in the list of killed.

Later the story was told of how young Roberts had died trying to save the guns, and as a tribute to his heroism Queen Victoria gave to Lady Roberts the Victoria Cross her son had not lived to wear.

But Lord Roberts had no leisure to indulge his grief. Buller had failed in the east. Methuen was checked in the west, and French, yet an unknown man, was merely holding his own in the centre. Something had to be done to save the situation and to pull together the campaign which had been allowed to become absolutely disorganized and might easily end in disaster. To Roberts the War Office looked, and with Kitchener, the other always successful leader, he was sent out. He was then 68 and but one indulgence was granted to his years. He was permitted to take with him to the front Lady Roberts and his two daughters.

With Roberts and Kitchener on the scene everything was changed. The Chief in Command brought with him large reinforcements, for with all his own success in conquering against great odds, Lord Roberts never feared to say when large forces were necessary. With Kitchener as his Chief of Staff, he organized the disordered field army in one homogeneous whole. The combination of the two leaders was a remarkable one—Roberts with his prestige and his power of inspiring his soldiers with intense devotion, and Kitchener with his clear, cold organizing power and his determination to get out of every man every ounce of which he was capable.

Cleaning Up the Boers.

When the British advanced again it was no longer the march of a mere expeditionary force; it was a great army, sweeping forward resistlessly, which even the valor of the Boers could not stay. Positions which had stopped Methuen were turned; French was sent on his historic ride to relieve Kimberley, and Cronje was surrounded and forced to surrender at Paardeberg. Bloemfontein fell without resistance, and then, after six weeks spent in careful preparation, the march was resumed to the north and Pretoria was entered.

The Transvaal and the Orange Free State were now annexed, and as the resistance of the Boers degenerated into mere guerilla warfare need for Roberts was over, and he was able to hand over command to Kitchener and return home. There, still further honor awaited him. His character as well as his successes had still further endeared him to the people at large. They had read of his care of his soldiers; they had heard how, Sunday after Sunday, he had been seen going to church with his Bible under his arm; perhaps they smiled as they were told how the stern Kitchener had managed to overrule some act of his superior which had seemed to him too kind-hearted.

Received $500,000 for African Services.

The very day he landed in England he had an audience with Queen Victoria, who handed him the Order of the Garter. Next day he was received at Paddington Station by the Prince and Princess of Wales as though he had been of royal rank, and a few days later, on his elevation to an Earldom, he was again received in audience by the Queen—the last which she gave to any one before her death. When the Kaiser came to London to attend her Majesty's funeral he also honored the Field Marshal and decorated him with the Order of the Black Eagle. Both houses of Parliament recognized his services by passing formal votes of thanks and granting him the sum of $500,000 for his services in South Africa.

Earl Roberts had already been appointed Commander in Chief of the Forces, and as such he was a member of the Imperial Committee on National Defense. He resigned the former appointment in 1904 and retired from the Defense Committee a year later. This action of his, natural as it would have been in any other man of his age, was actuated by a very different motive from the desire for rest and leisure. He was convinced that England was, from the military point of view, as ill prepared to meet a great foreign war as she turned out to be.

Worked for Universal Service.

He in no way minimized the strength and importance of the Royal Navy, but he foresaw the struggle with Germany, and he knew that, greatly as the regular army had improved, it was insignificant in numbers compared with modern nations in arms, and good as was the territorial force as far as it went, it was the mere nucleus of what would be needed, and without six months' hard training would be rather a detriment than a strength to its Generals. But one thing he saw as the solution of the difficulty—the adoption by the nation of universal service.

This did not necessarily mean conscription in the Continental sense of the word, but the training of every Englishman in his schooldays and early manhood in the first principles of bearing arms. The voluntary system he recognized as necessary for the overseas army which England, unlike other great powers, is forced to maintain, but the voluntary system, he maintained, has proved itself utterly inadequate to supply the general training on which he believed the very existence of the British Empire depended.

So for the last eight or nine years Roberts devoted himself to a campaign in favor of this idea. From his place in the House of Lords he delivered from time to time mighty warnings; at public meetings, and by the formation of a great association he preached his gospel of national preparation; in season and out of season he insisted with all the force of his great authority on the necessity of an awakening of England from the dream of security, and there can be little doubt that, sparse as seemed the result of all his efforts, the quick response of Great Britian to Kitchener's call to arms and, indeed, the promptness with which the Radical Government permitted it to be issued on the outbreak of war, were not a little due to the old Field Marshal's years of missionary work.

Yet, violently opposed as were his ideas to those of a large section of the people, "Bobs" retained to the last his wonderful popularity. At his birthday, perhaps, the band of the Royal Artillery would come to serenade him; when he was ill the news that he had taken a turn for the worse was the signal for a crowd of his old soldiers; for his support every worthy cause struggled. He was one of the great men of the Kingdom—great because he never sought the precedence granted to him, but was always expected to take it. Where other men were honored for their achievements, he surpassed them because he could command love as well as honor

In East Prussia we continue to make progress. We have captured five German howitzers near Soldau. On Nov. 13 we forced the Germans to retire from Rypin. Between the Vistula and the Warthe we have had encounters with advance detachments of the enemy.

In the direction of Cracow Russian troops have crossed the River Schrenlava, (about fifteen miles from Cracow.) We have occupied Tarnow in Galicia.

Leaving the defenses of Cracow mainly in the hands of the Austrians and attempting to hold the Russian advance along the Polish frontier only by desultory rear guard action, the Germans, according to the view of the situation held in Petrograd, are today withdrawing their main forces into Silesia, whence many are being sent north to the region between Thorn and the River Warthe. In this territory the Germans, taking advantage of the small numbers of Russian troops, are attempting an energetic advance at the same time as the Russians move forward on both banks of the lower Vistula.

This new grouping of German forces is regarded here as an attempt on the part of the Germans to threaten the Russian advance upon Cracow by a side flanking movement. Military experts declare that the German cavalry operating in this district is composed mostly of troops thoroughly seasoned in the fighting in Belgium. On the other hand, an officer who has returned to Petrograd from the East Prussian front reiterates the report that the Germans are sending whole companies of infantry formed almost exclusively of very young men into the first battle line.

"One of the saddest features of the fighting that I witnessed," this officer said, "was the sight of these youngsters, some of them 15 and 16 years old, moving forward shoulder to shoulder like automatons and being cut down like grain by the fire from our machine guns."

Continuing, this officer said it was apparent to the Russian commanders at the front that the Germans in East Prussia were putting forth all their strength. He described East Prussia and the Russian territory adjoining it on the east as blanketed by fire.

While the Germans are concentrating elsewhere the defense of Cracow is being provided for by two Austrian armies officered by Germans. These two armies are converging from Galicia and the Kielce region in Russian Poland, and their rear guards, according to Russian reports, are being constantly hounded by the advancing Russians.

Successes Reported by Berlin.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (By Wireless to London).—Military Headquarters today gave out the following official announcement:

The fighting continues in East Prussia, and at Stallupönen we took 500 Russian prisoners. No decision yet has been reached at Soldau.

In the district of Vlaclaweo a Russian army corps has been repulsed, and 1,500 prisoners and twelve machine guns fell into our hands.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (By Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—In Galicia, according to official information given out in Berlin today, the Russians continue to advance, and have occupied Tarnow, Jaslo, and Krosno.

"The Austrian campaign against the Servians is proceeding rapidly," the statement continues. "The Servians are retreating from Koseljewa and Valjevo toward the east, evidently not only to avoid the pursuing western army, but also to avoid being cut off by the northwestern forces, which are advancing on Valjevo. The Servian headquarters are reported as having been moved hurriedly from Valjevo to Mladenovatz. The Servian losses are said to have been heavy. The number of prisoners of war interned in Austria is over 93,000.

"The Ukrainian delegates, (from a portion of Russian Poland embracing the old Kingdom of Poland,) who were sent to Sofia, have now left Bulgaria. They are greatly satisfied with the understanding reached with the Bulgarian Premier, M. Radoslavoff, and the Presidents of both Chambers of the Bulgarian Parliament, providing for the separation of the Ukrainian district from Russia.

"Snow is reported in the Vosges Mountains, and in the Black Forest and the Thuringer Forest. In the latter it is twelve inches deep."

DENY DANGER OF INVASION.

Berlin Press Seeks to Allay Anxiety for Eastern Provinces.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (via The Hague and London.)—The Nord Deutsche Allegemeine Zeitung, referring to the situation in the eastern arena of the war, says:

"For some days past the people generally have been discussing the dangerous situation on the frontier of the provinces of East Prussia, Posen, and Silesia. Basing our information on official statements, it can be said that only a few of the border regions in East Prussia have been penetrated by solitary detachments of Russian troops. There is no reason to fear for East Prussia, and the provinces of Posen and Silesia are entirely out of the danger zone."

BERLIN, Nov. 13, (via The Hague and London, Nov. 14.)—Major Moraht, the military critic of the Tageblatt, expresses the belief that the present fighting in East Prussia involves no danger of a new Russian invasion there. Nevertheless, it is clear that the Russian advance south of the Vistula, especially in the vicinity of Kalisz, has caused considerable anxiety. While it is not known publicly how far the Russians have advanced, it is not believed that the German frontier has been crossed anywhere, as yet.

Foreign reports that the towns of Pieschen and Posen have been occupied for five days are discredited here.

Nevertheless, the inspired press is trying to allay public anxiety by giving assurances that there is not the slightest danger, and even intimating that Gen. von Hindenburg soon will turn the tables on the Russians.

AUSTRIAN CITY STORES FOOD.

Some Alarm Felt in Trent—Embassy Denies Vienna Is Suffering.

VENICE, (via Paris) Nov. 14.—Food is reported as becoming very scarce and dear in Trent, the chief Austrian city in the Italian Tyrol. Flour already costs 25 per cent. more than it does in Vienna.

The Trent Communal Council, which is greatly concerned over the outlook, has expended $60,000 in buying supplies of grain, flour, and potatoes, and has appropriated another $100,000 so as to stock the communal storehouse with food sufficient to last until the end of April.

The military bands at Trent are practicing the Turkish national tune in preparation for a large public demonstration to be held for the purpose of applauding Turkey's action in entering the war on the side of Austria and Germany.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Austrian Minister for Foreign Affairs today communicated to the Austrian Embassy, by wireless via Berlin, a denial that famine conditions exist in Vienna. His dispatch said:

"Contrary to reports divulged in America that a dreadful famine prevails in Vienna, communications published by Vienna Burgomaster concerning economical situation state that business situation is satisfactory. Provisions perfectly sufficient. Extraordinary want of employment not observable. Sanitary conditions entirely satisfactory.

"Our offensive action in Servia favorably progressing. Nothing important yesterday in northeastern theatre of war. Total number of war captives arrested in monarchy, 93,000."

RUSSIANS SEEK LOAN HERE

Preliminary to Transferring Trade from Germany to Us.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 27.—It is reported on good authority in Petrograd that definite steps have been taken toward placing a loan in the United States. This project is regarded here as of particular significance because it is the outgrowth of an agitation for new trade relations with America.

If the United States is to offer herself as a candidate for the Russian trade which Germany has lost, as is hoped by Russian merchants, it is agreed by Russian officials that she will have to adapt herself to the Russian system of six months' credit, accompanied by the placing of a foreign loan in the United States to cover the interest on and payment of bills to American merchants and manufacturers. It is such a loan which is being contemplated by the Russian Government.

It was said in the financial district yesterday that no definite steps had been taken in regard to a Russian loan. It has been reported from time to time, since the intimation from Washington that the embargo against loans to belligerents had been removed, that funds might be advanced to Russia, but so far as could be ascertained any negotiations which may have been undertaken thus far have been of only a preliminary nature.

RUSSIANS BUY LAST LIQUOR.

Prohibition Becomes Absolute on Monday on Wine and Beer.

PETROGRAD, (via London,) Nov. 14.—Thousands of men, women, and children stood since 4 o'clock this morning in a driving snowstorm before the doors of the liquor shops on this the last day in which it is possible to purchase light wine and beer, under the prohibition act of the Russian Government, which on Monday becomes absolute. Applicants for a final supply of beverages came with baskets, sacks, carts and wheelbarrows, many have pawned their last belongings to procure means to purchase.

This final prohibition act is the last of three distinct liquor reforms, the first curtailing the sale of vodka and the second abolishing it absolutely. The third measure extends the prohibition to every form of alcoholic drink in all portions of the empire under martial law. Cities included under the prohibition are Odessa, Riga, Warsaw, Moscow, Kiev, and virtually all cities of Western Russia.

CZAR TO AID CATHOLICS.

Funds Will Be Given to Rebuild Ruined Churches.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A Petrograd dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says:

"The Russian Emperor, who today (Saturday) visited Ivangorod, announced his intention to grant the necessary funds for the reconstruction of the Catholic churches in villages around the city which were destroyed by German shell fire. He also ordered that pecuniary aid be given to the people who have suffered by the temporary occupation of the country by the Germans."

TAKE TROOPS FROM FINLAND.

Russians Apparently Have Ceased to Fear a Swedish Invasion.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A Copenhagen dispatch to The Star says:

"News from Helsingfors, Finland, states that the Russians have withdrawn troops from the east and west of Finland to join the main Russian Army, indicating that Russia's fear of a Swedish invasion of Finland has vanished.

"This withdrawal of the military strength from Finland has made a good impression in Sweden."

AIR RAID ON ANTIVARI.

Bomb Damages Residence of Montenegrin Crown Prince.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Two Austrian aeroplanes today dropped five bombs on Antivari, Montenegro, according to a Cettinje dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company. One exploded in front of the residence of the Crown Prince, breaking the windows.

The Austrians, adds the dispatch, attacked the Montenegin army operating in Herzegovina, but were repulsed with considerable loss.

RUSSIANS ROUT KURDS.

Cavalry Fight in Armenia—Turks Continue to Report Victories.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 14.—An official communication issued from the Caucasus army headquarters says:

"There has been nothing new during the day of Nov. 13. On Nov. 12 a number of detachments of Kurdish cavalry made their appearance south of Kara Kilissa and Alashkerd and came into collision with our cavalry.

"Overwhelmed by the force of our horsemen, the Kurds were routed."

Another statement issued by the General Staff of the Russian army in the Caucasus says:

"The fighting in the region around Koprukeul continues. There have been no engagements in the province of Zatchorokh, in the vallies of the Bayazid and the Alashkerd, or on the coast of the Black Sea."

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Turks, in an official communication given out at chief headquarters at Constantinople under date of Nov. 13, claim to have invaded the Russian territory of Caucasia. The Turkish official communication, contained in an Amsterdam dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company, says:

"Last night our troops, after a surprise attack, occupied all the Russian blockhouses on the border of the Viliayet of Trebizond, penetrated for three hours into Russian territory in the direction of Batum, and occupied the Russian barracks at Kurdaghlu.

"In the battle of Koprukeul (thirty miles east of Erzerum,) on the 11th and 12th, the Russians were defeated, losing 4,000 dead, 4,000 wounded, and 500 prisoners. Our troops captured 10,000 rifles and very much ammunition.

"The Russians retired, in bad condition, in the direction of Kutch. The steepness of the ground, together with fog and snow, handicapped our outflanking movement, and consequently the Russians could not be completely cut off. The pursuit continues."

It was stated officially today that the western entrance of the Shat-el-Arab River, known as the Abadan passage, was now clear, and that steamers were passing freely.

British forces a week ago occupied the port of Fao, on the right bank of the Shat-el-Arab, which empties into the head of the Gulf of Persia. Previous to the landing of the British forces the Turkish guns at Fao were silenced by the fire of the sloop Odin.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (By Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, L. I.)—An official Turkish communication received in Berlin and given out to the press describes the final defeat of a Russian force, consisting of an entire army corps, on the Caucasian border. This engagement took place on Nov. 12. The Turkish report says that the forces of the enemy were so shattered that they were unable to offer any further resistance.

The Turkish General Staff reported yesterday that the second line of the Russian defenses in the Caucasus had been taken by Turkish troops.

CZAR ON RUSSIA'S AMBITION.

War with Turkey Not to End Till Old Problems Have Been Solved.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 14.—The Municipality of Moscow having expressed to the Emperor sentiments of fidelity and devotion on the occasion of the war with Turkey, the Emperor has replied, thanking the people of the ancient capital.

He says that Russia will never conclude peace so long as the resistance of the enemy has not been definitely crushed and so long as the problems which were left by the Russians' ancestors have not been solved.

4,000,000 BLANKETS ORDERED.

Allies Will Distribute $20,000,000 Contract Among Western Firms.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—An order for 4,000,000 blankets for the armies of the Allies has been received in Chicago. The average price has been set at $5 per blanket, making a total of $20,000,000 waiting to be apportioned among the blanket manufacturers and dealers of the Central West.

The order is in the hands of a La Salle Street bank. The same bank has been acting as a clearing house for similar orders for leather and harness goods.

"We are in touch with the blanket men who can furnish immediate delivery," declared the banker, in discussing the order.

"When we have cleaned up the available supply for immediate shipment we will take up the question of contracts for daily outputs. No one firm can supply them all."

GERMANS HAVE BISMARCK MSS.

Press Bureau Says They Are in Berlin, Not in Bank of England.

The following Berlin dispatch with reference to the unpublished Bismarck manuscripts was given out by the German Information Service at 180 East Forty-second Street last night:

"The rumor which has been spread throughout Germany during the last few months that the manuscript of the third volume of Bismarck's 'Thoughts and Reminiscences' was being kept in the Bank of England has been definitely set at rest by a prominent local publishing concern, which states that the work is safe in its own care.

"The manuscript is part of Bismarck's unpublished 'political testament,' the publication of which is being anxiously awaited by Germany."

FLEW OUT OF TSING-TAU.

German Aviator Escaped Before Garrison Surrendered.

PEKING, Nov. 14.—A German aviator escaped from Tsing-tau before the Germans surrendered. He succeeded in landing safely, but where the aviator and his machine are at the present time is not known in Peking.

The German Legation here received a telegram from this aviator, but his message did not convey anything concerning the siege that was not already known. He confirmed previous reports that the German losses at Tsing-tau were small.

GEOGRAPHERS EXPEL HEDIN.

Paris Society Marks Its Anger at His Anti-French Campaign.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—The Paris Geographical Society yesterday unanimously expunged the name of Sven Hedin from the list of corresponding members, and decided to address a request to the Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honor to remove it from the roster of the order. In explanation the society records its opinion that the Swedish explorer committed a serious breach of the laws of honor in conducting through a neutral a violent anti-French campaign, and this despite the three especially warm receptions given him by the Geographical Society, to the members of which he professed his unalterable devotion to France. His attacks on England and Russia have caused equal indignation, particularly in view of the support he received from Russia during his first two journeys in Central Asia.

After voting Hedin's expulsion the committee made the announcement that no reflection was intended against Sweden, which had been scrupulously neutral since the outbreak of the war.

HELD UP NEAR CANAL.

French Warship Stops Steamer to Take Off German Passenger.

BELLINGHAM, Wash., Nov. 14.—A French warship stopped the Pacific American Fisheries steamer Windber, which left here for New York about three weeks ago, and removed a German passenger, A. C. Piepembrink of this city, it was learned here today.

The warship stopped the Windber after it had passed through the canal, according to telegrams from the Windber's captain to his owners here.

Piepembrink was taken off as a prisoner of war.

HERRICK TO VISIT PRISONERS.

Permission Granted by France in Answer to German Action.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—This official announcement was made this week:

"M. Polo de Bernabe, the Spanish Ambassador at Berlin, who is in charge of French interests, having been authorized to visit a camp of prisoners of war in Germany, the Minister of War has, by a reciprocal measure, authorized Myron T. Herrick, the American Ambassador in France, to visit all the prisoners' camps where Germans are detained in French territory. Mr. Herrick has begun these visits this week."

THE WAR SITUATION.

(An Associate Editor of The Army and Navy Journal.)

The German attacks near Ypres and La Bassée show a continuation of their efforts to find some weak spot in the Allies' defense. When their attacks have led the Allies to rush troops to one threatened point, the Germans make a rapid shift of forces to some other part of the line and plunge forward there in the hope of catching the Allies napping.

It is in this sort of fighting that the aeroplane service has accomplished the greatest changes in the art of war. Heretofore the commanding General has had little chance of detecting such a move on the part of the enemy until the attacking troops had already come in contact with his advanced line. In the present war, however, the air scouts soon discover any movement of large bodies of troops. Consequently the defenders have sufficient notice of coming attacks to shift their troops to the point of danger. Even where the new troops do not arrive in time to save the first line, they come against the enemy further to the rear, where his attack has partly spent its force and either check his troops on the ground or drive them back by the way they have come.

The suspension of ordinary traffic on the German railroads means a new concentration of troops, but it cannot yet be told whether this means new vigor is to be put into their campaign in France, or whether they are lining up their forces to make a new move against the Russians.

Germany still has a large number of her oldest reserves that have been doing garrison duty at the forts and depots throughout the empire. By stripping these posts of their detachments of Landwehr the Germans can obtain 500,000 former soldiers for service on the border, when their arrival will best fit in with the German plan of operations. Germany also has another large source for replenishing her armies, which has been drawn upon only to a small extent. When her annual contingents are taken into the army in October of every year, only about half the young men are needed to fill up the army to the strength that she can afford to maintain in peace times. The rest are listed for possible military service, and can be called in the case of need. No news has come out as to the extent to which she has called the men of these classes away from their normal occupations, but the presence in the fighting in Belgium of the oldest classes of reserves shows that Germany must have called to the colors at least enough of the untrained men to take the place of trained reserves in garrison and depot duty.

According to dispatches from Russia, the Germans have attempted a new strategic move against Warsaw. Troops, withdrawn from East Prussia and the Vistula fortresses were sent across the border east of Thorn in an effort to hamper the Russian operations by threatening their lines of supply. The Russian troops, which had advanced to Nieszawa, were forced back toward Warsaw.

Apparently the Russians have mustered sufficient strength in the northwest corner of Poland to check this German raid and force them back to Wloclawek and Rypin, fifty miles to the northeast.

If the new movement of troop trains in Germany means the reinforcement of the Eastern armies, it is likely that this will be shown by a renewed activity of her armies based on Thorn. If the Germans can force an advance into Poland along the valley of the Vistula, the general effect on the Russian armies to the south would be the same as that caused by the advance from Silesia in October.

In East Prussia the Germans have checked the Russian advance on a line fifteen miles west of the border. The Russians are now concentrating their principal efforts in this field along the railroad that leads from Kovno to Königsberg. An advance by this route would enable them to avoid the lake region, in which they were tangled up and defeated by the Germans under Gen. von Hinderburg in September.

Along the Silesian border the Russians have slowed up their operations to strengthen their armies at the front before they seek a decisive battle. The railroads in Western Poland were all destroyed by the Germans during their retreat. Consequently the Russians have only the country roads to depend on and must spread their armies in long columns during their advance. The moving to the front of their full strength and their employment along the battle line can hardly be accomplished in less than a week. They have now been confronting the Germans for five days along the line between Kalisz and Czenstochowa; so the next few days should bring news of a battle in this district.

The district in which this fighting is taking place is in the same latitude as Manitoba and has a very similar climate. The ground is already frozen and the marshes are beginning to get hardened. Consequently the approach of Winter has just the opposite effect to what might be expected. Instead of the snowfall obstructing military operations, it makes traffic easier than normal.

The biggest obstacle to army transport is mud. The roads are quickly cut to pieces by long trains of wagons and often become impassable. Especially is this the case in a level fertile country like Poland. In Winter the mud is frozen up and forms a better roadbed than at any other time of the year. Consequently, the furnishing of food and other supplies is simplified and operations can be pushed with greater vigor.

When Napoleon, in 1806, wished to punish the Russians for taking the part of the Prussians in their war with France, he conceived the idea of an invasion of Poland and the liberation of that nation from their Russian and Prussian conquerors. Accordingly, he pushed his army forward into the Valley of the Vistula, and on Dec. 26 fought the battles of Pultusk and Golymin, north of Warsaw; in the following January he finished the Winter campaign with the battle of Eylau. This campaign was finally decided by the battle of Friedland, which forced the Czar to agree to the Peace of Tilsit, by which the independent Duchy of Warsaw was established. The present campaign is in the same territory.

BISHOP STAYS UNDER FIRE.

Prelate Stays in Arras, Though German Shells Deal Ruin and Death.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—The Temps reprints from Nor Maritime a letter from Mgr. Lebbedey, Bishop of Arras, written, says the Bishop, "on Oct. 31, when the town was without gas, electricity, telegraph, telephone, or proper postal service." The letter arrived at its destination on Nov. 11. It runs:

"Yesterday was the fourth terrible bombardment. Arras is now merely a vast necropolis. Churches are destroyed; whole streets have disappeared. The remnant of the inhabitants are living in cellars.

"Yesterday the St. Jean Hospital was shelled for the tenth time. The occupants were removed to cellars. A hotel was riddled by a shell, which caused thirty deaths and seventeen wounded. Every one demands my help, which I am unable to give, but I will remain until the last, if God wills. Vive la France."

FIRST ELECTRIC BATTLESHIP

Superdreadnought California to be Driven by Motors.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The superdreadnought California, one of the three huge new ships just ordered, will be driven by electric motors. Secretary Daniels authorized this type of power plant for the vessel today on recommendation of Rear Admiral R. S. Griffin, engineer in chief of the navy. If it is as successful in the battleship as it has been in the naval collier Jupiter, navy officers foresee the complete displacement of direct steam drive in future American warships.

The California, which will be built at the New York Navy Yard, will be the first electrically-driven warship ever built, as the Jupiter was the first deep sea vessel of any type to be fitted with motors. The decision to install the new system aboard the battleship was arrived at only after exhaustive study of the performance of the Jupiter.

As in the Jupiter the main power plant of the California will be steam turbines driving dynamos, which will generate electricity to give the ship a speed of at least twenty-one knots. The Jupiter far exceeded her speed requirements.

FIGHTING IN EGYPT, BERLIN REPORTS

Many British Wounded, a Mutiny, and Numerous Arrests Alleged.

BRITISH THINK PERIL OVER

Moslem Religious Leaders in Egypt and Sheiks in the Sudan Ignore Turkey's War Declaration.

BERLIN, Friday, Nov. 13, (by Wireless Telegraphy to Sayville, L. I.)—Reports reaching Berlin from Milan state that in Egypt fighting has already taken place near the Suez Canal. This information was given to the press today from official quarters.

Four wagonloads of British wounded, it is asserted, arrived at Cairo, the men having been wounded in fighting between Suez and Ismailia.

There has been a mutiny of the native troops, it is added, while many well-known Egyptians have been arrested.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—It is asserted by observers of the political situation that Turkey's threat to preach a holy war is a cause of uneasiness in Germany as well as in England and France, because of its possible effect on Italy.

So far as Egypt is concerned, the danger mark seems to have passed, as the chiefs of the Ulema, (Mohammedan hierarchy,) composed of the leading Moslem religious societies, have issued a proclamation urging the Moslems to remain calm, while the Sheiks in the Sudan have refrained from taking action regarding Turkey's proclamation of war on the Allies.

TOLSTOY FAMILY ALL AIDING RUSSIAN ARMS

Widow and Daughters at Hospitals; Sons and Grandsons In Active Service.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PETROGRAD, Nov. 14. (Dispatch to The London Standard.)—Nearly the whole of the family of the late Count Leo Tolstoy is taking some active part in the war. Some are at the front, and included among the first victims are two sons. Count Ilya and Count Leo are at the front as Commissioners in the Russian Red Cross. Count Leo was wounded during a train collision near the firing line. Another son, Count Michael, is a reserve officer with an active army, and has received the St. Stanislaw Medal for bravery.

A daughter of the famous writer, Countess Alexandra, is a Sister of Mercy at the base Hospital at Bielostock. The widow, Countess Sophia, with another daughter, Countess Tatiana, has established a hospital for wounded soldiers at Yasnaya Polyana.

Three grandsons of the Count are also with the active forces. One is a private in the volunteers, another an officer in the army. The latter has been made a prisoner by the Austrians. A third is a Lieutenant in the Baltic fleet. These grandsons are sons of Count Ilya.

URGES FOOTBALLISTS TO WAR.

Government Official Shocks British Professional Players.

LONDON, Sunday, Nov. 15.—Followers of professional football in England, who are numbered by hundreds of thousands, are agitated over the statement issued tonight by H. J. Tennant, Under Secretary of War, relative to the attitude of the military authorities toward this sport.

"Asked whether football should be played in time of war," said the statement, "Under Secretary Tennant replied that the military authorities have no objection to the game as an occasional recreation, but professional football is not within that category, and it is more desirable that professional football players should find employment in his Majesty's forces."

The Secretary of the Football Association says that the stopping of the game would mean a loss to Worcester of $10,000,000 yearly. About 2,000 professional players make their living from the game.

FRENCH SUGAR FAMINE.

Government Is Petitioned to Allow Unlimited Importations.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 13, (Dispatch to the London Standard).—The French Society of Agriculture is petitioning the Government to permit the unlimited importations of sugar into France. Sugar now costs exactly double what it did before the war and is very difficult to obtain. Speculation is accused of being the main cause, but, on the other hand, the fact remains that the French sugar crop this year will not exceed 216,000 tons as against 700,000 tons last year, to provide for an average annual consumption of 600,000 tons.

The present high price of sugar is regarded as especially regrettable at the moment when the Government is making great efforts to grapple with the drink problem; for sugar is indispensable for the flavoring of coffee, tea and other comforting, but non-intoxicating beverages.

SUBMARINES IN BELGIAN PORT.

Civilians Excluded from Zeebrugge, Where Work Is Being Rushed.

LONDON, Sunday, Nov. 15.—The Amsterdam correspondent of the Exchange Telegraph Company telegraphs:

"New troops have been arriving at Ostend from Bruges. Troops are continually passing Ostend on their way to and from Roulers. Bad weather has made the battlefield a vast swamp and the intrenchments are filled with water and mud. Weather conditions are impeding transportation and causing a shortage of food supplies.

"No civilians are allowed at Zeebrugge, presumably because work is being rushed on more submarines at that seaport."

LOYAL TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Chief of Kelantan, a Siamese Moslem State, Gives Assurances.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Official announcement was made here this afternoon that the Sultan of Kelantan, a petty native State in Siam, had given assurances of the loyalty of his people and that there would be no local disturbances as a result of the war between Great Britain and Turkey.

Kelantan is a State on the eastern side of the Malay Peninsula with an area estimated at 5,000 square miles and a population of 290,000. The prevailing religion is Shaffa Mohammedanism.

By a treaty signed at Bangkok between Great Britain and Siam in 1909, Siam transferred to Great Britain the rights of suzerainty and such rights of protection, administration, and control as she had possessed over a certain tract of territory, which also embraced all but the northeast corner of Kelantan.

TOUCH OF CZARINA LIKE MIRACLE CURE

Soldiers Leave the Imperial Hospital in a State of Religious Exaltation.

DAUGHTERS ARE NURSES

With Their Mother, the Empress, They Perform the Ordinary Duties in Caring for Common Soldiers.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 28.—Almost in the shadow of the Imperial Palace in Tsarskoye-Selo, the Winter home of Emperor Nicholas, there is a low building half hidden behind villas, artificial ruins, and triumphal arches, which is perhaps the most remarkable hospital improvised during the present war. Soldiers come out not only healed and sound, but with a strange sort of exaltation that one might expect to find in a patient who had been cured by a miracle.

The buildnig was formerly the barracks of the Imperial Guards, but during the absence of the troops it has been converted to the use of the wounded, and is supported by funds at the disposal of the Minister of the Imperial Court. At the special request of the Empress, a part of the building has been set aside as the Court Hospital, where the Empress and her two eldest daughters, the Grand Duchesses Olga and Tatiana, work among the other Red Cross nurses from 10 o'clock every morning till late in the afternoon.

There is nothing either in the nature of their work or in the appearance of their gray gingham uniforms and white, nunlike hoods to distinguish them from the others. They attend lectures on surgical and general nursing with the other student-nurses, dress wounds with their own hands, assist in operations, make the rounds with the medical staff, and participate in the general life of the hospital in all its details. Their rank is not made the excuse for any escape or respite from the hardships or unpleasantness of the daily routine. At all the most difficult operations her Majesty acts as head nurse, handing the operating surgeon his instruments, while the two Grand Duchesses pass the necessary cloths and bandages.

It has been the desire of the Empress that her two daughters work exclusively in the ward for private soldiers, and instructions have been issued to all nurses and orderlies that the incognito of the Imperial nurses be kept a strict secret, notwithstanding their identity has become known. The effect of this Imperial presence on the simple peasant mind cannot be fully appreciated without understanding the religious awe which the peasant feels toward the Imperial family. The actual presence of members of the family at the bedside strikes him in itself as nothing less than a miracle.

This semi-religious exaltation of the wounded soldiers has, according to the surgeons in the hospital, noticeably hastened their return to health. One reservist from Northern Russia had to be restrained from disturbing the ward by his joyful repetition of the fact that "The Little Mother talked to me and gave me my medicine." Another patient declared with apparent conviction that he had grown five years younger, because the bandages on his arm had been changed by one of the Grand Duchesses.

Once a week the Emperor himself visits the hospital, with his young son and his two youngest daughters, Marie and Anastasia. During these visits it is his custom to make the entire rounds of the 121 beds for privates and twenty-nine for officers and to question the men as to how they received their wounds.

All the hospitals in Tsarskoye-Selo and Pavlovsk are under the patronage of the Empress and the wounded are conveyed from the hospital trains in the automobiles of the Imperial garage. At present the ordinary ceremonial life of the court is suspended, while high officials, many of whom serve on hospital committees, and ladies of the court vie with one another in contributing time and money to improving the conditions which surround the wounded Russian soldiers.

ENGLAND WANTS LUMBER.

Heavy Cargo Orders Expected in the Northwest.

SEATTLE, Wash., Nov. 14.—Inquiries for 9,000,000 railroad ties and for 10,000,000 feet of large timbers received during the last ten days, have stimulated the Northwestern lumber situation, and local exporters look for heavy cargo orders. The inquiries come principally from the United Kingdom.

The supply for England has heretofore been furnished from the region of the Baltic. Seattle lumbermen said it was the English custom to buy large timbers and saw them into boards in English mills

PROCLAMATION BY ENVER.

Says Turks with Allah's Help Will Destroy Their Enemies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 14, (via Berlin and London.)—Enver Bey, the Turkish Minister of War, and leader of the Young Turk Party, has published a proclamation to the Turkish Army, as follows:

"Comrades: I have the honor to announce to you a noble irade from the Sultan. Our army will destroy our enemies with Allah's help and the assistance of the Prophet, and by the pious prayer of the Sovereign.

"Forward, always forward! Victory, glory, and paradise are before us; death and disgrace behind. Long live our Padishah!"

RUMANIANS FOR THE ALLIES.

Senator Jonesco Says German Money Cannot Win Their Support.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—That Rumania may soon actively join the Triple Entente seems probable, according to a letter addressed to the Temps by Dr. Thomas Jonesco, member of the Rumanian Senate and Rector of Bucharest University, who says:

"The allegations of the Hungarian Premier, Count Tissa, who recently informed an Italian newspaper that Rumanian opinion was being influenced by Russian bribes, are utterly absurd and without foundation. On the other hand, the Germans have spent large sums in buying Rumanian newspapers, but have been unable to alter the public desire to establish an alliance with the Triple Entente. All the independent press, all the Conservative Democrats, and a majority of the Conservatives have declared openly for such a policy. Recently the Professors of Bucharest University presented a petition to the King, begging that Rumania might achieve her national ideals by a resort to arms. They left the royal audience very well contented."

TO KILL THREE FOR ONE.

Turks Threaten to Slay Foreigners at Syrian Ports.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A dispatch to The Times from Cairo, dated yesterday, says:

"The British and French Consuls from Damascus and Aleppo, who reached Cairo with American assistance, assert that before being allowed to leave they were obliged to sign a document agreeing, in the event of an attack by the Allies on the Syrian ports, to the shooting of three British, French, or Russian residents for every Turk killed."

Plus a few remarks about furs generally

What you want above all is a fur you can depend upon, regardless of its name, and that is best assured by purchasing your furs from a house like Saks & Company, which maintains a furriers' department of its own. You simply cannot afford to buy furs from a store which is only a clearing house for finished fur garments and which, obviously, is just as much in the dark on the subject as you are.

Saks & Company conduct their own Fur Department, assemble their own furs, and design and make their own models, and that eliminates for you much of the customary cost and all of the customary worry

FAMINE THREATENS BELGIUM ALREADY

In Little Town of St. Nicholas Alone 20,000 Face Starvation —Same Story from Malines.

ATTACK GERMAN FOOD TRAIN

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Capt. T. F. Lucey, active in the distribution of American relief in Belgium, has sent a message to the American Relief Committee in London saying that the supplies available are insufficient to meet the urgent needs of the Belgian people, and requesting further assistance.

The American Consul at Antwerp has written to Henry van Dyke, the American Minister at The Hague, as follows:

"It seems that Belgium will have to face the danger of famine much earlier than any of us thought it would. I have been called upon by the Mayor of St. Nicholas, imploring me to hasten, if possible, such help as the American people could and would render, as they had over 20,000 people without bread and without work in this little town, and no means of providing for them.

"An equally strong appeal has come from the Mayor of the stricken city of Malines, and I learn that down in the coal district, near Charleroi, a number of poor people, maddened with hunger, attacked a German military train laden with provisions."

HER HOSPITAL FOR BELGIANS.

Mrs. H. P. Whitney's Organization Assigned to King Albert's Army.

PARIS, Nov. 14.—The flying hospital organized in France by Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney of New York is to be assigned to work with the Belgian Army in Belgium. M. de Broqueville, the Belgian Premier, has suggested waiting a few days before taking the field—"until such time as the Belgian Army occupies Ostend"—and the establishing of the hospital at that place.

Robert Bacon, ex-Ambassador to France, has interested himself in the success of Mrs. Whitney's undertaking, and has gone to the front to arrange for a suitable location, possibly elsewhere than at Ostend. The hospital staff desires to get into action immediately, and not to await the outcome of military operations against Ostend.

The news of the arrival of this American hospital has been received gratefully by the Belgian Government.

The American Ambulance Corps, with headquarters in Paris, has received a cablegram from Maryland, saying that fifty more automobile ambulances were to be sent to France from America.

QUEEN MARY GRATEFUL.

Wants American Women to Know She Appreciates Aid to Troops.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Americans have been liberal in response to Queen Mary's appeal for 300,000 belts and pairs of socks for the soldiers at the front. Through Lady Arthur Paget, prominent in the relief work in behalf of the soldiers, the need of a fund for the supply of these articles was brought especially to the attention of American women. Lady Paget said today:

"The generosity of my countrywomen and countrymen is most gratifying. Every day I receive parcels from all parts of America. Already 15,000 pairs of socks have been sent to me, many accompanied by touching letters from women, children, and shopgirls. Some say there is nothing they could spare except an hour of daily knitting, but that they gladly yielded their leisure time to help the men in the trenches.

"Many business houses also sent socks. The gifts are forwarded immediately to the men at the front, with the explanation that they are from American friends. The soldiers are duly grateful for the gifts."

Lady Paget has received this letter from Queen Mary:

Buckingham Palace, Nov. 7.

Dear Lady Paget: The Queen is much touched at the very large number of socks, belts, and shirts being made and sent to you for our troops by friends and well-wishers in the United States. Can you find some opportunity of expressing to them her Majesty's very grateful thanks for this practical mark of sympathy?

The things will be of the greatest use. It is with real pleasure and gratification that her Majesty accepts them and hopes that your friends will continue their gifts through you. Believe me, yours truly,

MARY TREFUSIS, Lady in Waiting.

MISSING WERE INCLUDED.

57,000 British Casualties Were Not Only Killed and Wounded.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Some uncertainty existed as to whether the announcement of British casualties made in the House of Commons yesterday by Premier Asquith included the missing, or referred only to the killed and wounded. It is now officially stated that the former is the case.

This total of 57,000 casualties for about nine weeks of war, for the British expeditionary force got into action toward the end of August, is at the rate of about 25,000 per month.

The Westminster Gazette says the record is not greater than was expected by those in the best position to know, adding: "Bearing in mind the heavy character of the fighting, the number of casualties cannot be said to be surprising. To get the number of dead we should not be far wrong if we divided it by ten.

"In addition to these casualties there is the wastage by sickness, though up to the present this, happily, has been inconsiderable. As winter comes on and the weather becomes worse we must expect a considerable amount of sickness, though we shall be surprised and disappointed if our record in this respect is not a vast improvement on what took place in the South African War, when for every one wounded soldier admitted to hospital twenty-three were admitted for sickness."

TURKEY BLAMES BRITAIN.

Issues a Statement Regarding the Origin of the New War.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—Turkey has issued a statement through Rome placing the blame for the war between the British and Ottoman empires on England, which power, she says, complains of Turkey's acquisition of the German cruisers Goeben and Breslau, but does not mention anything of her seizure of the two Turkish battleships which were building in England at the outbreak of the war.

Turkey also charges that England did all she could to wreck Turkey and that the British guarantee of integrity could not be regarded seriously because of her occupation of Egypt.

DR. VAN DYKE COMING HOME.

Constant Work Has Hurt His Eyes, and He Must Have Rest.

THE HAGUE, Nov. 14.—Dr. Henry Van Dyke, American Minister to the Netherlands, sailed tonight on the steamer Rotterdam for New York.

Dr. Van Dyke has received a brief leave of absence on account of serious injury to his eyes owing to continuous work since the beginning of the war. He has been advised that rest is essential. He expects to consult his physician at home before returning to The Hague next month.

SUSPECTED SPY HAD AMERICAN PASSPORT

HAD AT LEAST THREE NAMES

Arrested for Failing to Register, but "More Serious Charges" Are Threatened.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—A mysterious individual known under the names of Horst, Von der Goltz and Bridgman Taylor, described as a Major in the Mexican army and suspected of being a German spy, was remanded in a police court today on the charge of failing to register as an alien enemy.

The prosecution said that although the prisoner was charged with this minor offense, he was under very grave suspicion at the Foreign Office, at the Admiralty, and on the part of the police, and that he might have to answer more serious charges when the inquiry into his career had been completed.

The real name of this man is not yet known, but he had in his possession a passport issued in Washington bearing the name Bridgman (or Bridgeman) Taylor, and describing him as a Major in the Mexican army. An indorsement on this passport showed that the bearer had been in Berlin as recently as Oct. 29. He arrived in London on Nov. 4 under an assumed name and with a false passport. A few days later he was arrested.

The prosecution mentioned sums of money which, it was said, had been remitted to the prisoner by an official named F. Faber. The prosecutor said he did not as yet know whether the official was a German or a representative of the United States Consulate. The passport found on the prisoner, in the name of Taylor, was issued at Washington on Aug. 30, or purported to have been issued there and then.

When arrested by a detective and asked whether his name was Taylor or Von der Goltz, the prisoner is alleged to have replied: Taylor, but how came you to know that I am Von der Goltz?"

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The records of the State Department show that a passport was issued last Aug. 31 to Bridgeman W. Taylor, born in San Francisco on July 16, 1887. He was represented to be an export broker of New York. The application for the passport came through Frederick F. Schneider, 2 East German Street, Baltimore, and the name of Charles J. Tucker, 82 Wall Street, New York, was attached as identifying witness.

There was no statement on the face of the passport as it left here indicating that Taylor was a Major in the Mexican Army. It is not permissible to include such data in a passport. Officials have no way of telling whether the passport has been altered.

Because fraud was possible under the old passport system, the President issued new regulations yesterday, making radical changes with a view to obtaining perfect identification of the applicant, establishing his full right to a passport as a native of this country or a naturalized citizen, and otherwise maintaining the integrity of American passports.

Though the officials will not admit that they were directly influenced by the evidence in the case of the young German, Lody, shot as a spy in the Tower of London, who fraudulently used the passport of an American named Inglis, the State Department has already been looking into the subject. The Inglis passport was issued by the American Embassy at Berlin.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 14.—Frederick F. Schneider, a lawyer with offices in the same building as those of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, readily recalls having drawn the application for a passport for a man giving the name of Bridgeman W. Taylor last August. He knew nothing whatever respecting the man's antecedents or his business, he said tonight.

It was a common practice, Mr. Schneider added, for the steamship company to send intending passengers desiring passports to him for the preparation of the application, and it was fair to assume that it had done so in this instance.

The name of Charles J. Tucker does not appear in any of the New York City or telephone directories.

SEES ENGLISH BOND PLOT.

Reichsbank Threatens Banks Helping Foreign Owners Unload.

BERLIN, via The Hague, Nov. 13, via London, Nov. 14.—The Reichsbank today took action designed to check the inflow of German securities from abroad.

A considerable volume of German bonds with an English stamp having recently reached Germany, the Reichsbank sees therein an attempt of the English to depress the price of the bonds and discredit Germany's financial solidity.

Hence Rudolf Havenstein, President of the Reichsbank, today conferred with the Boerse Committee, after which the committee gave out a press statement that the Reichsbank would permanently sever all business relations with banks acting as agents for such foreign operations.

SAYS ANTWERP WAS ROBBED.

German Press Bureau Accuses British of $40,000,000 Theft.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (by Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—Information handed officially to the press is as follows:

"Previous to the fall of Antwerp the British forces destroyed and robbed private property belonging to Belgians and neutral firms, and did damage amounting to over 200,000,000f., ($40,000,000.)

"It is reported here from Holland that the Belgian troops are so depressed by the German victory at Dixmude that the British commanders will no longer permit them to fight as separate units.

"The British Consul General at Munich has urged the President of the Swiss Merchants' Association to trade with British merchants for the business that they formerly did with German firms. The Swiss Merchants' Association declined this proposal.

"Russian troops brutally dragged away the German residents of a Persian town and maltreated and clubbed the women and children.

"The Frankfurter Zeitung publishes a letter from a Swiss subject in Canada, who says that the French Consul in a certain Canadian town who at the same time represented Switzerland, urged Swiss subjects in Canada to join the Canadian expedition against Germany, saying mendaciously that Germany, after the occupation of Swiss territory, was at war with Switzerland. Some Swiss subjects, believing the Consul, joined the Canadian contingent.

"The Socialists of Milan have again indulged in a manfestation."

RESPECTS BRITISH FLEET.

German Critic Warns the Public Against Treating It with Contempt.

BERLIN, Nov. 14, (via The Hague and London.)—Count von Reventlow, writing in The Tages Zeitung, again sounds a note of warning against the popular exaggeration of Germany's military successes in the past or of the results attained by the German fleet. At the same time he cautions his readers against contempt for the strength of the British fleet.

This naval critic expects a complete German victory, but he writes that the people should not for a moment suppose that the British fleet has suffered severely from the losses caused up to the present time by German ships.

"We have no reason," he says, "to disregard the British fleet or to believe that its fighting spirit and effectiveness are not of a high standing. It may be said that those best able to judge in this matter in German naval circles have no such conception."

CANADA'S FINE RESPONSE.

Host of Men Volunteering for the War, Says Premier Borden.

Sir Robert L. Borden, Premier of Canada, arrived at the Algonquin yesterday with Lady Borden from Hot Springs, Va., where they had been spending the last three weeks. They expect to leave tonight for Ottawa. Sir Robert said:

"There has been a very fine response all over Canada to the call for volunteers," he said in answer to a question. "As a matter of fact, they are coming along faster than we can take care of them."

Robert Rogers, Minister of Public Works in the Dominion Cabinet, who has been at the Ritz-Carlton on business for two or three days, expects also to leave for Ottawa tonight. Mr. Rogers says that work on the great public improvements in Canada has not been halted by the war, but is going on as usual.

"We are pressing the work on the Welland Canal, the Hudson's Bay Railway, and the big docks at Halifax, St. John's, Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver, and Victoria, just as if there were no war," said Mr. Rogers. "You must take with pinches of salt the reports that these works have been endangered by secret agents of alien Governments. The foreign people in Canada are so well treated that they would not entertain the idea of injuring public property in which they have a common interest together with the citizens of the country. No restraint is imposed upon them. Of course, there are certain regulations necessary in times like these, but they are not real restraints."

Mr. Rogers said the report that 60,000 Americans had enlisted in the Canadian expeditionary forces was fiction.

PRAISES BECK'S ARTICLE.

London Paper's Comment on His Argument in The New York Times.

By Marconi Transatlantic Wireless Telegraph to The New York Times.

LONDON, Nov. 14.—The Globe in an editorial article this evening says:

"In THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 25 there appeared a very remarkable article, in which the case of the Allies as against the Germanic Powers is carefully examined and weighed by an eminent American lawyer, Mr. James M. Beck, sometime Assistant Attorney General of the United States.

"Mr. Beck concludes on official evidence, German as well as British, French, and Russian, that Germany is distinctly responsible for the war. For the pretense that inoffensive, peace-loving Germany has been the victim of an unscrupulous conspiracy inspired by the hate and greed of unconscionable enemies this American lawyer seems to find no confirmation whatever, and, as THE NEW YORK TIMES says in comment on the case, 'Even should Germany withstand the assault of the Allies, she can never withstand the moral condemnation of the civilized world.'

"Perhaps that conviction explains the bitter attack by another American paper on the slackness of this country in taking its part in the war. The reproach may be a manifestation of the feeling that Great Britain, with such a supreme cause to defend, has no excuse for delaying to put out her utmost strength."

firing, while secret service men completed the picture by hovering in the immediate neighborhood. You can tell that they are German secret service agents because they all wear felt alpine hats, norfolk jackets, waterproof cloth capes and a bored expression. They have been away from Berlin for nearly three months now. About fifty of them constitute the "Secret Field Police" and their station house is half a block away from the Kaiser's residence.

The Staff Near By.

Just around the corner from the Kaiser, within stone's throw of his back door, is another red brick house with terra cotta trimmings—rather larger and more imposing. The names of its new residents, "Hahnke," "Caprivi" and "Graf von Moltke," are scrawled in white chalk on the stone post of the gateway. Further up the same street another chalk scrawl on a quite imposing mansion informed me that "The Imperial Chancellor" and "The Foreign Office" had set up shop there. Near by were Grand Admiral von Tirpitz's field quarters. A bank building on another principal street bore the sign, "War Cabinet."

The Great General Staff occupies the quaint old Hôtel de Ville. An unmolested ramble showed that all the best residences and business buildings in the heart of the town were required to house the members of the Great Headquarters, who number, in addition to the Kaiser and his personal entourage, thirty-six chiefs or department heads, including the Imperial Chancellor, the War Minister, the Chief of the Great General Staff, the Chief of the Naval General Staff, the Chief of the Ammunition Supply, the Chief of the Field Railways, the Chief of the Field Telephone and Telegraph Service, the Chief of the Sanitary Service, the Chief of the Volunteer Automobile Corps, &c., making with secretaries, clerks, ordonnances, and necessary garrison a community of 1,200 souls.

I could not help wondering why the Allies' aviators weren't "on the job." A dozen, backed up by an intelligent intelligence department, could so obviously settle the fortunes of the war by blowing out the brains of their enemy. Perhaps that is why the whereabouts of the Great Headquarters is guarded as a jealous secret. The soldiers at the front don't know where it is, nor the man on the street at home, and, of course, its location is not breathed in the German press. Theoretically, only those immediately concerned are "in the know." Visitors are not allowed; neutral foreign correspondents are told by the authorities in Berlin that "it is impossible" to go to the Grosser Hauptquartier.

Guard Against Air Raid.

Two aeroplane guns are mounted on the hills across the river at a point immediately opposite the Kaiser's residence, while near them a picked squad of sharpshooters is on the watch night and day for hostile fliers. To further safeguard, not only the person of the Kaiser, but the brains of the fighting machine, the spy hunt is kept up here with unrelenting pertinacity.

"We went over the town with a fine-tooth comb and cleaned out all the suspicious characters the very first day we arrived," said a friendly detective.

"There are no cranks or anarchists left here. Today the order is going out to arrest all men of military age—between eighteen and forty-five—but there are few, if any, left. We also made a house to house search for arms and collected three wagonloads, mostly old.

"Our Kaiser is as safe here now as he would be anywhere in Germany. We know every one who arrives and leaves town. It seems impossible for a spy to slip in and still more to slip out again through the lines—but we are always on the watch for the impossible. The fear of spies is not a delusion or a form of madness, as you suggest. Here is one case of my personal knowledge. A German boy scout of sixteen, who had learned to speak French and English perfectly at school, volunteered his services and was attached to the staff of an army corps. This young chap succeeded in slipping into Rheims, where he was able to locate the positions of the French batteries and machine guns and make his way back to our lines with this invaluable information. For this feat the boy received the Iron Cross. After being in the field for six weeks he got homesick, however, and has been allowed to go home for a visit."

From a spectacular point of view the great headquarters is rather disappointing. A few mixed patrols of Uhlans, dragoons, and hussars occasionally ride through the principal streets to exercise their horses. Occasionally, too, you see a small squad of strapping grenadiers, who break into the goose step on the slightest provocation as when they pass a General or other officer of the Great General Staff, whom you recognize by the broad red stripes on their "field gray" trousers.

There is no pomp or ceremony even when royalty is running around at large. Thus when the King of Saxony arrived in town a few hours after I did, no fuss was made whatever. The Saxon King and his staff, three touring car loads, all in field gray, drove straight to the villa assigned them, and, after reciprocal informal visits between King and Kaiser, the former left to visit some of the battlefields on which Saxon troops had fought, and later paid a visit to his troops at the front. For this exploit, the Kaiser promptly bestowed on him the Iron Cross, first and second class, on his return to town.

Kaiser at the Front.

Even the Kaiser's heart is not covered with medals, nor does he wear the gorgeous white plume parade helmet nowadays, when going out for a horseback ride or a drive. I saw him come from a motor run late in the afternoon, four touring cars full of staff officers and personal entourage—and was struck by the complete absence of pomp and ceremony. In the second car sat the Kaiser, wearing the dirty green-gray uniform of his soldiers in the field. At a distance of fifteen feet, the Over War Lord looked physically fit, but quite sober—an intense earnestness of expression that seemed to mirror the sternness of the times.

The Kaiser goes for a daily drive or ride about the countryside usually in the afternoon, but occasionally he is allowed to have a real outing by his solicitous entourage—a day and more rarely a night with his troops in the field.

"His Majesty is never so happy as when he is among his troops at the front," another transplanted Berlin detective told me. "If his Majesty had his way he would be among them all the time, preferably sleeping under canvas and roughing it like the rest—eating the 'simple' food prepared by his private field kitchen. But his life is too valuable to be risked in that way, and his personal adjutant, von Plessen, who watches over his Majesty like a mother or a governess, won't let him go to the front often. His Majesty loves his soldiers and would be among them right up at the firing line if he were not constantly watched and kept in check by his devoted von Plessen." However, the Kaiser sleeps within earshot of the not very distant thunder of the German heavy artillery pounding away at Rheims, plainly heard here at night when the wind blows from the right direction.

No Sign of Cruelty.

Of barbarism or brutality the writer saw no signs, either here or at other French villages occupied by Germans. The behavior of the common soldiers toward the natives is exemplary and in most cases kindly. There are many touches of human interest. I saw about a hundred of the most destitute hungry townsfolk mostly women with little children, hanging around one of the barracks at the outskirts of the town until after supper the German soldiers came out and distributed the remnants of their black bread rations to them. It is not an uncommon sight to see staff officers as well as soldiers stopping on the streets to hand out small alms to the begging women and children. Many of the shops in town were closed and boarded up at the approach of the Prussians, but small hotel keepers, café proprietors, and tradesmen who had the nerve to remain and keep open are very well satisfied with the German invasion in one way, for they never made so much money before in their lives. Most of the German soldiers garrisoned here have picked up a few useful words of French, all of them can and do call for wine, white or red, in the vernacular. Moreover, they pay for all they consume. I was astonished to see even the detectives paying real money for what they drank. Several tradesmen told me they had suffered chiefly at the hands of the French soldiers themselves; who had helped themselves freely to their stock before retreating without paying, saying it was no use to leave good wine for the Prussian swine.

I had not prowled around the great headquarters for many hours when the Secret Field Police, patrolling all the streets, showed signs of curiosity and to forestall the orthodox arrest and march to headquarters (already experienced once, in Cologne) waited upon Lieut. Col. von Hahnke, military commandant of the city, and secured immunity in the form of the commandant's signature on a scrap of paper stamped in purple ink with the Prussian eagle. Commandant Hahnke, after expressing the opinion that it was good that American newspaper men were coming to Germany to see for themselves and hoping that "the truth" was beginning to become known on the other side, courteously sent his adjutant along to get me past the guard at the Great General Staff and introduce me to Major Nikolai, Chief of Division III. B, in charge of newspaper correspondents and military attachés. Here, however, the freedom of the American Press came into hopeless, but humorous, collision with the Prussian militarism.

Major Nikolai Is Severe.

"Who are you? What are you doing here? How did you get here?" snapped the Prussian Major. A kind letter of introduction from Ambassador Gerard requesting "all possible courtesy and assistance from the authorities of the countries through which he may pass," and emblazoned with the red seal of the United States of America, which had worked like magic on all previous occasions, had no effect on Major Nikolai. Neither had a letter from the American Consul at Cologne, nor a letter of introduction to Gen. von Buelow, nor any one of a dozen other impressive documents produced in succession for his benefit.

"No foreign correspondents are permitted to be at the Great Headquarters. None have been allowed to come here. If we allow one to remain fifty others will want to come and we should be unable to keep an eye on all of them," he explained. "You must go back to Berlin at once."

Reluctant permission was finally obtained to remain one night on the possibly unwarranted intimation that the great American people would consider it a "national affront" if an American newspaperman was not allowed to stay and see the American military attaché, Major Langhorne, who was away on a sightseeing tour near Verdun, but would be back in the morning. However, a long cross-examination had to be undergone at the hands of the venerable Herr Chief of the Secret Field Police Bauer, who was taking no chances at harboring an English spy, in the Hauptquartier disguised as a correspondent.

I found Major Langhorne standing the strain of the campaign well, and I gathered the impression that he intended to see the thing through, and that there was much which America could learn from the titanic operations of the Germans. Major Langhorne and the Argentinian, Brazilian, Chilean, Spanish, Rumanian, and Swedish military attachés are luxuriously quartered a mile and a half out of town in the handsome villa of M. Noll, the landscape painter, present whereabouts unknown. The attachés all have a sense of humor, "otherwise," said one of them, "we could never stand being cooped up here together." The gardener's daughter, a pretty young Frenchwoman, the only servant who remained behind when the household fled at the approach of the Germans, is both cook and housekeeper, and when I arrived I found the seven military attachés resolved into a board of strategy trying to work out the important problem of securing a pure milk supply for her four-month-old baby.

Work consists of occasional motor runs to various points along the long front. I was told that recently Major Langhorne ran into some heavy shrapnel and shell fire, and was lucky to get away with a whole skin. When asked to tell about it, Major Langhorne passed it off laughingly as "all in the day's work."

In spite of the fact that they are engaged in keeping their end up in a life-and-death fight for national existence, the Great General Staff has found time to give the American Military Attaché every possible opportunity to see actual fighting.

The foreign military attachés have made many of their expeditions in company with the small band of German war correspondents, who live in another villa close by, under the constant chaperonage of Major von Rohrscheidt. They are allowed to see much but send little. The relative position of the press in Germany is indicated by the fact that these German war correspondents are nicknamed "hunger candidates." A military expert who was well posted on American journalism explained to me, however, that the very tight censorship lid was not for the purpose of withholding news from the German people, but to keep valuable information from being handed to the enemy. He pointed out that the laconic German official dispatches dealt only with things actually accomplished, and were very bare of detail, while, on the other hand, the French and English press had been worth more than several army corps to the Germans, concluding, "It may be poor journalism, but it's the right way to make war."

Kaiserin's Birthday Celebration.

Oct. 22.—It was hard to realize today that a great war was going on. Every building in town occupied by the Germans was decorated with the German flag in honor of the Kaiserin's birthday, and at night the principal ones, including that occupied by the "War Cabinet," were specially illuminated. All morning long, quantities of Generals came rolling up in touring cars to the Kaiser's door to pay their homage and offer congratulations. About noon the Crown Prince and staff arrived by motor from the direction of the headquarters of his army. The Crown Prince, who characteristically sat on the front seat next to the chauffeur, looked as boyish and immature as his former pictures—his military cap cocked slightly on one side. The responsibility of leading an army had apparently not had a sobering effect on the Crown Prince as yet, but I was told that the guiding brain and genius in the Crown Prince's army headquarters was not that of the Crown Prince, but of his chief adviser, Gen. von Haeseler, the brilliant cavalry leader of the war of 1870 and now the "grand old man" of the German Army, sharing with von Zeppelin the distinction of being the oldest living German Generals. It seemed still harder to realize that men were fighting and dying not fifty miles away when, after lunch, Kaiser, Crown Prince, and staffs went for a two hours' automobile ride, the Crown Prince leaving late in the afternoon to rejoin his command.

Express Motor Service.

Here one gets more and more the impression that the Germans in their war-making have learned a lesson from the hustling Americans—that they have managed to graft American speed to their native thoroughness, making a combination hard to beat. For instance, there is a regular relay service of high-power racing motor cars between the Great Headquarters and Berlin, the schedule calling for a total running time of something under a day and a half, beating the best time at present possible by train by four hours. One of the picked drivers, who has the last lap through France—said his running schedule required him to average sixty miles an hour, and this running at night. A network of fast relay automobile services is also run from the Great Headquarters through Belgium, linking up Brussels and Antwerp, and to the principal points on the long line of battle.

How great a rôle the motor car plays among the Germans may be gathered from an estimate made to the writer that 40,000 were in use for military purposes. Many thousands of these are private automobiles operated by their wealthy owners as members of the Volunteer War Automobile Corps, of which Prince Waldemar, son of the Sailor Prince Henry, is Chief. Their ranks include many big business men, captains of industry, and men of social prominence, and professional eminence. They wear a distinctive uniform, that of an infantry officer with a collar of very dark red, and a short, purely ornamental sword or dagger.

Back to Luxemburg.

LUXEMBURG, Oct. 24.—I have just returned from the German Great Headquarters in France, the visit terminating abruptly on the fourth day, when one of the Kaiser's secret field police woke me up at 7 o'clock in the morning and regretfully said that his instructions were to see that I "did not oversleep" the first train out. The return journey along one of the German main lines of communication—through Eastern France, across a corner of Belgium and through Luxemburg—was full of interest, and confirmed the impression gathered at the centre of things, the Great Headquarters, that this twentieth century warfare is in the last analysis a gigantic business proposition which the Board of Directors (the Great General Staff) and the thirty-six department heads are conducting with the efficiency of a great American business corporation.

The west-bound track is a continuous procession of freight trains—fresh consignments of raw material—men and ammunition—being rushed to the firing line to be ground out into victories. The first shipment we pass is an infantry battalion—first ten flat cars loaded with baggage, ammunition, provision wagons, and field kitchens, the latter already with fire lighted and soup cooking as the long train steams slowly along, for the trenches are only fifty miles away, and the Germans make a point of sending their troops into battle with full stomachs.

After the flat cars come thirty box-cars, all decorated with green branches and scrawled over with chalked witticisms at the expense of the French and Russians. The men cheer as our train passes. A few kilometers further, backed on to a siding, is a train of some twenty flatcars, each loaded with a touring car. Then we pass a battery of artillery on flatcars, the guns still garlanded with flowers; then a short freight train—six cars loaded with nothing but spare automobile tires—then a long train of heavy motor trucks, then more infantry trains, then an empty hospital train going back for another load, then a train of gasoline tank cars, more cheering infantry, more artillery, another empty hospital train, a pioneer train, a score of flatcars loaded with long heavy piles, beams, steel girders, bridge spans, and lumber, then a passenger train load of German railway officials and servants going to operate the railways toward the coast, more infantry, food trains, ammunition trains, train loads of railway tracks already bolted to metal ties and merely needing to be laid down and pieced together, and so on in endless succession all through France and through Belgium. The two-track road, shaky in spots, especially when crossing rivers, is being worked to capacity, and how well the huge traffic is handled is surprising even to an American commuter.

Clearing a Big Tunnel.

Our fast train stops at the mouth of a tunnel, then crawls ahead charily, for the French, before retreating, dynamited the tunnel. One track has been cleared but the going is still bad. To keep it from being blocked again by falling débris the Germans have dug clean through the top of the hill, opening up a deep well of light into the tunnel. Looking up, you see a pioneer company in once cream-colored, now dirty colored fatigue uniform still digging away and terracing the sides of the big hole to prevent slides. [See illustration on Page 4 of the picture section of today's TIMES.] Half an hour later we go slow again in crossing a new wooden bridge over the Meuse—only one track as yet. It took the German pioneers nearly a week to build the substitute for the old steel railway bridge dynamited by the French, whose four spans lie buckled up in the river. The pioneers are at work driving piles to carry a second track. The process is interesting. A forty man power pile driver is rigged upon the bow end of a French river barge with forty soldiers tugging at forty strands of the main rope. The "gang" foreman, a Captain in field gray, stands on the river bank and bellows the word of command. Up goes the heavy iron weight; another command, and down it drops on the pile. It looks like a painfully slow process, but the bridges are rebuilt just the same.

Further on, a variety of interest is furnished to a squad of French prisoners being marched along the road. Then a spot of ant-hill-like activity where a German railway company is at work building a new branch line, hundreds of them having pick-axes and making the dirt fly. You halt expect to see a swearing Irish foreman. It looks like home—all except the inevitable officer (distinguished by revolver and field glass) shouting commands.

The intense activity of the Germans in rebuilding the torn-up railroads and pushing ahead new strategic lines is one of the most interesting features of a tour now in France. I was told that they had pushed the railroad work so far that they were able to ship men and ammunition almost up to the fortified trenches. The Germanization of the railroads here has been completed by the importation of station superintendents, station hands, track walkers, &c., from the Fatherland. The stretch over which we are traveling, for example, is in charge of Bavarians. The Bavarian and German flags hang out at every French station we pass. German signs everywhere, even German time. It looks as if they thought to stay forever.

Now we creep past a long hospital train, full this time, which has turned out on a siding to give us the right of way—perhaps thirty all-steel cars—each fitted with two tiers of berths, eight to a side, sixteen to a car. Every berth is taken. One car is fitted up as an operating room, but fortunately no one is on the operating table as we crawl past. Another car is the private office of the surgeon in charge of the train. He is sitting at a big desk receiving reports from the orderlies. During the day we pass six of these splendidly appointed new all-steel hospital trains, all full of wounded. Some of them are able to sit up in their bunks and take a mild interest in us. Once, by a queer coincidence, we simultaneously pass the wounded going one way and cheering fresh troops going the other.

FRANK'S LAST HOPE IN GEORGIA GONE

State Supreme Court Rules Against His Motion to Set Aside Murder Verdict.

HOLDS HIS PLEA TOO LATE

Should Have Demanded Constitutional Rights When Moving for New Trial.

NOW TO MAKE FINAL APPEAL

Case Will Be Carried to United States Supreme Court on Writ of Error or Habeas Corpus.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 14.—Leo M. Frank's fight for life, so far as the courts of Georgia are concerned, is over. The supreme tribunal of the State today upheld Solicitor General Dorsey's demurrer to the motion to set aside the verdict declaring Frank guilty of the murder of Mary Phagan. An appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States is now all that stands between the prisoner and death except the invoking of Executive clemency.

The motion to set aside the verdict was made on the ground that the prisoner's constitutional rights were invaded by his absence from the courtroom when the jury returned the verdict of guilty. The decision was written by Justice Warner Hill and was concurred in by the entire court, with the exception of Justice Fish, who is ill.

Frank, in his cell in the Tower, received the news with the same equanimity that has marked his demeanor since his arrest.

"I had put great faith in the plea of my lawyers," he said, "and had looked for a favorable decision by the Supreme Court. That is all I have to say."

Milton Klein, a friend, who was with the prisoner, said: "The United States Supreme Court is next on the list."

Frank was writing a letter when the news was told to him. He was not sufficiently disturbed to stop his work, and in a few minutes completed the letter and gave it to his friend to be mailed.

The State Supreme Court decision goes into the merits of the contentions of the defense in detail. The court holds that the points made by Frank in his motion to set aside should have been made in his motion for a new trial. The court quoted a number of authorities in this connection, after which it said:

Where a motion for a new trial is made, the defendant must set out all that is known to him at the time or by reasonable diligence could have been known by him as grounds for a new trial. Did the defendant in the instant case know at the time he made his motion that he was absent without his consent when the verdict of guilty was rendered against him? He must of necessity have known it, and likewise his counsel.

In one ground of his motion for a new trial, (which was reviewed and passed on by this Court in the case of Frank versus The State, 141 Georgia, 243,) it was alleged: "Defendant was not in the court room when the verdict was rendered, his presence having been waived by his counsel." When one convicted of crime makes a motion for a new trial, it is his duty to include everything in it which was appropriate to such a motion and which was known to him at the time. As we have seen, defendant could have made the question under consideration in the motion for a new trial.

Can't Appeal in Sections.

The court, in substantiation of the principle laid down, cites the case of Daniels vs. Towers, 770 Georgia, 785. Justice Bleckley delivered this opinion, in part, as follows:

"We rest the case upon the general rule that, after a Judge of the Superior Court has presided in any case in the Superior Court of any county and the judgment rendered at the trial has been affirmed by this (the Supreme) Court, it is to be taken for all purposes that it was a legal trial and judgment and cannot be questioned for anything but the want of jurisdiction appearing upon the face of the proceedings as ruled upon here. If there is more record below and the plaintiff in error after conviction does not bring it up, it is his own misfortune. He had opportunity to bring it up. He must abide by the judgment upon the record which he brings here, and if the judgment is legal, according to that record, he must take the consequences. It will not do to allow him to bring up his case in sections. He must bring up his whole case as he expects to stand upon it for all time, and if he does not do it, neither he nor his friends can repair the error afterwards."

Referring to Frank's contention that he had a right to be present when the verdict was rendered and could not waive such right, the court says:

"It is the undoubted right of a defendant who is indicted for a criminal offense in this State to be present at every stage of his trial. But he may waive his presence at the reception of the verdict entered in his case."

Authorities to sustain this point are cited by the court.

Touching upon the authority of Frank's counsel to waive his presence for him, the court says:

Not Deemed Sound Practice.

As said by this court, in effect, in the case of Lumpkin vs. The State, 87 Georgia, 517, it is not sound practice for counsel to make a waiver of their client's presence at the reception of the verdict, take the chances of acquittal for their client and then, after a verdict of guilty, the defendant should be allowed to repudiate the action of counsel and employ other counsel to set aside the verdict because of the absence of the defendant at the time it was rendered.

Who was better prepared to protect the interests of the defendant, trained and expert counsel or the defendant himself? True, he had the right to conduct the trial in person, if he so desired, but the defendant had committed his case to able and experienced counsel, who, in the exercise of their relation as attorneys for the client waived his right to be present; and, having made the waiver, and defendant by his conduct having acquiesced in it, he should be bound by it.

It would be trifling with the court to allow one who had been convicted of crime and who had made a motion for a new trial on over 100 grounds, including a statement that his counsel had waived his presence at the reception of the verdict, have the motion heard by both the Superior and Supreme Courts, and, after a denial by both courts of the motion, to now come in and by way of a motion to set aside the verdict, include matters which were or ought to have been included in the motion for a new trial.

We know of no provision in the Constitution of the United States or of this State, nor of any statute which gives to an accused person a right to disregard the rules of procedure in a State which afford him due process of law and demand that he shall move in his own way and be granted absolute freedom because of an irregularity (if there is one) in receiving the verdict. If an accused person could make use of some of his points to attack the verdict and reserve other points known to him, which he could then have made, to be used as grounds for further attacks on the verdict, there would be practically no end to a criminal case.

Referring to that part of the motion to set aside the verdict on the grounds of disorder in the courtroom during the trial, of cheering and applause outside the courtroom, and of the oral remarks of the trial judge before signing the order denying the new trial, the decision holds that these questions were raised and adjudicated in the motion for a new trial, and that therefore the court will not again consider them.

Will File Writ of Error.

When asked as to the course of action now to be resorted to, John L. Tye of Tye, Peeples & Jordan, attorneys for Frank, said that a writ of error would be filed with the State Supreme Court as soon as possible. This could not be filed before ten days, he said, as it would take that long for the remittur to come from the State Supreme Court to the Superior Court.

When the writ of error is filed it must be certified by the State Supreme Court before the case can be carried to the United States Supreme Court. It is an open question whether the State Supreme Court will certify this writ. If the court refuses, the next resource of the defense, it is said, will be to swear out a writ of habeas corpus in the United States District Court and on this writ take the case to the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. Tye said the case would be carried to the United States Supreme Court on the same grounds as those on which the motion was based to set aside the verdict that Frank was not tried according to due process of law, granted to him as a constitutional right, in that he was not present when the verdict was returned, and for other and minor reasons.

The success of Solicitor General Dorsey's demurrer in the hearing before Judge Ben Hill had the effect of bringing the question of the validity of the demurrer, rather than the merits of the motion itself, before the Supreme Court, and it was upon the demurrer that the court made its decision today.

Solicitor Dorsey's demurrer set up six grounds on which he asked that the Supreme Court dismiss the motion without a hearing by the lower court. His first contention was that the motion should be dismissed "because a motion to set aside a verdict or judgment of the court should be under the law predicated upon some defect appearing on the face of the pleadings or the record, and the motion filed is not one so predicated."

The second ground set up by the Solicitor was that Frank, if he wished to take advantage of the fact that he was not in the courtroom at the time of the verdict, should have included this point in the motion for a new trial, which he filed shortly after his conviction.

Frank's Conduct an Estoppel.

The other grounds embodied a similarity of contention, all holding that Frank's conduct had amounted to an estoppel—that is, that he had too late adopted the remedy which might have been proper at an earlier time, but was not now, after he unsuccessfully had fought other motions through the lower court and the Supreme Court. The final ground said:

"The motion should be dismissed because this petition affirmatively shows that said Frank, after a knowledge of the waiver of his presence on the part of his counsel, acquiesced in the same and took steps affirmatively, indicating a waiver of such conduct on the part of his counsel."

Frank's lawyers, disputing Dorsey's contentions, maintained that the doctrine of estoppel does not exist in criminal cases and that a man on trial for his life has the right at any time to assert for his protection any right given to him by the law.

After disposing of the question of timeliness and practice counsel for the prisoner arrayed hundreds of citations to prove their contention that not one decision in a State court or in the United States Supreme Court ever had held that a defendant's counsel, without the consent of the accused, had the right to waive his client's presence, and that only one decision—the one in the Cawthorn case—held that the prisoner himself had this right in a felony case.

That the attorneys for Frank had built great hopes on the Supreme Court decision, and that it was a distinct shock to them, was stated by Leonard Haas, associate counsel for the convicted man in his plea for constitutional rights.

"We did not believe that the Supreme Court would deny the motion," Mr. Haas said. "We were confident that Frank would be released by the court's decision. We have not given up hope, however. The United States Supreme Court has many precedents to govern it, in all of which it has ruled that a prisoner cannot waive his presence at the time of the verdict."

"I will fight the case if it is taken to the United States Supreme Court," said Solicitor General Dorsey. "The fight has become one against the courts and their decisions, and I shall see it through."

CROPSEY BROADENS ATTACK ON JUDGES

New Statement Puts Benedict with Marean and Scudder as Grout's Friends.

CALLS CONDUCT UNJUDICIAL

Brooklyn Bar Association Moves to Investigate District Attorney's Charges.

District Attorney Cropsey last night issued a statement defending the method of the District Attorney's office in handling the indictments against Edward M. Grout, and citing the conduct of Justice Benedict as an additional manifestation of the consideration which the District Attorney may expect to receive in the matters relating to Mr. Grout's cases. Mr. Cropsey said:

"The comments made by Mr. Justice Benedict in deciding the motions in the Grout cases had nothing to do with the decisions which he rendered. They were not based upon any matters contained in the papers submitted to him on those motions.

"The language and conduct of the learned Justice were both unjudicial. He required the District Attorney's presence when the decision of the motions was to be announced, and then, after having decided the motions, he proceeded to administer a rebuke which was wholly irrelevant and impertinent to the proceeding before him.

"Inaccurate and Misleading."

"When the learned Justice concluded his speech the District Attorney arose and endeavored to reply to the grossly unjust and unfair criticisms which had been made by the Justice, and to point out to the Justice his many inaccurate and misleading statements of fact. This the learned Justice would not permit.

"The learned Justice's criticisms on the delay in bringing the cases to trial were not founded on fact, and showed that he either did not read the papers which were submitted on the motions or that he deliberately and willfully ignored them. The papers submitted to the court show that there has been no unreasonable or even unusual delay in bringing the cases to trial, and that the delay complained of has been caused solely by the defendant himself."

Mr. Cropsey then went into a history of the indictment against Mr. Grout, and pointed out many motions made by the defense, and to the fact that they had been copying thousands of records pertaining to the case. He said that he did not feel justified in applying for a date for trial while the defense was in course of preparation. Regarding former Justice Marean, Mr. Cropsey said:

"The indictment that was found against Mr. Grout by my predecessor, Mr. Clarke, was emasculated by Mr. Justice Josiah T. Marean, all the important part of it, the part that made the serious charge against the defendant, having been stricken out. There was practically nothing left of that indictment to try. These are the facts. The defendant demurred to the indictment and the argument thereon was heard before Mr. Justice Marean. During the argument that Justice stated that the indictment was not in proper form and that portions of it should be stricken out. The District Attorney stated that there was no power in the court to strike out any portion of an indictment, and that if the indictment was not in proper form the court could sustain the demurrer. (If the demurrer had been sustained the People would have had the right of appeal.) Thereupon the learned Justice stated that he would grant the defendant's motion to strike out parts of the indictment and defendant's counsel handed up to the court for his signature an order granting the motion. This order was not prepared after the learned Justice had publicly stated he would grant the motion; it had been prepared before defendant's counsel came to court to argue the motion.

"No Appeal for People."

"This was done not only against protest, but after the Justice had been advised that the People had no right of appeal from such an order and after he had been further advised that a new indictment could not be found against Mr. Grout as the statute of limitations had run against it.

"After the last indictment was found against Mr. Grout—the indictment for perjury—defendant's counsel moved to transfer it from the County Court to the Supreme Court. This motion was opposed by the District Attorney, and although there was no legal grounds stated for granting the motion, it was granted by Mr. Justice Scudder.

"Justice Scudder stated from the bench that Mr. Grout was a citizen whom all had respected, that his record was without blemish, and that everybody knew how, after the Union Bank had been closed, Mr. Grout was asked to lend the prestige of his name to its Presidency to insure public confidence, and how this was at the request of the Banking Superintendent and upon his representations to Mr. Grout as to the very assets which were in question in these criminal charges, and that he thought a man of Mr. Grout's standing was entitled to have a trial in the Supreme Court, and thereupon he granted the motion.

"The statement made by the learned Justice as to the manner in which Mr. Grout came to be President of the bank, is not in accordance with the facts and the records on file show such to be not the fact.

Objected to Scudder.

"Later, Mr. Grout's counsel made a motion to be permitted to inspect the Grand Jury minutes. This motion came on before Mr. Justice Scudder. In view of his statements with reference to Mr. Grout objection was made to his hearing the matter, but the learned Justice declined to send the matter to another Judge and insisted on hearing it himself. Papers were submitted showing that under the authorities there was no right to such an inspection as was asked by defendant, but Mr. Justice Scudder, however, granted this motion and permitted Mr. Grout to inspect and copy the entire proceedings before the Grand Jury.

"The conduct of Mr. Justice Benedict, in refusing to permit the District Attorney to reply after the learned Justice had publicly criticised him, is but an additional manifestation of the consideration which the District Attorney may expect to receive in the matters relating to Mr. Grout's cases."

Bar Association Acts.

The Brooklyn Bar Association has taken cognizance of District Attorney Cropsey's reference to "hand-picked Judges" in connection with the Grout case. Charles J. McDermott, the Chairman, has been empowered to appoint a committee to investigate and recommend action.

The Bar Association has acted because, as is set forth in a resolution adopted by it, the District Attorney is "a member and officer of this organization, and thus subject to discipline by it, and is also answerable in law for and deeds unfitting him for membership of the bar or occupancy of his high constitutional office," and also because "any Judge acting as such reputed accusations import is likewise answerable as to his fitness to discharge the high duties of his office."

PROSECUTOR SEES CONVICTS.

May Bear on Union Bank Case—Statement by W. J. Cummins.

OSSINING, Nov. 14.—Louis Goldstein, Assistant District Attorney of Kings County, visited Sing Sing today and examined several convicts. It is said his visit bore on the Union Bank case, in which David A. Sullivan figured. The men examined were John Conway, William J. Cummins, and Augustus N. Trice. Trice is the Brooklyn lawyer sentenced for robbing a client. Cummins was convicted for his connection with the Carnegie Trust Company.

Mr. Goldstein would give no information. Cummins gave out a statement, which he asked Mr. Goldstein to give to the press.

Cummins's statement was to the effect that he did not know anything about Sullivan or the Union Bank or the purchase of the automobile by Warden McCormick. He said he was assisting the Banking Department to straighten out affairs of the Carnegie Trust Company, now in liquidation, and that newspaper notoriety is killing his mother, who is 80 years old. He says he has no money and that his family is living by the charity of friends.

Cummins declared that it was he who asked Warden Clancy to be allowed to pick apples on a farm two miles from the prison. He said the apples were given to convicts in the prison on their return. He said that none of the prisoners with him stayed out over night. On these trips, Cummins said, they were always in the charge of a keeper.

TWO CONVICTED OF MURDER

First Degree Verdicts Against Young Slayers of C. A. Ely.

Special to The New York Times.

FREEHOLD, N. J., Nov. 14.—Guilty of murder in the first degree was the verdict returned by a jury before Justice Samuel Kalisch this afternoon against George Green, 24 years old, and Richard Sparks, 17, both negroes, who killed Charles A. Ely here on Sept. 9. Justice Kalisch said he would impose sentence within ten days.

No defense was interposed at the trial, and the only real fight made by counsel for the defendants was to prevent confessions they had made from being admitted in evidence. Each defendant on the stand denied that he had been warned that what he said would be used against him.

Ely was a fish dealer in Freehold. He was at work in his barn, in Wayne Avenue, when Green entered, with a heavy iron bar in his hip pocket, leaving Sparks at the door with an axe. At Sparks's signal Green struck Ely, crushing his skull. The negroes then took all Ely's money from his pockets. Sparks was arrested at his home here that night and Green was caught in Amityville, L. I., three days later.

TRUCE IN MEXICO UNTIL NOV. 20

HOPE TO AVERT CIVIL WAR

Liberals Also Plan to Send Commissions to Rival Leaders to Plead for Peace.

CONTEST FOR VERA CRUZ

Villa Party Shows Great Concern Lest Port Fall to Carranza Forces.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 14.—On arriving here this morning, Gen. Pablo Gonzalez, the leader of the Carranza Generals, said:

"Supreme efforts are being made for a pacific solution of the differences, with the single aim of maintaining unimpaired the guarantees of a prompt realization during the pre-Constitutional period of the chief promises of the revolution upheld by the Constitutional army. To this end I yesterday arranged an armistice with Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez. Today I am going to confer with the First Chief of the Constitutional army.

"The armistice will be effective because it is shielded by the best guarantees, viz., the word of Gen. Gutierrez, a revolutionist without a reproach and an honorable soldier, incapable of breaking his promise."

The attitude of Gen. Obregon is shown by a telegram sent by him to Gen. Gutierrez urging him to obtain Villa's effective retirement. If this condition is fulfilled, says Obregon and "Señor Carranza should refuse to turn over the power, all of us would place ourselves at your orders, or at the orders of any one else elected."

The Liberal Party, whose chief is Fernando Iglesias Calderon, is also making an effort to prevent further bloodshed, sending one commission to confer with Carranza and another with Eulalio Gutierrez. The first commission, headed by Francisco Escudero, will go to Aguascalientes to talk with Gutierrez, and the other, headed by Iglesias Calderon, to Cordoba, where Carranza is.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 14.—Gen. Lucio Blanco, one of the Commissioners named by the Aguascalientes peace convention to confer with Gen. Carranza, said last night that Gens. Carranza and Villa had agreed upon a suspension of hostilities until Nov. 20, when the Aguascalientes convention will reconvene and either ratify or nullify the election of Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez as Provisional President.

The War Department and the four generals representing the Aguascalientes Convention express the belief that there is still hope for a peaceful settlement of the difficulties.

EL PASO, Texas, Nov. 14.—Messages today from both the Carranza and Villa officials told of still another attempt to adjust the factional difficulty of the Constitutionalist army before resorting to arms. Gen. Eulalio Gutierrez, named Provisional President by the Aguascalientes Convention, and Gen. Pablo Gonzales, Carranza's principal leader, held a conference yesterday, after which Gonzales left for Cordoba to interview the First Chief. The convention has adjourned for ten days. Gonzales promised to procure Carranza's final answer within two days.

A semi-official report dated yesterday from Aguascalientes explained the situation as follows:

"President Gutierrez returned today after holding a conference with Pablo Gonzales, who promised to interview Carranza so that he would recognize the convention and give up his office. Gonzales told Gutierrez that he would send Carranza's answer within two days, and that if Carranza would answer favorably to the convention he would call all Generals of his command and give instructions to them to recognize Gutierrez. Gutierrez gave this information personally to the convention at 8:30 tonight.

"The convention agreed to suspend its sessions and to meet again in ten days, after the occupation of Mexico City by President Gutierrez, on which date the nomination of the Provisional President will be ratified. In the meantime a permanent commission composed of twenty-one members of the convention will officiate. They will accompany the President wherever he goes."

VERA CRUZ TO ANY FACTION.

Port Will Be Left to Those Who Can Hold It.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—From all the information obtainable today at the State Department and elsewhere it is apparent that the United States Government has not made any arrangement for turning over the control of Vera Cruz to any recognized authority in Mexico when the American armed forces are withdrawn from that port on Nov. 2. Present indications are that when the troops of Gen. Funston's command leave Vera Cruz the town will be at the disposal of the faction of the Mexican combatants which is able to occupy it with its soldiers.

Orders were cabled by the War Department today to Brig. Gen. Funston at Vera Cruz to send the transport San Marcos to Galveston immediately with the priests and nuns who had taken refuge there after the American occupation and for whose safety General Carranza had declined to furnish guarantees. At last accounts there were eleven priests and forty-nine nuns in Vera Cruz. Whether some of these had already left for the United States the Government here does not know. In the fear that they would be left in Vera Cruz at the mercy of one or the other Mexican factions, most of the priests have endeavored to disguise themselves, while the nuns are reported to have discarded their religious dress and sought employment.

It was estimated today that the cost to the United States of the American occupation of Vera Cruz would not be far from $5,000,000. This estimate takes into account the pay and subsistance of soldiers, their transportation, the cost of chartered transports, and other items of expense. The chartered transports originally engaged to carry Gen. Funston's brigade to Vera Cruz are still costing the Government about $7,000 a day and their total cost will foot up something about $1,300,000.

The care, subsistance, and transportation of the Mexican soldiers and their families who fled over the border and were interned by the United States has cost the Government more than $719,000 and in addition the Government owes railroads about $90,000 for transportation. These Mexican refugees have now been returned to their own country, but the United States expects to have another expensive experience of the same character soon.

Reports received by the Government indicate that Gen. Benjamin Hill, who commands a force of about 5,000 loyal Carranzistas at Celaya, will probably flee over the border into the United States. It was determined at a conference today between officials of the State and War Departments that these soldiers should not be turned back into Mexico, as some of those concerned were inclined to advocate, but should be disarmed when they reached American territory and transported to San Diego, Cal., where they will be interned and cared for by the United States Government until conditions are favorable for their return to Mexico.

Secretary Daniels said today that no decision has been reached with reference to the disposition of the warships now in Mexican waters. Most of the vessels of the fleet have already been withdrawn and it is probable that the larger of the few ships now in Mexican waters will be replaced by small gunboats.

The Minister of the Netherlands called today at the State Department and had a long conversation with Secretary Bryan on the subject of protection of the Dutch in Mexico. There are now no Dutch warships in Mexican waters and concern is felt not only for the Hollanders at Vera Cruz, but for about sixty Dutch mining engineers near Tampico, which Gen. Villa has threatened to attack.

R. Zubaran Campany, the head of the Constitutionalist Agency in Washington, expressed satisfaction this evening over the decision of President Wilson to withdraw the United States forces from Vera Cruz.

SQUABBLE OVER VERA CRUZ.

Carranza Resents Gutierrez's Interest in the Evacuation.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 14.—News of the evacuation of Vera Cruz on Nov. 23 was received here with great satisfaction. El Pueblo publishes an extra, giving the text of the note of the Brazilian Minister to Minister Favela, transcribing Secretary Bryan's cable.

Foreign Minister Favela wires from Cordoba that Gen. Gutierrez has been telling several generals, loyal to Carranza, that the Americans will not evacuate Vera Cruz until he, Gutierrez, arrives at the Capital, and Favela adds:

"This is completely false and is a sample of the policy of Northern traitors, like that of Huerta, when he declared that the Americans were advancing from Vera Cruz on Mexico, thus deceiving the entire republic. Señor Favela asks that the widest publicity be given to the Brazilian minister's note embodying Secretary Bryan's cable fixing Nov. 23 for evacuation.

Ricardo Garcia Granados, a brother of Alberto Garcia Granados, Minister of the Interior, under de la Barra and for a time under Huerta, was arrested today.

Various members of the Diplomatic Corps called on Acting War Minister Pesqueira, asking that guards be furnished for the legations. Señor Pesqueira replied that he saw absolutely no reason for such a measure, but in the event of circumstances requiring it, he would be the first to take action in that direction.

Señor Pesqueira showed THE TIMES correspondent the text of the telegram from Gen. Carranza, saying:

"Contradict report of my intention to order abandonment of the capital by our forces. I am concentrating forces from the isthmus and the State of Vera Cruz for the protection of the capital and the reinforcement of its garrison."

The War Minister was asked whether he believed the report of the shooting of Carranza delegates by Villa at Aguascalientes. He said he did not credit it, but did believe such delegates had been subjected to molestation.

VERA CRUZ, Nov. 14.—Vehement protests have been prepared by Gen. Villa's agents to send to their chief against the withdrawal of the American troops. They allege they cannot sanction evacuation, since that means turning over the port to a man who they have declared a rebel.

The first brush between supporters of Villa and those of Carranza has occurred to the west of Tampico, but is said to have been of small consequence.

Officers of various organizations called today at United States Army Headquarters and congratulated Gen. Funston on his promotion to the rank of Major General.

ASKS SHIP FOR TAMPICO.

Consul Fears for Foreigners—Many Will Flee from Vera Cruz.

VERA CRUZ, Nov. 14.—Alarm on the part of foreign Consuls in Tampico regarding the safety of 2,500 foreigners in that city in the event of an attack by Villa's forces induced the American Consul today to request the sending of an army transport to that city. If it becomes necessary to offer refuge to foreigners it seems unlikely that all could be cared for on the merchant ships available. No transport was sent from here, and, in view of the evacuation order, it probably will be impossible to spare any of the army's vessels.

Receipt of news of the administration's determination to withdraw the troops from Vera Cruz on Nov. 23 aroused lively interest here, but some of the homesick army men were frank in expressions of agreeable surprise, since they had become convinced that recent developmnts in Mexico had rendered evacution uncertain.

The city is again filled to the capacity of its hotels with refugees who fear for their lives as a result of the struggle apparently impending between Gens. Carranza and Villa, and many residents of Vera Cruz, not trusting in the promises of guarantees of either Carranza or Villa or of the recent convention are preparing to abandon their homes when the American troops sail.

It is expected that the first step toward evacuation will be taken early next week with the sailing of the Government transport San Marcos with mules belonging to the marine corps, including battery mules. The animals are now on board the transport.

ASK US TO HELP KEEP REPUBLICS NEUTRAL

Britain and France Want Us to Use Our Good Offices with Ecuador and Colombia.

A SECRET WIRELESS SEARCH

American Diplomats in South America Will Investigate and Report —Monroe Doctrine Extended.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Relaxing somewhat his reticence of the last few days regarding French and British representations as to supposed violations of neutrality by certain Latin-American republics, Secretary of State Bryan today explained those representations in a way to show them more important and significant than had been at first understood. Not only did the British and French Ambassadors inform the United States of vigorous communications addressed by their Governments to the Latin-American Governments accused of permitting violations of neutrality within their jurisdictions, but the Ambassadors in a rather formal way asked the "good offices" or "influence"—both expressions were used by Mr. Bryan—of the United States in preventing a repetition of the acts about which complaint was made.

This request from the two European powers implied at least a facit recognition of the widest application of the Monroe Doctrine yet made in any official quarter. As these dispatches pointed out last night, the mere notification of the American Government of steps taken directly in communication with the Governments of Ecuador and Colombia would have intimated nothing less than a profound respect for the dominant position of the United States in the Western Hemisphere.

Recognition of the Monroe Doctrine even to that limited extent would perhaps have carried with it implications highly gratifying to the American Government. And Mr. Bryan's manner in receiving the still wider recognition of the doctrine implied in the request of the British and French Ambassadors seems to suggest that he is pleased too at the more far-reaching recognition that the request undoubtedly implies. Mr. Bryan's remarks this afternoon intimated too that he was far from shrinking from the great responsibilities necessarily involved in the wider application tacitly given to the Monroe Doctrine by the request of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice and Mr. Jusserand.

Mr. Bryan already had taken up the question laid before him by directing American diplomatic and perhaps the American Consular officers in the countries mentioned by the British and French Ambassadors to investigate the charges of violated neutrality. How far he was prepared to go should the investigation of American representatives tend to substantiate the charges made by Great Britain and France, Mr. Bryan did not disclose today.

Fear Latin-American Resentment.

There is some concern, however, lest the investigation directed by Mr. Bryan might not be received by the Latin-American countries concerned in the kindly spirit in which Mr. Bryan would have his efforts interpreted. His inquiries in Colombia will be made following a formal denial of the British and French charges made to him personally by the Secretary of the Colombian Legation. And these inquiries will not be confined to a formal inquiry addressed through the American Ministers to the Governments to which they are accredited. That formal inquiry will be made, but the American representatives will be expected, as Mr. Bryan explained this afternoon, to supplement the official reply they receive by such other information as they may be able to collect at first hand.

This inquiry will be a wide extension of the efforts this Government already has under way to discover and suppress secret wireless stations supposed to be operating for the benefit of belligerents in the States of Maine and Washington and elsewhere. For instance, there was a report that such a station was operating in California. Upon inquiry it turned out that it really was located at Ensenada, Lower California, in Mexican territory. The United States refused to interfere in that instance, but the Mexican authorities who were aware of the American investigation not long ago ordered the station suppressed.

Similar investigations extended to the remote mountains of Ecuador and Colombia and the many islands that skirt the coast of both countries prom se serious obstacles. The charge brought by the two European Governments was that Colombia and Ecuador had not prevented the sending of wireless messages of military value to the German squadron that recently defeated a British squadron off Valparaiso, and that the Galapagos Islands, under Ecuadorean sovereignty, had even been used as a coaling station. As Mr. Bryan expressed it this morning in a brief typewritten statement, the British and French Ambassadors asked the American Government "to use its influence to insure the strict enforcement of neutrality as announced by those Governments."

Panama and Zone as One.

In carrying out the principles of American neutrality of the Panama Canal Zone the State Department has entered into a protocol, signed on Oct. 10 by Acting Secretary of State Lansing and Señor Morales, the Panaman Minister, that will probably strike off one more point from the list of convenient coaling stations in American waters. It was understood that German cruisers, that are entitled to coal only once in three months within the territorial waters of any one power, had been coaling first at Cristobal, the Pacific terminus of the canal under American jurisdiction, and then, say, six weeks later, coals at Panama, which, of course, is under the jurisdiction of the Republic of Panama, though the waters of the two harbors are practically identical.

Under the protocol the waters of the canal and those of the Republic of Panama will be construed as a unit for purposes of governing the obligations of neutrality, so that a belligerent warship, having coaled at some port in the Zone, will not be allowed to coal in a port of Panama until three months have elapsed or until entitled to another coaling in the Zone itself.

The Chilean Government, as a measure of neutrality, yesterday notified the cable companies that messages in code or secret language to or from points in Chile had been prohibited. No message, the cable companies were informed, could refer to the movements or operations of belligerent warships. Messages will be accepted only when written in plain English, Spanish, German, French, Italian, or Portuguese. Communications between Governments and their representatives are excepted.

BATTLES WITH HIS CAPTORS

Prisoner Severely Burns Pursuer, but Policeman Overpowers Him —Had Fancied Grievance.

Patrick Heffernan, platform man at the B. R. T. loop at Essex and Delancey Streets, was burned badly yesterday, and Miss Addie Niffen, ticket seller there, narrowly escaped serious injury from acid thrown by William Clark, 31 years old, of 29 Fulton Street, Brooklyn.

Clark, whose real name is said to be William T. Dobbins, appeared at Miss Niffen's home at 1,308 Twelfth Avenue, Brooklyn, about three years ago with her nephew. He boarded at the house for some time, but neighbors complained that he annoyed them. Thereupon Miss Niffen told him he would have to go somewhere else to live.

Clark went West, and apparently worked as a deckhand on the lakes under his own name. On returning to Brooklyn he lived quietly until about a month ago, when his mother and he began to nurse a grievance against Miss Niffen for telling him to leave her house. Yesterday he appeared at the ticket window where she was on duty, drew a bottle of muriatic acid from his pocket, and hurled part of its contents at her face.

Miss Niffen darted back just in time to escape the fluid, but a drop or two fell on her hand and she screamed. Heffernan ran up and attacked Clark, who fled up the steps toward the street. Not realizing his danger, Heffernan followed close behind him, and Traffic Policeman Hennessey, who had heard the disturbance, blocked the entrance to the station. Seeing his escape cut off, Clark turned and hurled the rest of the acid into Heffernan's face.

Heffernan was put out of action, but Hennessey overpowered Clark, who was locked up in the Delancey Street station on a charge of felonious assault. Heffernan was treated by Dr. Mills of Gouverneur Hospital and taken to his home at 253 Stanhope Street, Brooklyn. His face was burned severely and he may lose his left eye.

FIRE FOLLOWS WRECK.

Sweeper on Long Island Jumps Track and Ties Up Line.

When a track sweeper jumped the Long Island Railroad track near Paterson Avenue in the old village of Queens yesterday it started a wreck that developed into a fire, causing about $8,300 loss, tying up traffic on that part of the line for two hours, and endangering the life of John Woods of Jamaica, conductor on the train to which the sweeper was attached. The sweeper and three trolley cars, which had been in the railroad repair shops, were being hauled to Huntington, where they were to be used by the Huntington Trolley Company, a subsidiary of the Long Island. The sweeper was immediately behind the engine tender, and the trolley cars behind it.

The sweeper jumped the track just opposite Paterson Avenue. As it did so it tore the guard off the third rail and then settled down upon the charged rail, catching fire almost at once. John Heuther, the engineer, shut off power and applied the emergency brakes, and the trolley cars stayed on the tracks. But the noise of their bumping into each other for the moment drowned the cries of Conductor Woods, who had tried to jump off the sweeper as it fell over, but had caught his foot in some cordage and was unable to extricate himself. The flames that were now eating up the sweeper were so near him that his clothing had begun to smoke before other train hands heard his cries and managed to drag him out in time. Woods had two ribs broken and was badly bruised all over his body. The fire spread from the sweeper to the trolley cars, and in spite of the efforts of the Queens Volunteer Fire Department, summoned by telephone, two of them were completely destroyed.

Even after the third car had been towed away to safety and the woodwork of the other two had been burned up, the work of cleaning up the wreckage was very dangerous, for the metal was charged with electricity. The power was finally shut off over a considerable section and the debris removed.

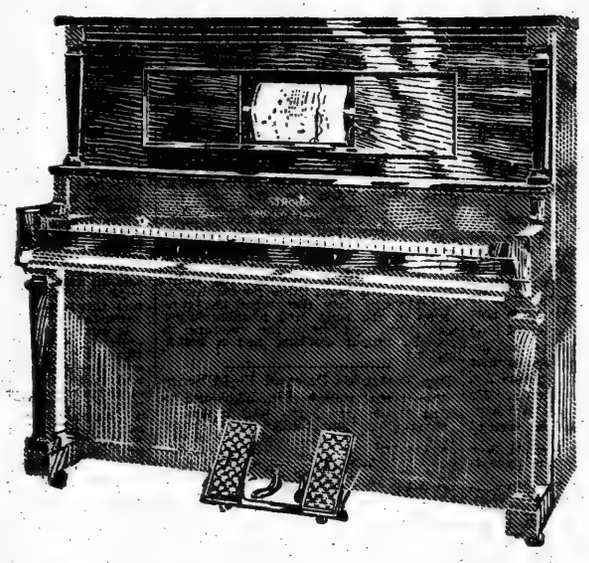
Paderewski says:
"The Pianola is still the best, unsurpassable, supreme."

M. Moszkowski, the Eminent Composer and Pianist, says:
"I had the opportunity of playing for the first time an Upright Stroud Piano from New York and I acknowledge that I had quite a pleasant surprise. This piano charms by a very equal touch, a great and fine quality of tone, an elegant design, in a word, by all the desirable qualities, amongst which one must still especially mention an extremely moderate price.



Josef Hofmann says:
"I unhesitatingly pronounce the Pianola the best of all piano-playing devices."

Moriz Rosenthal, Concert Pianist of World's Fame, says:
"The Stroud Upright Piano I have tried in your warerooms has a clear, sound tone, a quick and correct action and I feel astonished that you can sell such a good instrument at such a comparatively low price."

The Greatest Piano Value in the World

The Stroud is a piano so fine in tone, so true in scale, so responsive in action, so beautiful in architecture, and so durable withal, that musicians of world renown enthusiastically and publicly endorse it.

When musicians of the calibre of Moriz Rosenthal, Maurice Moszkowski, Cecile Chaminade, and Arthur Nikisch set the stamp of their approval on a pianoforte, its status as a truly exceptional instrument is permanently established.

The Stroud Pianola is splendid value as a piano, but this instrument is much more than a piano. The wonderful roll-playing action it contains, and which allows everyone to play it, is the genuine Pianola action, pre-eminently the best thing of its kind in the markets of the world. Practically every great musician alive today has given unqualified support to this statement.

The STROUD Pianola

Costs only $550

This price is what establishes its value as the greatest that can be obtained.

Compared with any player-piano of other make, it will hold its own in pianoforte quality, against much higher-priced instruments.

Whereas, in player quality—in the advantages it offers for roll-playing—there is no instrument on the market to-day, irrespective of name and price, that can approach it in simplicity, efficiency and artistic capability.

If you are considering the purchase of any Upright Piano whatever, we cordially invite you to investigate the Stroud Pianola before you make a purchase.

HOLDS CHEMISTS AFTER EXPLOSION

Coroner Puts Owner and Manager of Wrecked Plant Under Bail Pending an Inquest.

ANOTHER VICTIM IS DEAD

Survivors of Brooklyn Disaster Unable, Because of Their Injuries, to Tell How Accident Occurred.

After visiting the wrecked building yesterday afternoon, Coroner Frank S. Senior of Brooklyn announced that he would hold an inquest a week from tomorrow to fix the responsibility for the explosion on Friday in the chemical and dye works of Dr. William Beckers, at 107 to 113 Underhill Avenue, which caused the death of two men and injuries to twenty-five others. After his preliminary examination, the Coroner directed that Dr. Beckers and William Muller, the manager of the plant, should give bonds of $5,000 and $2,000, respectively, for their appearance at the inquest. The required security was furnished by the two men.

The second victim of the explosion to succumb to his injuries was Adolph Wolters, who died early yesterday morning in the Cumberland Street Hospital. Wolters, who was 30 years old, and who lived at 24 Sterling Place, was employed as an assistant chemist in the plant and was at work on the second floor of the laboratory when the explosion occurred. He died without having been able to make any statement as to the probable cause of the blast.

Fire Marshal Thomas F. Brophy is continuing his investigation, but has not learned what brought about the explosion. Mr. Brophy was unable yesterday to question Dr. Beckers, the head of the chemical concern, who was one of those injured. Dr. Beckers is at his home, 40 Eighth Avenue.

Sidney David, manager of one of the branches of the Beckers firm, expressed the belief yesterday that because of the death of Walter E. Haaren, the young chemist who was conducting experiments when the explosion occurred, the exact cause of the disaster would never be established. Mr. David was near Haaren in the laboratory when the explosion took place.

"I have not the slightest idea what caused the explosion," said Mr. David. "Haaren probably was the only man who could tell, and he is dead. That there was only one explosion I am positive. Persons who say that there were two or three probably took the noise of falling walls as explosions. I was certainly near enough to know, and I heard but one. At first there was a sound like the hiss of escaping steam, which was followed by a crash like a great thunder clap. I felt the floor sink under me, and I went down with it. Recovering from the shock, I managed to dig my way out of the wreckage and get outside through a window."

It is understood that at the inquest Coroner Senior will seek to learn whether the reported experiments to find a substitute for the aniline dyes made in Germany brought about the disaster.

BOY CANOEISTS NEAR DEATH

Three boys who bought an old canoe yesterday for $2.50 and went for a ride on the North River at the foot of 150th Street narrowly escaped drowning when their boat overturned. Sergt. Kennison of the West 152d Street Police Station, who was walking in Riverside Drive, witnessed the accident, and, obtaining a rowboat, went to their rescue, aided by Charles Wolfe of 121 East Eighteenth Street and William Ecks, who were out in a motor boat.

Of the boys, John Morrissy, 14, of 2,593 Eighth Avenue, and Harry Olsen, 13, son of the steward of the Federal Boat Club at 140th Street and the North River, could swim. They fought hard to save their companion, William Stevenson, 14, of 254 West 143d Street, but were forced to abandon him just as the motor boat came up.

The men in the boat pulled the Morrissy and Olsen boys aboard. Sergt. Kennison grabbed the Stevenson boy as he sank. The boys were revived by a physician.

GIRL GOT $3,500 IN LOOT

Servant Who Fled Held for Theft of Mrs. Lesser's Jewels.

A young woman who was well dressed and wore a jeweled bracelet and wrist watch was arrested yesterday afternoon in a tenement at 210 Avenue B, by Detective Tompson of the Fourth Branch Detective Bureau. When the detective ordered the matron at the 123d Street Police Station to search her the girl shook her head and turned over to him a bag containing $163, which she said was all she had with her. Then she was locked up in a cell.

Soon after that the girl was identified by Arthur Lesser, managing director of the Stearns Automobile Company, who lives at 801 West End Avenue, as a maid who was employed at his home from Oct. 7 to 9. On the latter day, he said, she disappeared, and it was discovered that jewelry belonging to Mrs. Lesser, worth $3,360, and $200 in cash were missing. Mrs. Lesser, he said, left a bag containing the jewelry and money on a table in her room while she went to the telephone. Detective Tompson traced the girl to her little room in the tenement by means of information he obtained from a downtown employment agency where Mrs. Lesser had found her. He also discovered her picture in the Rogues' Gallery, where she was listed as Helen Janowarska, alias Julia Walldman. In 1913, he said, she was sent to Auburn Prison for the theft of jewelry from a family in Yonkers. A short time before that she had been employed by J. Eisner of 240 Fulton Street, Mount Vernon. She left that place after five weeks, and the same day jewelry worth $1,000 was missed. Part of this jewelry was recovered in a pawnshop, and two men were arrested for receiving stolen property, but were released, as it was impossible at the time to find the girl. Detective Tompson said that a number of robberies of the kind had been reported lately, and a thorough investigation will be made. The girl refused to make a statement.

NEW INCOME TAX RULING.

Returns Must Include Dividends Declared but Not Paid When Report Is Made.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Treasury Department has decided that hereafter income tax returns must include dividends declared but not paid up to the end of the period covered in the report, so that all payments decided upon from now to the end of 1914, but not paid until Jan. 1, 1915, will be included in the current year's income. Commissioner Osborn has made this ruling on the subject:

"Dividends from the net earnings or established surplus created from the net earnings of any corporation, joint stock company, or association and insurance companies are vested in the stockholder on the date on which such dividends are declared, whether distributed or not, and regardless of the time when the surplus or undivided profits from which such dividends are declared were earned and entered on the books of the corporation as such. Dividends so declared should be accounted for in full in the returns of income of individuals for the year in which they become due and payable, whenever the amount of income is sufficient to require the inclusion of dividends, as provided in the law, and should be so included in the gross income of corporations, &c., regardless of the amount of income. All decisions and regulations which are in conflict with this ruling are revoked."

MINTON FLUHRER MARRIES.

Wedded to Miss Elsa M. Arndt at Home of Bride's Parents.

The wedding of Minton Fluhrer, a son of Dr. William F. Fluhrer and Mrs. Fluhrer of 241 West Seventy-first Street, and Miss Elsa M. Arndt, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Arndt, took place at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the home of the bride's parents, 410 Riverside Drive, the Rev. Frank Oliver Hall performing the ceremony, which was witnessed by the immediate relatives only, but was followed by a large reception.

The bride wore white charmeuse and point lace, with a tulle veil, and carried lilies of the valley and orchids. Her matron of honor was Mrs. William F. Mathues, who wore blue charmeuse and silver lace and carried pink roses. The little Misses Elizabeth and Louise Stoffregen, in white frocks and with baskets of roses, were the flower girls. Lewis Pullman Fluhrer was his brother's best man.

The apartment was decorated with palms and chrysanthemums. On their return from their honeymoon trip Mr. and Mrs. Fluhrer will live at 533 West 112th Street.

Grocer Dies After Assault.

Eaielse Tonielle, 62 years old, who ran a grocery store at 157 East 110th Street, died last evening at the Harlem Hospital from wounds he received when he was assaulted in his store last Sunday night and robbed of $120. He was found early the following morning, his throat gashed and weak from loss of blood. Santo Elfonso of 317 East Forty-eighth Street was arrested on the charge of homicide and was locked up in the East 126th Street police station pending a hearing. Detectives found $51 in his rooms.

FOREST FIRE NEAR POWDER FACTORY

MANY TOWNS ARE IN PERIL

Barns Are Destroyed and Homes Menaced by Spread of Flames Started by Hunters.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., Nov. 14.—Forest fires continued to rage in many parts of New Jersey today. The most serious blaze is near the plant of the du Pont powder works at Wayne, N. J. One hundred men are fighting while volunteer fire departments in near-by towns stand ready in case the fire gets beyond control and threatens the powder works.

In Little Falls, Singac, Athenia, Midland Park, Oakland, Pompton, and other places fires have been extinguished. At Pompton Lakes a fire burned over several miles and threatened many bungalows and Summer homes of prominent persons.

A forest fire that extended fully two miles last night threatened the towns of Woodcliff Lake, Park Ridge, Montvale, Pearl River, and Hillsdale, and the firemen in these places were required to do patrol duty all night, to prevent the destruction of many homes. The fire burned the barns of Mrs. Anna Wilkins and A. G. Roland. The dwelling houses of Roland and Mrs. J. C. Doane caught fire, but were saved from destruction. During the excitement word came from Pearl River that fires had started in the buildings there from brush fires, and the company from that place had to leave the Montvale fire.

T. M. OSBORNE FOR WARDEN.

Is Considering Offer to Head Sing Sing Prison.

Special to The New York Times

ALBANY, Nov. 14.—The wardenship of Sing Sing Prison has been tendered to Thomas Mott Osborne and he has taken th ematter under consideration. Superintendent John B. Riley of the State Prison Department did not go to his home in Plattsburg last evening as has been his custom on Fridays, but remained in town until this afternoon in order to meet Mr. Osborne. In announcing the result of the interview, Superintendent Riley said:

"Mr. Osborne has given his time for the past year in an effort to carry into effect the reforms in prison discipline and management inaugurated by this department. He feels that he may render more effective public service by continuing the work in which he is now engaged than he can as Warden of Sing Sing. I feel confident that Mr. Osborne will accept, if he concludes that under the circumstances the promotion of prison reform will not suffer. He spoke of Mr. Macy, who has been suggested for the position, in the highest terms."

V. Everit Macy is a merchant in New York City, is very wealthy and lives in Westchester County.

George S. Week, Deputy Superintendent, who is acting as temporary Warden of Sing Sing, is anxious to be relieved of the wardenship, which is not to his liking, and Judge Riley is endeavoring to bring about a successful result of his inquiries for a suitable person as quickly as possible. Mr. Osborne and Mr. Macy are being urged by the State Prison Reform Association for the wardenship, hoping thereby to get the prison out of the influence of politics.

KING HONORS PROF. BROWN.

PASSENGER FARES RAISED.

Eastern Roads File New Tariffs to Take Effect Dec. 15.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Taking advantage of a suggestion made by the Interstate Commerce Commission several weeks ago, when the application for a general 5 per cent. increase in freight rates was denied, the railroads throughout the Eastern States are filing tariffs of increases of passenger rates to become effective Dec. 15. Announcement was made by the commission today that such tariffs had been filed by the Pennsylvania, the Baltimore and Ohio, the Philadelphia and Reading, and other carriers. Because of the volume in which the tariffs were filed, the officials of the commission will be unable to give definite figures on the proposed increases until Monday or Tuesday.

In an order issued by the commission, the application of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad to raise passenger rates, effective Dec. 1, has been approved, and there is reason to believe that the same action will be taken upon the application of the Pennsylvania and the Philadelphia & Reading.

Necessity of raising additional revenue is the explanation given by the railroads for the increase in the passenger rates. In rejecting the plea of the railroads for a 5 per cent. increase in freight rates the commission intimated that the passenger service of many of the railroads was being operated at a loss, and the suggestion was offered that "each branch of the railroad service should contribute its proper share to the cost of operation and of return upon the property devoted to the use of the public."

The application of the railroads for a general freight rate increase the commission now has under advisement as a result of the recent rehearing. The prevailing opinion in Washington is that the commission is divided over granting the higher freight rates.

Old Soldier's Body Rescued.

Grand Army of the Republic veterans yesterday gave a funeral with full military honors in the National Cemetery, East New York, to the body of Michael Tiernan, an old soldier, who died on Nov. 3 in the Kings County Hospital. Tiernan had no money, and the county gave the customary $50 for his burial to a Williamsburg undertaker, who put the body unclothed into a pine box and sent it to the receiving vault. When friends went there for the burial last Monday they discovered the condition of the body, and a subscription was taken up among the veterans to provide proper clothing and a better coffin.

Two Postcards Delayed Eight Years

Two postal picture cards addressed to Miss Maud Tyrer, 205 Eighth Street, Jersey City, and mailed at Rahway Nov. 3, 1906, were delivered last Wednesday to Mrs. Bert Donaghy of that address in Jersey City. She was formerly Miss Tyrer. She has not learned how the cards were delayed. Their crumpled appearance indicated that they had been mislaid.

The officers of the Society of the New York Alumni of Georgetown University were elected at the annual meeting of the society held Friday in the Waldorf-Astoria. J. Lynch Pendergast was re-elected President.

Kempton Taylor, 13 years old, of 1,989 Webster Avenue, the Bronx, was killed yesterday afternoon by a wagon that ran over him in Brook Avenue, the Bronx. The boy was on roller skates.

Five women were knocked down in front of the Church of Our Lady of Mount Carmel in Williamsburg yesterday morning by a runaway horse. None of them was seriously injured.

While his wife looked on without knowing what he was doing, Lawrence Galster, 37 years old, a mechanic, out of employment, committed suicide in his home at 207 Menahan Street, Williamsburg, yesterday by taking cyanide of potassium.

FIGHT OVER WOMAN FOR POORMASTER

SHE TRIUMPHED IN TEST

But Rival Says She Isn't Eligible and Threatens Court Action If She Is Appointed.

The Poormaster's job in Jersey City is a post which has caused serious contention. When the commission government was installed more than a year ago Edward Hewitt, who had filled the office for many years, succeeding his deceased father, was promptly dropped. George Murray, who had been Assistant Poormaster for a long time, was an active applicant, but Mayor Fagan favored Miss Anita Grisch of Hoboken, who had been identified with Probation Department work. A Civil Service examination limited to residents of Jersey City was held, but Miss Grisch would not become a resident of Jersey City and did not compete.

John Mulvaney a Jersey City lawyer, was the only candidate who survived this examination, but he had only two votes of the five City Commissioners and failed of appointment after several exciting sessions.

The Mayor, determined to obtain the services of Miss Grish, had the rule amended to open the Civil Service examinations to residents of Hudson County.

Miss Grish passed with the highest honors a month ago, but the appointment had not been made because of another hitch. Harry McNally, Assistant Truant Officer, also passed the second examination and is making a determined fight for the place.

He asserted yesterday that Miss Grish was not eligible and that if she was named he would contest it in the courts.

SULZER 'ELECTED WHITMAN'

"And We Made the Bull Moosers Ridiculous," Ex-Governor Says.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Nov. 14.—"We elected Whitman," says William Sulzer in a letter to Horace B. Warner, a Progressive Assemblyman of this city. The letter follows in part:

The verdict of the people reverses the verdict of the "Murphy Court of Infamy"—and it means that Murphy must go. Glynn plotted with Murphy to steal my office, but the voters refused to confirm the theft. It will be a long time before Tammany removes another Governor because he would not be a party to the looting of the State.

We made an honest and a dignified and an independent fight for principle—the principle of honest government—and the result when analyzed vindicates the principle.

It was impossible for us to win with every boss—big or little—in the State fighting me; with every grafter—big or little—in New York denouncing us; and with every agency of the invisible Government of the Commonwealth arrayed against us. Besides, you know we lacked the money and newspaper support, and the organization to wage a successful campaign. Then, again, in the last days of the campaign, many of our friends went over to Mr. Whitman, and voted for him, for fear that the Murphy-Glynn-McCabe yellow dog ticket might win. This accounts for the slump in our vote in certain places where we had every reason to expect better results.

However, I have no regrets. I am glad I made the fight, and we can console ourselves with the reflection that we elected Whitman, beat Murphy's crooked ticket, made the Bull Moosers ridiculous, and drove from public life the conspirators who stole the Governorship.

The principle for which we fought has been accentuated. We have won a moral victory. Our struggle has done much to purify the political atmosphere of the State. We have been useful to the citizens, and although we could not win, yet we were able to defeat all along the line the enemies of good government.

Our fight for reform and better things will go on. It has just begun. I am going to the end of the road in the struggle I began for honest government and decent politics.

ROAD CONGRESS ENDS.

Meeting Said to Have Been Most Successful Ever Held.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 14.—The fourth American road congress closed this morning with a business meeting, at which reports of the Secretary and the Treasurer were read, final resolutions presented, invitations for the 1915 congress received, and general questions briefly discussed. The congress just ended is said to have been the most successful ever held.

The delegates are beginning to leave the city, and the removal of exhibits from the auditorium commenced today. Officers of the congress are not elected by the congress itself, but by an Executive Committee. This committee is elected by the officers of the American Highway Association, acting jointly with the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee also chooses the next meeting place. It may be several months before the new officers and the city in which the next congress will be held are announced.

WORKING TO STOP ROBBERY OF INDIANS

Indian Commissioner Defends Steps Taken Against Land Thieves in Oklahoma.

FURTHER EFFORT PLANNED

Miss Barnard's Charges Admitted to be True and Support Urged of Her Efforts for the Indians.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Cato Sells, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, said today that the charges made by Miss Kate Barnard, State Commissioner of Charities of Oklahoma, that Indians, and particularly Indian children, in that State had been robbed of lands worth millions of dollars, were in the main true. Mr. Sells declined, however, to discuss Miss Barnard's story of the wholesale wrongs perpetrated on Indian children in Oklahoma and her criticism of the Indian Office. All that could be said by the Indian Office, Mr. Sells added, was that the co-operation of all good people ought to be assured in such a righteous struggle to protect the weak and helpless.

Miss Barnard's charges were contained in an article in The Survey, and a summary of it printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES today attracted attention here among those interested in Indian affairs. Among other things Miss Barnard declared that $200,000,000 was a low estimate of the money prize at stake in the fight she is waging to prevent the Oklahoma Indians from being robbed of their possessions. She charged that the Oklahoma delegation in Congress and the Indian Bureau in Washington brought about the consolidation of the Union Indian Agency at Muskogee, Okla., with the Commission of the Five Civilized Tribes, and that the offices so consolidated were removed from the protection of the civil service regulations and made political. After that, according to Miss Barnard, appropriations to help the Indians supervise their estates were reduced, "while $85,000 of the State's money was appropriated for purely political probate attorneys."

The policy mainly criticised by Miss Barnard is that of the Indian Office in sending special attorneys to Oklahoma to take charge of the probate business involving Indian children. These attorneys not only look after the adjusting of estates as the cases arise, but are instructed also to dig up all the wrongdoing they can in cases already disposed of and institute criminal prosecutions where necessary to bring defaulting and thieving administrators and executors to justice. This, it will be said in the report, is being done as rapidly and as extensively as the circumstances will permit.

Today one of the special attorneys telegraphed to the Indian Office that he had just obtained a judgment of $73,000 against a defaulting administrator, who had moved to Phoenix, Ariz., after robbing a number of Indian children in Oklahoma. Similar dispatches are being received almost every day. The work, it was said, is tedious and will require years to complete. But the Indian Office, according to statements made there today, has insisted on employing attorneys of high standing, and the most scientific and rigid rules are enforced as to the conduct of their work.

Indian Office to Act.

While there was a disposition at the Indian Office not to make any response to Miss Barnard's direct charges on the ground that the matters of which she had complained had been inherited by the present administration of that office, it was freely admitted that a systematic robbing of Indians in Oklahoma had been going on for a long time, and that the Indian Office was at work trying to get at the bottom of the criminality. Convictions of scores of crooked administrators have been obtained, and hundreds of thousands of dollars in money recovered and restored to the Indian children to whom it belonged.

Soon after Congress meets in December the situation will be brought to its attention by Commissioner Sells in a special report. It was explained today that this report would be a matter of official routine, and not made necessary by reason of criticism of the course pursued by the Indian Office.

The system embraces twenty-five attorneys in all. Four of these are the tribal attorneys authorized by Congress and twenty-one are special probate attorneys. These attorneys are selected, it was said, on precisely the same lines of selection as prevail in the Department of Justice. The greater part of them are Democrats, but some are Republicans, but it was explained that the first requisite was that they should be competent and honest lawyers.

The criticism that they are not under civil service rules was answered by the statement that no such attorneys in the Government service are so protected in any department. They are selected, it was added, just as a court would choose a special attorney for any particular service.

Commissioner Sells said today that he had put all the conscientious energy of which he was capable in the selections and he thought the men chosen were making good. As in all similar lines of work there were possibly one or two men who might need to be displaced by selections that measured up more closely to the standard set for the work.

One rule that the Commissioner said he had enforced was that these attorneys should keep out of politics. One attorney wanted to run for the bench and the Commissioner refused to let him do so unless he resigned.

In the matter of the tribal attorneys, the Commissioner has laid down new rules, which are placed in the contracts with these lawyers. They are hereafter to be required to give their whole time to the litigation connected with the Indians and cannot take any outside business. They, also, must keep out of politics, and they are forbidden to spend their time in Washington, as has heretofore been the practice, interesting themselves in Indian legislation. The contract requires them to assist in the probate work for which the special attorneys are employed.

Robberies Not Disputed.

The broad facts of the situation in Oklahoma are that, as has always been the case in newly settled country where the Indians have been in possession of the soil, the settlers have been disposed to rob the Indian if the chance occurred. There are possibly 100,000 Indian children who have suffered at the hands of the general practice of robbing them by means of the machinery of corrupt and unscrupulous lawyers and courts. Bogus bills for services, padded claims for legal services, fraudulent bondsmen and many similar agencies for robbery have been systematically employed. All this was made possible when in 1908 the administration of the estates of the Indians was turned over to the State Courts of Oklahoma from the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. The present administration of the Indian Office inherited the situation. Other Commissioners had tried to deal with it. In fact, the plan for probate attorneys was agreed on before President Wilson was inaugurated. Even some of those who are now criticising the present Indian Commissioner, it was asserted, were then behind the plan which they now regard as so bad.

Commissioner Sells went to Oklahoma last January to see what could be done to organize the plan and get it running. "I was afraid," he said, in speaking of the matter, "that I should find public sentiment all against me. It required sagacity, and I hardly knew how to go about my task. I finally hit upon the fact that I ought to have thought of the first thing, and that was that I was trying to help little children. That ought to appeal to any man. Even burglars and cutthroats will respect the innocence of children. I went to Oklahoma with an appeal for poor, untaught, and helpless children and the idea took."

Hope for Remedial Legislation.

As a matter of fact the Commissioner found that there was a large body of public-spirited men and women in the State in favor of doing just what he wanted to do. Being a lawyer he first decided to make use of an Oklahoma statute, which gives the Supreme Court of the State power to make rules for the settlement of estates. But to get such rules which, as he had drawn them, were strict and firm against what was going on, he knew he must have the support of the best men of the State.

He met the tribal attorneys and county attorneys and county Judges of the Cherokee, Creek, and Seminole nations at Muskogee and discussed the whole matter with them. They approved what he asked should be done. Then he met the County Judges of the Choctaw nations at McAlester and they also agreed. A similar meeting was held with the county attorneys and Judges of the Chickashaw nation at Ardmore with a like result. These various meetings adopted resolutions approving the plan and also asked the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, the Government at Washington, and Congress to amend the original law as to the settlement of Indian estates in the State so that the county courts should have full power to revise and control the proceeds of the sale of estate lands to the end that they might be conserved for the good of the heirs of Indians. Commissioner Sells said today that he hoped that Congress would enact this legislation next session.

After receiving the hearty support of the county Judges among the Indians and that of the leading Indians themselves, Commissioner Sells discussed the matter fully with the Governor of the State, with the Judges of the various State courts, and with the Supreme Court Justices, with whom the power resided of putting into effect the probate rules he desired to have adopted. They all came to his support, and on July 15 last the new rules were formally promulgated and went into effect. It was said at the Indian Office today that none of those who criticise the Indian Office now have anything to offer against these rules, and that no discussion of the question can proceed intelligently without a knowledge of them.

Commissioner Sells is now urging the Legislature of Oklahoma to embody these rules in a statute to insure their permanence and greater force. They must be relied on to surround over 100,000 children with protection from fraud and robbery and they concern an immense amount of aggregate value, estimated by some to be perhaps $30,000,000. These Indian estates are in forty counties. The Government probate attorneys are allotted to several counties in which the courts meet from time to time, so that one attorney can attend to the probate business successively of three or four counties.

The Present Safeguards.

Under the probate rules all guardians are required to make annual or semi-annual reports under oath, showing fully and completely the description, character, kind, and value of all property held for wards. Every item of receipt or disbursement must be shown in detail. All securities and assets must be listed and all vouchers filed. No receipts from a ward upon the final accounting will be accepted by the court unless the ward is brought into open court, and the hearing on final settlement must be taken by a stenographer and a copy of the notes filed. The same rules prevail in the matter of sales of land. The ward is required to come into court and say whether there is a necessity for selling the land.

The fees for guardians are fixed so that they shall in no case exceed $300, and are restricted to a low, graduated percentage. All sales of gas or oil properties are approved only after sale in open court to the highest bidder, and petitions for such sales must be duly filed at least five days before the sale takes place. Deeds conveying inherited lands can be approved only after long notice and on petition of the grantors carefully verified in open court. All expenditures by guardians for wards must be upon the authorization of the court. The county courts are authorized to withhold approval of sales of lands unless the grantor shall agree to deposit the proceeds derived from the sale, to be expended subject to the approval of the court.

The probate attorneys every thirty days are required by the Indian Office to report where they were each day, what cases they were at work upon, what they have accomplished, and in general to give a minute account of their trusteeship.

Inasmuch as there are from 800 to 1,500 Indian probate cases in each county on an average, and in Muskogee there are 6,000, it is evident that none of these twenty-one attorneys will very soon get out of work.

Arrest Postal Clerk for Theft.

Harry Lichtenstein, 24 years old, of 65 East 26th Street, Elmhurst, L. I., a postal clerk in the Grand Central Station, was arrested last night and locked up in the Greenwich Street Station charged with stealing a special delivery letter containing money, sent as a decoy.

BEAT LEGLESS WIFE IN AUTO; NOW IN CELL

SPURNS PLEA FOR MERCY

Goes Jauntily from Station in Arms of a New Chauffeur to Her Waiting Car.

A woman screaming brought a crowd running to an automobile which had stopped last night at Fifty-fourth Street and Seventh Avenue, among them Policeman Fitzpatrick of the West Forty-seventh Street Station. They saw a woman hanging to a man who seemed anxious to break away. To the policeman she cried hysterically that the man was her husband and that he had been beating her.

Fitzpatrick had the man drive to the station, where he found that the woman could not walk. She said she had lost both legs in a trolley accident here last year, and though she wore artificial limbs was helpless.

In the station where Fitzpatrick carried her she said she was Mrs. Bert Green and lived at 8 West Ninety-eighth Street. She came here from Little Falls, N. Y., in September of last year, she said, and presently met with the accident which sent her to the Polyclinic Hospital. There Green called on her almost daily and sent her flowers and candy.

She settled her case with the surface car company for several thousand dollars, and Green, she said, proposed to her. They were married in the hospital.

Because she could not walk, Mrs. Green said, she bought herself the automobile, and her husband, who is a jewelry salesman, operated it for her. For a time, she said, they were happy, but then Green became cruel and abusive to her.

"It was too much when he actually struck me tonight in my own car," she told the Lieutenant, and Green accordingly went to a cell, charged with assaulting his wife. Mrs. Green was still telling her story to the police when he sent out a note, saying:

"Dear Marjorie: Have you the heart to press the charge? How have I deserved this? Won't you remember?"

Mrs. Green seemed to have the heart, for she tore up the note and left the station jauntily in the arms of a new chauffeur, who carried her to her car and drove her away.

CITY JOB ELIGIBLES MEET.

Protest Against Commissioner Kingsbury Ignoring Civil Service List.

A meeting of the Civil Service Eligibles Association of the State of New York was called last night in the Washington Irving High School to protest against the appointment by Commissioner Kingsbury of forty-seven examiners of charitable institutions, who, it is asserted, have never taken civil service examinations, although there is a civil service list for their positions.

At the conclusion of the meeting H. Sibley, the President of the Association, was empowered to appoint a committee to present the protest to Commissioner Kingsbury, Henry Moskowits, President of the Municipal Civil Service Commission, and the officers of the Municipal Reform Association.

Alfred J. Talley spoke at the meeting and gave instances of what he considered injustice in the administration of the civil service. James F. Conway, former Chief Examiner in the Civil Service Bureau, attacked the Civil Service Commissioner, saying that it had been established by "millionaires" who had their own interests at heart, and of the Bureau of Municipal Research, he said:

"It is a body that was established by Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller, Mrs. Harriman, and others at the suggestion of some college students, who said they could reduce the taxes of the rich."

MOTHER-TEACHER TO FIGHT.

Mrs. Wagner and Her Champion Will Report for Duty Tomorrow.

Miss Henrietta Rodman, the Wadleigh High School teacher who was suspended on charges for publicly criticising the Board of Education with regard to its treatment of mother-teachers in the public schools, will be placed on trial before the Committee on High and Training Schools of the Board of Education on Tuesday afternoon. She is charged with gross misconduct and insubordination.

Meantime Miss Rodman will present herself at her school on Monday morning and offer to teach her classes. It is expected that she will be prevented from teaching and then she will go directly to the office of Mayor Mitchel with a protest.

Miss Rodman had a conference with her attorney, Mrs. Jean Norris, 27 William Street, yesterday afternoon and decided on this course. As a result of the conference Mrs. Lola Wagner of Tottenville, S. I., the last of the teacher-mothers to be suspended for absence to rear her child, was advised also to report for duty tomorrow morning. If Mrs. Wagner is not permitted to teach she will appeal directly to Dr. John H. Finley, State Commissioner of Education.

"My case is different than that of Mrs. Wagner's," said Miss Rodman, who is Mrs. Defremery in private life. "Her case involves the question whether married teachers shall have the right to have children. My case involves my right to be a citizen as well as a teacher. I am prepared to fight my case, and will argue that it was no act of insubordination to criticise the Board of Education."

The Darien station will be able to reach a vessel midway between New York and Gibraltar.

THE LEXINGTON TO CLOSE.

Hammerstein's Opera House Abandons Moving-Picture Policy.

Fred Dennage, manager of Hammerstein's Lexington Avenue Opera House, announced last night that owing to poor business the theatre would be closed after tonight's performance.

This is the theatre built by Oscar Hammerstein and intended originally as a home for grand opera. His contract with the Metropolitan Opera House to keep out of the grand opera field was upheld by the courts and his new playhouse, which cost more than $1,000,000, opened last September as a moving-picture theatre.

At that time Hammerstein inaugurated a policy of offering between the pictures bits of grand opera with some of the singers he had intended using if his plans had not been interfered with.

It is said that the Lexington Avenue Theatre is soon to be given over to popular-priced vaudeville.

THANKSGIVING FOWL THIN.

Dry Season Has Made It Hard for Jersey Birds to Forage.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, N. J., Nov. 14.—Lean and lank and very scarce and high-priced will be the Thanksgiving turkeys that come out of New Jersey this Fall. Weather conditions have given the birds a month's commutation of the death sentence, according to Burlington County farmers, and most of the birds raised in this vicinity will be held for the Christmas trade.

"This is the poorest turkey season I have ever known," says Philip Haines of the Jacksonville Road, heretofore an extensive grower and shipper of the big Thanksgiving birds. "For some reason the eggs did not hatch well and only about 5 per cent. of the young turkeys lived after leaving the shell. The dry Summer has been hard on the foraging birds because it cut down their supply of insects, which form a big part of their food, while growing. The warm weather has also been a drawback. It has been impossible to feed turkeys during such moderate days and to kill them for the Thanksgiving market would be to disappoint the customers and sustain a big loss on the flock."

RATES TOO HIGH, SAYS HILL.

Blames Federal Government for Poor Conditions That Exist.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, Nov. 14.—Louis W. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railroad, who is here on a tour of inspection that will take him from the Gulf of Mexico to Puget Sound, complains that interest rates are too high, and predicts that 1915 will be a year of stagnation in railroad building. This will result in smaller payrolls and a larger army of idle men, he thinks.

"The Federal Government is largely responsible for present conditions," he said. "Railroads, the steel industry, and other big industries are suffering from Governmentitis. Too much or too little has been done. There is too much fault finding without suggesting remedies; too little actual aid given for the unrest caused.

"The people have lost their faith in the securities of the railroads and other great industries of the country. It is impossible for the railroads to sell their bonds or to borrow money except at exorbitant rates of interest. This can mean only that the coming year will be one of stagnation, so far as railroad development and extensions are concerned."

PLAN PERMANENT MARKET BUREAU

Food Committee Is Preparing Bill to Amend Charter Providing for New Department.

BOARD TO HAVE 5 MEMBERS

Chairman Perkins Would Have Five Huge Food Terminals, One In Each Borough.

As a result of investigations made by Mayor Mitchel's Food Committee, of which George W. Perkins is Chairman, into the high cost of food supplies prevailing throughout New York since the European war commenced, a bill is being prepared which will so amend the charter of the City of New York that a department of markets will be provided.

The bill will also make possible the establishment of five huge terminal markets, one in each borough, which, according to the plans outlined some weeks ago by Chairman Perkins, is the only method by which food can be put in the hands of the masses at reasonable prices. Mr. Perkins long ago discovered that cheaper food was impossible unless the terminal facilities are such that transportation and transfer charges, now a material part of food cost, are reduced. With the delivery of produce by railroad and water direct to the consumer, the cost can be kept at a minimum. The proposition to establish such a terminal at Wallabout is the result of Mr. Perkins's investigations. When the committee meets next Tuesday, the proposed measure probably will be in shape for submission to the Mayor.

Board of Five Members.

Those who have studied the situation since "war prices" made necessary the appointment of the Mayor's Food Committee have in mind a department headed by a Market Board, which shall consist of five members to be appointed by the Mayor, each to represent one of the five boroughs. The committee feels that it will be necessary for the members to live in the boroughs they are appointed from, and this provision will probably be included in the bill. One member will be designated as President of the board, and offices will be maintained in each borough.

There has been much discussion in the committee toward defining the duties of the Market Board. At the present time the Controller looks after the finances of open markets, the Borough Presidents after their management, while the Board of Health and other officials have a hand in their management. It is proposed to put all authority in the hands of the Market Board. It will make regulations and enforce them, appoint subordinates, and in it will be vested the right of trial and removal, subject to existing civil service rules.

It is probable that the question of the salaries of the President and board members will be left to the Board of Aldermen, who will receive from the Board of Estimate recommendations on that subject. Conditions due to the European war and the constant tendency to increase the cost of living make it probable that the committee will urge prompt action on the proposed charter amendment. It is proposed to have the act become operative upon its passage, the department heads to be appointed at once.

In order to defray expenses for the remainder of the year the Controller will be authorized by the Board of Estimate to issue and sell about $125,000 worth of revenue bonds. As much of this amount as is necessary will be applied to the expenses of the new administrative force.

Power to Select Sites.

In a general way the duties of the board will be to maintain all markets, manage them, and supervise all business carried on in them. In addition it will be vested with the right to collect rentals and other income, apportion spaces and stalls, and select sites and purchase market equipment when authorized by the Board of Estimate.

One of the most important tasks that will fall to the new department will be the selection of new market sites. It will fall heir to the task that staggered the Caymor Market Commission, selecting the site for and drawing up the plans for a wholesale terminal market in each of the five boroughs. This will mean an expenditure of millions of dollars. The fixing of a time limit by law within which plans for the borough markets must be submitted to the Aldermen and the Board of Estimate is contemplated. In addition to its other powers the new board will have the right to lease properties to meet emergencies or for receiving food stations.

With the formation of the Market Board it is probable that it will take up at once the enlarging and improving of the Wallabout Market into the city's principal terminal market. Here it is proposed to spend thousands of dollars dredging the Wallabout Channel, so that lighters of heavy draught and small craft can come direct to the market and discharge their cargoes. Railroad cars can be unloaded from floats and taken to the warehouse for loading or unloading. This plan contemplates the building of a great brick storhouse and refrigerating plant. The section of the market known as "Farmers' Square" is, it is said, to be set apart for the exclusive use of farmers and market gardeners.

From time to time there has been some criticism as to the terms of leases in the city markets, and a not unimportant task of the new board will be the question of the renewals of leases and the fixing of rentals for spaces in the new markets. In addition it is planned by those who are considering the measure to make the new board a court of last resort in the matter of adjusting differences that may arise over leases, licenses, the quality of goods sold, and the prices charged.

Keep Record of Prices.

One branch of the new organization will be that of the Bureau of Push Carts and Peddlers. This will have supervision of all push carts and street vendors. Where one has been defrauded the Board is to be empowered to consider such complaint. It is also to be provided that each market auctioneer or commission man will be held to strict account for sales, and that books are to be kept showing receipt of goods and their sales. These books will always be open to the board, and it is expected to further safeguard the shipper of foodstuffs so that he can get a "square deal." Such a provision the members of the committee feel is advisable because of the many complaints received, especially from fishermen, that the shipper does not always get a fair deal from the receivers.

It is probable that there will be embodied in the proposed charter amendment certain features of the City Commerce Department which are being urged by Joseph Hartigan, Commissioner of Weights and Measures. The Market Board will probably be authorized to organize and maintain some form of information bureau. This will be for the advantage of the consumer as well as the seller. It will disseminate general information as to the supply and prices of meats, fruits, and vegetables.

When Borough President Marks established his free city markets on city properties the question at once arose as to who gave him permission to put city properties to such a use. The markets had to be "legalized" by the Board of Aldermen. In the contemplated amendment this authority will be definately vested in the Market Board.

FRIENDS HONOR MONAGHAN.

Return to Health and Appointment to U. S. Job Celebrated at Dinner.

Two hundred friends of James C. Monaghan gathered last night at a dinner in the Astor Gallery of the Waldorf to congratulate him on his return to health and on his appointment as American Consul to Jamaica.

Some of the tributes to Mr. Monaghan were most flattering. Mayor James J. Curley of Boston, one of the speakers, told how he had been invited to preside last night at the Convention of Mayors in Philadelphia, but had preferred to attend the dinner to Mr. Monaghan. Father John P. S. Chidwick, President of St. Joseph's Seminary at Dunwoodie, described the work of Mr. Monaghan for the Catholic Church and, shaking a finger at Mrs. Monaghan, said that in marrying him she had deprived the Church of a brilliant Cardinal.

President Wilson sent a message of congratulations. James B. Connolly, who recently won a prize of $2,500 for a short story, sent $10 worth of congratulations by wire, according to the estimate of S. H. Horgan, secretary of the gathering. Dudley Field Malone's tribute was his attending the dinner long enough to make a speech on the evening of his sixth wedding anniversary.

Prof. Monaghan was formerly a United States Consul in Germany. For a while he was Principal of the Stuyvesant Evening Trade School. His health broke down two years ago while he was delivering Catholic lectures for the Knights of Columbus.

Concert for Benefit of Immigrants.

The Washington Irving High School pupils will give a concert this afternoon at Ellis Island for the benefit of the immigrants who are detained there on account of the war, which prevents their being deported. The drum and fife band of the Seventy-first Regiment will assist the girls. The steamboat leaves the Battery for Ellis Island at 2 P. M.

WANTS A NATIONAL UTILITIES BUREAU

But Philadelphia Conference Does Not Advocate Municipal Ownership.

CORPORATIONS PROTEST

Representatives Complain of Having Been Slighted in the Make-Up of the Programme.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 14.—As a climax to the conference of American Mayors, utility corporation leaders, Public Service Commissioners, and economic educators, which has been in session in this city for the past two days, the convention today unanimously adopted the report of a special committee on recommendations, pledging support to a National Utilities Bureau recently organized and now about to be formally incorporated to fight the battles of the municipalities against the utility concerns.

The conference did not go on record as favoring municipal ownership of public utilities. State control of the municipal corporations, or Government regulation of private concerns. It contented itself with a concrete indorsement of the National Utilities Bureau plan and dismissed the subject of public policies regarding control of corporate interests with the broad declaration that the municipalities would have to decide as to these various forms of control for themselves, making them consonant with the varying local conditions.

But the corporations themselves injected into the concluding day's session of the conference the charge that they had not been dealt with fairly in consideration of the rights and privileges of big business. On the floor of the conference, both at the morning and afternoon sessions, representatives of million-dollar utility concerns accused the conference of not having given the corporations a square deal.

Agents of some of the largest utility corporations in the country complained that the corporations had not adequate representation on the programme. An acrimonious discussion between the representatives of the municipalities and the corporations developed at today's luncheon. Supplementing their charges that they had received unfair treatment, the corporation leaders said it had been the big money interests building up the utility enterprises which had made the country great.

Frederick C. Howe, United States Commissioner of Immigration at New York, in his address at the afternoon session of the conference said that the ownership of public utilities by big privileged corporations had resulted in the subordination of city governments to private companies. He said that the high-grade men in almost every large city in the country were found on the directing boards of large public utility companies, because of the dignity and prestige that went with the position, while second-rate men would in most cases be found in City Councils. He said municipal ownership was necessary to save the highest-grade men for municipal service.

dent occurred. The other persons watched the policeman without knowing what it was all about. After extracting the fuse O'Connor held the package in front of him an instant as though undecided what to do, then jammed it tightly against his body and made a headlong dash out of the room, down the steps to the rotunda of the Criminal Court Building, and out of the Centre Street entrance.

Few persons were in the street at the moment, and he flung the bomb out on to the pavement. It landed directly in front of a street car and rolled across to the curb opposite. Other policemen and court attendants who had run out after O'Connor forced pedestrians unceremoniously back to Franklin and White Streets, and the street car moved out of the block quickly. There was a tense five minutes of waiting for an explosion which never occurred.

Flee From Danger.

Meantime an automobile ran through the crowd at White Street and had nearly reached the bomb before its driver caught the meaning of the warnings that were shouted to him. He put on speed and dashed by the bomb. An aged little Italian woman stepped out of one of the stores in the middle of the block. O'Connor's voices shouted to her to go back. She stared about in bewilderment, not understanding English, and Policeman O'Connor, who was standing at White Street, ran at top speed down the block and, picking the woman up when she was within a few inches of the bomb, carried her to Franklin Street. Frightened and still bewildered she made her way toward Mulberry Street and disappeared.

A clerk from the office of ex-Sheriff Tom Foley appeared with a bucket of water after the bomb had remained on the pavement five minutes and, approaching it cautiously, poured the water on it. A second bucket of water was brought and the bomb was placed in it until it had soaked thoroughly. Inspector Owen Eagan of the Bureau of Combustibles, Inspector Faurot and several detectives arrived a few minutes later and Eagan made an examination of the bomb, after complaining that he would be hampered by the fact that it had been soaked in water.

The newspaper wrapping was bound with white string. The paper was a copy of Forward, a Socialist organ published in Yiddish, for Oct. 22. Later investigation revealed that there was nothing in this issue about Bouck White or Berkman, or anything else which the detectives considered of any especial significance. Inside the paper was an olive oil can seven inches long and four inches wide, with a round cap one inch in diameter screwed on the top. The cap was perforated, apparently with a nail, to admit the fuse.

In the can were between two and three pounds of a mixture of black gun powder and what Eagan believed to be dynamite, 25 revolver cartridges, and many slugs. The cartridges ranged in calibre from .32 to .44. The tin can was reinforced by picture frame wire bound tightly about its sides. The bomb was taken to Inspector Faurot's office at Police Headquarters.

Loaded Cartridges Used.

"This is a most unusual sort of bomb, and is unlike anything we have ever seen in this city before," the Inspector said. "Putting loaded cartridges into bombs is a new idea, and it is impossible for us to tell how destructive the new type would have proved."

The Inspector produced the bomb which was found on June 15 last in the building at Spring and Lafayette Streets where Chevalier G. Fari Forni, the Italian Consul General, had his office. It was smaller than the bomb found yesterday, and was made of a cocoa can imbedded in concrete. Its top, too, was perforated for the admission of the fuse.

"This bomb is the nearest to a duplicate of the one found today that the department has ever found," the Inspector said. "It didn't have the loaded cartridges, but its maker seemed to realize the possibilities of tin cans for bomb-making, and its maker has never been caught by the police."

Inspector Faurot called attention to the fact that yesterday's bomb was radically different from the bombs exploded in St. Patrick's Cathedral and St. Alphonsus's Church on Oct. 13. These had cast-iron coverings, thought to have been old tops of gate posts, and contained dynamite and slugs.

Lewis Tells of Conspiracy.

Mr. Lewis, explaining how he had first learned of the plot, said:

"Mayor Mitchel was attacked because it was thought that, as the head of the City Government, he should have made the Magistrates act differently regarding the cases of Becky Edelson and other Anarchists and I. W. W. leaders brought before them. Miss Davis was condemned because she had not overridden the law and released Becky Edelson after her conviction; Magistrate Simms because he sentenced Becky to the workhouse, and Magistrate Campbell because he sentenced the I. W. W. agitators who invaded St. Alphonsus's Church.

"I don't believe that Bouck White knew anything about this bomb outrage. The anarchists usually perpetrate their misdeeds while public attention is directed another way. White has just been released from Queens County Jail, and public attention is on him. Therefore the anarchists may have taken advantage of the opportunity to hide behind him."

Corroboration was lent to the story of a plot by the attempt in the Bronx, where the two bombs not only damaged the Court House, but blew out the front of Marshal Hoefling's office. Judge Gibbs had just left his chamber when the bomb exploded in the Court House.

"It is more than a coincidence that there should be two such occurrences within a week," Judge Gibbs said when he learned of yesterday's bomb. "It is clear proof that there is a deliberate campaign on foot, but a criminal element to intimidate the courts and their officers in the discharge of public duty. The knowledge that such a band is at large is a menace to administration of the law, but judicial officers should meet the challenge by unrelenting and increasing activity in dealing with such criminals as come before them."

Sentenced Church Raiders.

Magistrate Campbell said that he was not surprised when he returned to the courtroom and heard of the finding of the bomb. He recalled that he was the one who had sentenced the agitators. All of these are said to be free now except Frank Tannenbaum, the youthful leader of the original "Army of the Unemployed," who was arrested after the "army" had invaded St. Alphonsus's Church, the scene of one of the bomb explosions last month.

The Magistrate thought the bomb was placed by some person who had been aroused by speeches either of the I. W. W. agitators, the anarchists, or of Bouck White.

"I don't think for a moment that Bouck White had anything to do with this personally, of course," he said, "nor that he knew anything about it." The Magistrate said that he would not ask for special police protection because of the finding of the bomb.

"I am too small a city official for that," he smiled, "and, besides, if they are determined to 'get me' they will 'get me,' whether I have a cordon of police about me or not. I shall just go on doing my duty as I see it."

The Magistrate exhibited a letter he received yesterday morning, but which had been mailed on Nov. 12 and gone to the wrong address, inviting him to attend a meeting held by Bouck White in Carnegie Hall night before last. White had just got out of jail after serving his sentence on a charge of breaking up a church meeting. The invitation was signed by Sol Fieldman, director and lecturer of the Church of the Social Revolution, of which Bouck White is the head. The missive was turned over to the detectives.

White Talks of Attempt.

Bouck White was found at night at his home, 46 East Twenty-fifth Street, which the Church of the Social Revolution has made its headquarters for the last week. He evidently had been told that the Magistrate mentioned him in the case.

"Since Magistrate Campbell has seen fit to associate my name with this bomb case," he said, "I shall answer him publicly tomorrow in my sermon at Bryant Hall."

White said that there was nothing in his speech at Carnegie Hall on Friday night which could have instigated yesterday's attempt and that he had always preached against violence of every kind. His talk, he added, was calculated to have the effect of preventing violent methods and of warning that they were almost inevitable under present conditions.

Sol Fieldman, who presided at the Carnegie Hall meeting on Friday night, said last night:

"My first impression on hearing of the bomb was that it had been placed in the room by some crazy anarchist. Then I thought of the most probable answer to the question—that it had been placed by some hireling of capital to bring the church of the Social Revolution into disrepute. Had Magistrate Campbell been killed the papers would certainly have linked the murder up with the name of Bouck White and the Church of the Social Revolution. Such tricks on the part of capital are not at all unusual or new."

There was nothing said at the meeting in Carnegie Hall, Fieldman asserted, which would have been apt to incite any hearer to adopt such a method of taking revenge on Magistrate Campbell. He said that he thought the Magistrate should have attended the meeting.

Alexander Berkman was not at his home yesterday, having left for Pittsburgh several days ago to celebrate the anniversary of the day he shot Henry Clay Frick. Other leaders of the anarchists were not to be found.

Magistrate Praises Policeman.

Magistrate Campbell wrote the letter to Police Commissioner Woods yesterday afternoon:

My Dear Commissioner: Just after I had entered the Criminal Court this morning, I found considerable excitement among the court officers and the spectators in the court room. Upon investigation I found that a bomb had been discovered on the third bench from the rear of the court room, on the Franklin Street side.

Patrolman George L. O'Connor of the Twelfth Precinct (Mulberry Street Station) saw the bomb, and with great judgment and much nerve took hold of it and squeezed out the burning fuse, extinguishing it. It was about as nasty looking a bomb as you could imagine, about eight inches long and six or seven inches deep. The daring courage and foresight of this young officer are in my judgment worthy of special mention, and I am glad to be able to commend him to your highest consideration. Very truly yours,

JOHN A. L. CAMPBELL.

"When I had heard what O'Connor had done I called him to the bench and publicly commended him," said the Magistrate. "While I was complimenting O'Connor he blushed like a girl. He is a modest as well as a brave policeman."

GIBBS UNDAUNTED BY BOMB.

Bronx Judge Commits Woman to Jail in Slave Case.

While the police are following every clue that may lead to the discovery of those responsible for the bomb that exploded in front of the Bronx County Court House last Wednesday night, the crusade against white slavery in the Bronx is being carried on with determination by Judge Louis D. Gibbs and District Attorney Martin, to intimidate whom it was thought by many the Bronx bomb was exploded. Judge Gibbs yesterday committed a woman charged with conspiracy in connection with one of the recent white slave cases to prison in default of $10,000 bail.

The woman was Mrs. Kitty Carmeni, 27 years old, of 168 East 113th Street. She was arrested on Friday night in the home of Mrs. Tessie Vittelli, also 27 years old, at 216 East 113th Street, and charged with conspiring to spirit away Henrietta Annette, one of three material witnesses wanted in the case of John J. Delane of 535 St. Ann's Avenue, who is now held in $24,000 bail on a white slave charge. She went to prison with her daughter, 14 months old.

Mrs. Vittelli was arrested with Mrs. Carmeni and charged with having a loaded revolver. Yesterday in the Harlem Court Magistrate Nolan held her in $500 bail for further examination tomorrow. After looking for Mrs. Carmeni for three weeks the detectives traced her to Mrs. Vittelli's apartment.

District Attorney Francis Martin has a large force of detectives at work in the Italian districts of the Bronx looking for the persons who wrecked the entrance of the million-dollar Court House last Wednesday night.

Mr. Martin is convinced that the bomb was intended for Judge Gibbs. He said yesterday that he was convinced the crime was the joint work of white slavers and anarchists.

Mr. Martin admitted he had come across clues leading to the Harlem clearing house for the white slave traffic. Indications pointed to a gigantic business there, he said. Girls were brought to the Harlem house from sub-stations in Bridgeport, New Haven, Albany, and Paterson, N. J. The procurers, he said, got $10 for every girl furnished to the disorderly resorts, and then shared the profits with the resort keepers. The women themselves, he said, received no compensation and no percentage of the profits.

"I have found," said the District Attorney, "that the procurers are all Italians, but that they do not traffic in Italian girls. They take girls of every other nationality. It may be that they have a sense of shame which makes them exclude women of their own race, but I am more inclined to the view that they fear the Italian women and, therefore, refuse to take chances with them. The girls are recruited from factories."

WHITMAN NAMED IN CANARD.

False Reports of an Attack on the Governor-Elect.

Inquiries were received here last night from Washington, D. C., and Princeton, N. J., asking if it was true that an attack had been made on District Attorney Whitman, Governor-elect. The District Attorney attended the Williams-Amherst football game at Amherst yesterday. When he returned to his home here last night he was surprised to hear of the inquiries.

"Nothing unpleasant occurred to me during my trip to and from Amherst," he said. "I had a most pleasant outing and was entertained at dinner by the President of Amherst College. I cannot understand how such rumors originated."

It is supposed that the discovery of the bomb in the Tombs Police Court, in the Criminal Courts Building, where the offices of the District Attorney are situated on an upper floor, may have been the basis for the erroneous reports.

HENRY VAN SCHAICK DEAD.

Old New Yorker Was Related to Royal Family of Germany.

Henry Van Schaick, a son of Myndert Van Schaick and a descendant of one of New York's oldest families, who settled in this city when it was the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam, died last night at his home, 140 West Sixty-ninth Street, in his eighty-ninth year. He was born in this city, and was graduated from New York University with the class of 1843. He was a member of the Union Club and the Holland Society.

Mr. Van Schaick, through the marriage of his daughter, Elise, was related to the royal family of Germany. She married Count Alexander Boutourline, and her daughter, the Countess Linka, married Count Albert Hohenau. His father was Major Count Frederick Hohenau, a son of Prince Albert of Prussia, who was the half-brother of the late Prince Albert of Prussia, Regent of the Sovereign Dutchy of Brunswick. The latter was a brother of Emperor William I.

Vida Llewellyn's Recital.

Vida Llewellyn made her first appearance in America as a pianist yesterday afternoon in Aeolian Hall. Her programme showed a desire to find material for her concert outside of conventional lines, though it did begin with Tausig's transcription of Bach's toccata and fugue in D minor, and centred in Schumann's "Carnaval." She attempted to make three of Richard Strauss's boyish "Stimmungsbilder," Op. 9, seem worthy of a place following Schumann's great series of imaginative pictures; but they paled very much, perhaps all the more from the contrast they were obliged to endure, and left the conclusion unavoidable that their place is in the salon, if anywhere.

Nor could it be discerned that Miss Llewellyn is likely to prove an important addition to the season's throng of pianists. Her playing is agreeable, sometimes showing taste and even power, and sometimes a lack of understanding and of penetration. Her technical acquirements are not yet sufficiently great or trustworthy to enable her to aspire to a very high place in public performance.

TWO SHIP LOADS

For Starving Belgians

Representing the generous cash contributions of about 12,000 men, women and children to the

Belgian Relief Fund

Has just been bought by the Belgian Relief Committee for rush transportation on Steamers Agamemnon and Niches. As all expenses of handling, shipping and distribution, under expert supervision, are being met by the Rockefeller Foundation, co-operating with the London American Committee and the Belgian Relief Committee

Every penny, nickel, dime and dollar, in its full food equivalent, will actually reach the mouths of starving women and children in desolated Belgium.

BUT THIS IS ONLY A BEGINNING—A MILLION DOLLARS NEEDED NOW

Four, and probably five, steamers will shortly be at our disposal. We must have food to fill them.

The cargo purchases here, and the large remittances to Ministers Van Dyke at The Hague and Whitlock at Brussels have practically depleted the Belgian Relief Fund.

YOUR cash co-operation is needed—at once; your little or your large contribution—now.

The appalling conditions in Belgium are becoming more widespread and intense.

There must be immediate alleviation of the increasingly acute physical and mental suffering of these poor, homeless people unless we are prepared to contemplate a frightful toll in death and disease.

More than 12,000 have given to this Fund. Their aid, often involving much self-sacrifice, is saving lives in little Belgium. But—

Hundreds of thousands, up into the millions, out there face starvation,—now, as you read this.

The plain fact is that, unless another 12,000 give—now—and another—and another—until all have given who can give—an appalling number will perish.

"Rich and poor, the prosperous, and the beggars of yesterday, have become castaways, wanderers on the face of the earth. We must all work to spare the women and children the supreme horror of a northern winter, to be endured in hunger, nakedness, homelessness."

More than 12,000 have given. But—

There are more than 5,000,000 of us right here in New York.

For every one in this city who has not given there is a Belgian woman, child, infant, old man, invalid—now—today—homeless, helpless, and in direst need of food and clothing.

Never was there a cause with more urgency, more pathos, more universality of appeal than this, which involves the fate of Belgian women and children.

SEEK FEDERAL LAW GRANTING SUFFRAGE

Association Broadens Work Before Congress — Asks Franchise on National Officials.

DR. SHAW AN EASY WINNER

NASHVILLE, Tenn., Nov. 14.—The National American Woman's Suffrage Association, in convention here, decided today to still further broaden the scope of its legislative activities during the coming year. A resolution was adopted directing the association's Congressional Committee to work for a Federal statute giving to women in all States the right to vote for members of Congress, United States Senators, and Presidential Electors. The resolution was drafted at a caucus of prominent delegates from all sections of the country, and was accepted by an overwhelming vote.

In the brief discussion of the resolution several delegates declared Congress had power to pass such a law under the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, which says:

"No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

Consideration of proposed amendments to the constitution of the association developed several spirited debates. The voice of the male suffragist was heard for the first time from the floor of the convention when Judge William A. Allee of Ridgefield, Conn., one of the two men occupying delegates' seats, sought by offering a substitute to help the women out of a tangle on the wording of an amendment. The convention, which had been proceeding with some confusion, hushed immediately when Judge Allee began speaking. He later withdrew his amendment in favor of a substitute offered by a woman delegate from Illinois.

The convention tabled a proposition to limit the tenure of office of the association's President to two years and defeated an amendment which would have denied a place on the national board to any salaried official of the association. It was declared to be the sense of the convention that the Executive Secretary should not be a member of the board.

Dr. Shaw Not Opposed.

A primary held by the delegates today showed that in the election Monday there would be contests for only three offices. The unopposed candidates are: President—Dr. Anna Howard Shaw, New York; Second Vice President—Mrs. Desha Breckinridge, Kentucky; Third Vice President—Miss Katharine B. Davis, New York; Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. Orton B. Clark, Michigan; Treasurer—Mrs. Henry Wade Rogers, Connecticut; First Auditor—Mrs. Helen Guthrie Miller, Missouri.

The candidates who have opposition and the vote received by each in the primary are:

First Vice President—Mrs. Katherine Dexter McCormick, New York, 177; Miss Jean Gordon, Louisiana, 103.

Second Auditor—Mrs. Medill McCormick, Illinois, 126; Miss Zona Gale, Wisconsin, 121.

Miss Kate M. Gordon of New Orleans, in presenting to the convention greetings from the Southern States Woman Suffrage Conference, declared that Southern women were inclined to hold to the State's rights idea in their efforts to gain the ballot. She asserted her belief that if the Democratic Party could be induced to insert a suffrage plank in its next national platform "votes for women" soon would be an accomplished fact in the South. An effort to obtain this concession would be made by the Southern delegates, she said.

Members of the Congressional Union attending the convention as delegates from other suffrage organizations than the union, frankly expressed their dissatisfaction today over the convention's action regarding plans for work before Congress at the next session. Mrs. Harriet Stanton Blatch of New York, Mrs. Helen Hill Weed of Connecticut and a number of other supporters of the Congressional Union departed for their homes today declaring they saw no chance of composing the differences existing between the union and the National Suffrage Association.

At a mass meeting tonight addresses on State and national suffrage campaigns were delivered by Miss Alice Stone Blackwell of Massachusetts; Mrs. Antoinette Funk of Chicago; Mrs. Raymond Brown of New York; Miss Hannah Patterson of Philadelphia, and Mrs. Maud Wood Park of Boston.

Reports on New York.

Mrs. Brown, President of the New York State Woman Suffrage Association, reported on the progress of the campaign in New York State to win the popular referendum on the suffrage question there in November, 1915.

"Our enrollment of men and women who believe in woman suffrage has grown," she said, "from 58,000 a year ago to 265,000. The stunt which we have set ourselves this Winter is to completely canvass both the men and women of the State. We have 141 of the 150 Assembly Districts in the State fairly well organized, and the other nine Assembly Districts in process of organization.

"Each election district is making a card catalogue of the voters with their sentiments on the subject of suffrage. The returns are both interesting and encouraging. The average is from 3 to 7 to 1 opposed. Among the women it is even greater. Of 1,710 women interviewed in one town, 1,583 declared in favor. One district that had forty-six enrolled suffragists five years ago now has nearly 14,000.

"We have set out now to raise $150,000 for the last year of the campaign. The last two weeks in October were given to money-raising all over the State, and we are practically assured of that sum."

OLD SWINDLE COSTS WESTERNER $1,000

MYTHICAL LEGACY AS BAIT

Third Man, Whom the Pair Encounter in Fifth Avenue, Figures in the Comedy.

A Dakota sheep farmer who was the victim of one of the very oldest of New York swindles insisted before he left the Imperial on Saturday to sail for England that his name must be kept a secret, as he did not want his friends at home to know what happened to him. Two confidence men on Friday got his purse containing more than $1,000, a steamship ticket, and his overcoat. He was able to sail on the St. Paul because he met a friend who cashed his check for $1,000.

The man from one of the Dakotas arrived here last Thursday. He was on his way to England, having been summoned thither by the illness of his mother. On his first day here he drifted into a Broadway bar and became engaged in a casual conversation with a short, smooth-faced stranger. Eventually the man from the West told who and what he was and of the voyage he had planned.

"A remarkable coincidence," said the short man. "I have a sheep station in New Zealand, and am on my way to London, and I also am booked on the St. Paul."

The conversation turned to sheep farming, the effect of the American tariff, and the embargo New Zealand was expected to lay on the export of wool, except to England. The two men went to a theatre and at parting the "New Zealander" invited the Westerner to lunch with him next day at Sherry's. On Friday the new friends were strolling up Fifth Avenue. They had just crossed Thirty-fifth Street, when a man in front of them dropped a large envelope, and walked on apparently without noticing it. The "New Zealander" sprang forward, picked it up, and restored it. The third man was very grateful.

"I am so glad you picked it up," he said. "That letter was from my attorneys in Seattle, and it conveyed big and pleasant news. I have been engaged in a lawsuit over an inheritance amounting to $1,000,000, and this tells me I have won. I am so pleased I would really like to do something for you gentlemen."

"We are going up to Sherry's for luncheon. Perhaps you will join us?" suggested the "New Zealander."

"Delighted. And you must be my guests."

The man from the West never had enjoyed a better meal. Over his liqueur the man with the million became very mellow. He mentioned an odd clause in his relative's will which directed that he devote $50,000 to charitable purposes.

"Now that I have encountered you two gentlemen under such pleasant auspices," he continued, "an idea has suggested itself. I am going to hand over $10,000 of that $50,000 to each of you gentlemen. Of course, I must have some guarantee that you are worthy, reputable, and deserving men of business."

The three met later in a room in a hotel to discuss the required proofs. The "New Zealander" produced a bank book and letters which seemed to be a guarantee, and the Westerner showed that his pocketbook contained more than $1,000 and a steamship ticket. Drinks were served. That was all the Westerner could recall when telling the story, except that when he started to leave the room he found he had been robbed.

EFREM ZIMBALIST PLAYS.

A Programme Given in Carnegie Hall of Stereotyped Character.

Efrem Zimbalist gave a violin recital yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall that did not depart widely from the general aspect into which such occasions seem now to be stereotyped. One of the sonatas with piano, by Handel, which violinists are much affecting nowadays—it was that in E major—and the chaconne from Bach's unaccompanied sonata in D minor were the material of chief artistic value in the programme. Besides them were the transcriptions of minor pieces by the elder masters that are equally indispensable to the recital givers of today; pieces by Grazioli, Couperin, Rameau, and Haydn; then shorter pieces written originally with the violin in view by Goldmark, Tschaikowsky, Kallinikow, and Kreisler, and, finally, a composition devised for the purposes of the virtuoso, by a virtuoso, Wieniawski's fantasie on themes from Gounod's "Faust."

To make such a programme interesting to those who look beneath the surface of violin music is a difficult task. No doubt Mr. Zimbalist accomplished it as effectually as it could be done. It is needless to say that he offered his hearers nothing that was not the work of an artist, rooted in intelligence and understanding and dignified by sincerity and a complete disregard of self and personal display. It could not be charged against the occasion that there was anywhere an excess of warmth or audacity. After Mr. Zimbalist had given a broad and finely finished interpretation of Handel's sonata, and one of Bach's chaconnes that had much more than an academic correctness and an undemonstrative mastery of technical difficulties—though the performance was not on an even plane and some of the variations were more convincingly set forth than others—the imaginative flight was not high.

The minor pieces from the old masters were agreeable, indeed, charming; but they are none of them very significant nor very representative of anything greatly important. They pleased the audience, especially the more juvenile part of it, which kept up a persistent series of recalls for the soloist and was woefully disappointed when he finally reappeared with his violin—and began to play the chaconne, by no means the tidbit expected.

There was in all Mr. Zimbalist's playing the superb tone in all its shadings and the unruffled repose and self-concentration that are never lacking in it. Sam Chotzinoff played the piano part of the sonata and the accompaniments in excellent style.

For, notwithstanding the fact that it is on Broadway, its rates are no higher than in hotels that have neither its splendid location nor anything approaching the luxury of its accommodations.

If the question of eating is an important one with you, then this is a further argument in favor of The McAlpin; for if there is one feature in which this hotel is superior to others, it is in the direction of culinary excellence.

Tomorrow, a FURNITURE Event of Very Great Importance

A $120,000 Stock, at Full Marked Prices, of Artistic, Finely-made Furniture Bought from the Assignee

FRANK M. RANDALL

136-146 WEST 52D STREET, NEW YORK

For thirty-four years in New York Frank M. Randall has been selling the best kind of furniture to a large and exacting trade—the last five of these years in his fine building at 136-146 West Fifty-second Street.

From him retailers and interior decorators have bought the furniture for many fine homes. To his credit may be set the furnishing of such well-known hotels as the Ansonia, Marie Antoinette, Cumberland, Majestic, Marseilles, Leonori and Flanders, in New York; the fine new Hampton Terrace, in North Augusta, S. C.; the Hotel Garde, in New Haven, and others.

For such discriminating customers fine furniture was essential. Hence we found, on the five floors of the big building in Fifty-second street and in the big warehouse on Twenty-fifth street, the products of the furniture makers who comprise the aristocracy of their craft in America.

and others of similarly high standing.

It was all this furniture of an unusually high type of excellence, and equal to our own superb furniture, that GIMBEL BROTHERS bought from the assignee when Frank M. Randall discontinued his business.

The Randall price tags show a total of $120,000, but we are most concerned about WHOLESALE prices—just half, or $60,000. It is on these that we base the extraordinary savings of the sale, marking the pieces at the GIMBEL prices of 33 1-3 to 50% less than wholesale.

Every classic period is represented by superb examples, including the styles in present vogue for most artistic furnishing schemes. Randall specialized in dining room and bed room suites, and library furniture; there are also various single pieces and a fine collection of Brass Bedsteads. To summarize:

$190; Randall's Wholesale Price, $350

Dining Room Furniture

Suites and Odd Pieces in Mahogany, Early English, Jacobean Oak, Circassian Walnut, Golden and Fumed Oak, in Sheraton, Adam, Chippendale, Georgian, Jacobean and Colonial periods.

Randall's wholesale prices were $45 to $750. Gimbel sale prices are $27.50 to $475.

Bedroom Furniture

Accurate reproductions of Sheraton, Adam, Colonial, Louis XV. and XVI. and modern American designs, in Manogany, Maple, Circassian Walnut, Gray and White Enamel, including many richly hand decorated or inlaid examples.

Randall's wholesale prices were $50 to $1,490. Gimbels Sale Prices are $30 to $950.

Mission Furniture

From the well-known factory of L. & J. G. Stickley; from a small Rocker, at $5.75, Randall's wholesale price $9, to a Davenport at $50, Randall's wholesale price $75.

Individual Pieces.

32 Styles of Book Cases, from $16.50 to $35; Randall's wholesale prices, $18 to $60.

55 Styles of Library Tables at $9.50 to $40; Randall's wholesale prices, $16 to $70.

150 Odd Dressers and Chiffoniers, at $25 to $72.50; Randall's wholesale prices, $40 to $106.

300 Brass Bedsteads
Fine designs from best manufacturers, in all sizes, but usually one of a kind. Prices range from $9 to $70; Randall's wholesale prices from $15 to $130. Also about 100 patterns of

White Enamel Bedsteads

$27.50; Randall's Wholesale Price, $45

IMPORTANT NOTICE

As with few exceptions, there is but a single piece or suite of a design, and none can be duplicated, the early hours on Monday morning will afford the best selection of the sale.

APPEAL FOR SIEGEL IF FOUND GUILTY

Chief Counsel Stanchfield Files Many Exceptions — Letter Writers Urge Conviction.

MISSIVES KEPT FROM JURY

Cashier Champion to be Examined on Mysterious Sale of His Stock and on Handling of Bank Funds.

Special to The New York Times.

GENESEO, N. Y., Nov. 14.—Attorneys not connected with either side in the Siegel trial, which began here last Monday before Justice Clark in the Supreme Court, are of the opinion that John B. Stanchfield, chief counsel for Siegel, while hoping that his client will be acquitted, is largely devoting his efforts to laying the groundwork for an appeal if one should prove advisable. This view is shared by the prosecution. Mr. Stanchfield objects to every item of importance in the evidence and takes frequent exceptions to the rulings of the Court, which almost invariably have been favorable to the prosecution.

Unconsciously persons believed to be depositors in the private bank run in connection with the Fourteenth Street Store are giving counsel for the defense ammunition for an appeal. It is known that at least twelve letters, some of them addressed to jurors, are in possession of Justice Clark. These letters, while their contents have not been made public, it is understood beg that Siegel be convicted. Whether any of them has fallen into the hands of jurors is not known, but if any has and Siegel is convicted the fact will be employed as an argument on appeal.

Frank L. Champion, cashier of the Fourteenth Street Store bank from 1904 to the time of the failure, who sent the bank money to the various stores, and therefore knows more about the affairs of the bank than perhaps either Siegel or Vogel, is making Assistant District Attorney Train drag from him every bit of evidence produced. It was learned today that Champion, just previous to the failure, received in cash par, or nearly par, value for $2,000 worth of stock of the Siegel Stores Corporation. Mr. Train wants to know how Champion got this stock, who paid to him the money, where the money was obtained, and what argument he used to induce the purchaser to buy this stock, in view of the receivership that already seemed inevitable.

Champion will be required to tell how the money deposited in the Fourteenth Street Store bank was sent from one to another of the allied Siegel-Vogel stores through half a dozen New York banks and finally lost. Monday he will be taken through the details by which $2,802,010.08 went to the Fourteenth Street, Simpson-Crawford, and Boston stores. Daniel Quinn, Examiner of the State Banking Department, has prepared a chart which shows that the Simpson-Crawford store on Feb. 1, 1913, owed the Siegel bank $1,424,081.44; the Henry Siegel Company, Boston, $372,925.18, and the Fourteenth Street Store on Feb. 1, 1913, $516,061.29, with a balance from Feb. 1, 1912, of $434,760.50, a total of $850,821.79 to the Fourteenth Street Store.

The Siegel bank was on the ground floor of the Fourteenth Street Store. Mr. Train will try to make Champion tell how funds were sent from the bank to the Simpson-Crawford store, five blocks away, then to the National Bank of Commerce, the Bank of the Metropolis, or some other New York bank, and finally found their way to the store at Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street.

The prosecution laid much stress on the fact that the Siegel-Vogel account in the National Bank of Commerce was opened during the Presidency of Valentine P. Snyder. It was brought out in evidence that Vogel's connection with the Nelson Morris family of Chicago led Mr. Snyder to extend to Siegel and Vogel the $100,000 line of credit which Mr. Stanchfield is trying to establish was a continuous credit running from 1904 almost up to the time of the failure, and that it was based on the stability of the Morris family, rather than on statements of the stores obtained from Siegel or Vogel, mercantile agencies or any other source. It is expected that Mr. Snyder may be called in Siegel's behalf.

The court has been exceedingly careful to instruct the jurors that they must not discuss the case with any outside person or among themselves. When court adjourned yesterday, a number of Special Deputy Sheriffs were sworn in, and they accompanied the jurors to their homes or to where they desired to transact any private business.

United States Senator-elect James W. Wadsworth, Jr., arrived from Washington today. Assistant District Attorney Train never had met the new Senator, but almost every evening has been entertained, with Mrs. Train, at the home of Congressman James W. Wadsworth, Sr. When Senator-elect Wadsworth arrived at the Big Tree Inn, his first act was to hunt up Mr. Train for the exchange of amenities.

DISTILLER GETS TWO YEARS.

Cincinnati Man Falsified Records to Obtain a Loan.

CINCINNATI, Nov. 14.—Morris L. Bettman, ex-President of the Bettman-Johnson Distilling Company of this city, who was convicted several weeks ago on a charge of using the mails to defraud, was sentenced today to two years in the penitentiary by United States District Judge Hollister, after the latter had refused a motion made by Bettman's attorneys for a new trial.

Bettman was accused of using the mails in falsifying a statement of the condition of his company in order to borrow money from a New York concern and the Fifty-Third National Bank of this city.

FORBIDDEN TO SEE HUSBAND

Dentist's Wife Directed by Court Not to Annoy Him.

Justice Greenbaum in the Supreme Court yesterday directed Mrs. Emily R. McEachren to keep away from the office of her husband, Dr. George A. McEachren, at 55 East Eighty-sixth Street, and to cease annoying him. The court also ordered Dr. McEachren to pay to his wife $7.50 a week pending her suit for a divorce.

Dr. McEachren is a dentist. He says that he once was prosperous and kept an automobile, but that his wife annoyed him so that he lost his customers, and is now eking out a livelihood in a single room. Mrs. McEachren lives with her two children at 252 West 132d Street.

MR. SHAW ON THE WAR.

Mr. G. BERNARD SHAW thinks that the time has now come to pluck up courage and begin to talk and write soberly about the war." Our readers will find in THE TIMES Sunday Magazine this morning some of the fruits of this auto-suggestion. They are very remarkable. While Mr. SHAW can hardly be called a representative of any considerable class, the fact that one prominent writer, always much read, can assume Mr. SHAW's attitude and make public Mr. SHAW's comments throws a strong light on the spirit of British society. It is true that he intimates that he ran the risk of "prompt lynching" at one time, but that was probably the suggestion of a certain timidity and vanity to which he pleads guilty. His safe and prosperous existence is really a striking evidence, on the one hand, of British good nature, and, on the other, of the indifferent estimate the British put on his influence.

Like Iago, Mr. SHAW is nothing if not critical, and in this crisis his criticism is for the most part bitter, extreme, and in purpose destructive. He particularly dislikes Sir EDWARD GREY and the Government of which he is a leading spirit and the class which the Government represents. He singles out Sir EDWARD as the chief "Junker" and among the chief "militarists" who brought about this war. Mr. SHAW's attacks on the Foreign Secretary are savage, and—as often happens with savage attacks—they are far from consistent. For example, Mr. SHAW paraphrases at some length the interview between Sir EDWARD and the German Ambassador, in which the latter made four different propositions to secure the neutrality of Great Britain if Germany waged war on France, all of which Sir EDWARD refused. Mr. SHAW sees in this only evidence of determination to take arms against Germany in any case, carrying out a long-cherished plan formed by the Government of which Sir EDWARD GREY was, for this matter, the responsible member. He does not see—though it is so plain that a wayfaring man though a professional satirist should not err therein—that what the Secretary intended to do—what, in fact, he did do—was to refuse to put a price on British perfidy, to accept any "bargain" offered to that end.

On the other hand, Mr. SHAW paraphrases at still greater length the report of the interview in which the Russian Foreign Minister and the French Ambassador at St. Petersburg tried to induce the British Government to commit itself in advance to war against Germany. Mr. SHAW thinks that thus the German "bluff" would have been called and war would have been prevented, and he is confident that Mr. WINSTON CHURCHILL would have taken the Bismarck tone and dictated the result. He cannot see—what is really the essential fact in both cases—that Sir EDWARD GREY was striving in every honorable way to preserve peace, that his Government refused to stand idle and see France crushed in the same spirit that it refused to menace Germany until a definite and undeniable cause of war arose.

That cause came with Germany's violation of its pledge to observe the neutrality of Belgium, and England's response excites Mr. SHAW's most furious contempt. He adopts with zest the judgment of the German Chancellor. The pledge for all who signed it was but a scrap of paper, of no more binding force than others that had gone their way to dusty death in the diplomatic waste baskets. To observe the obligation it imposed was hypocrisy. To fight in order to compel Germany to observe it was crass militarism. Plainly, Mr. SHAW is a little difficult. The Government under which he lives is either too bellicose or not bellicose enough; too ready to help France if France is attacked or not ready enough to bully Germany, and especially it is all wrong about Belgium and its treaty, since treaties have several times been broken, and so on through a bewildering circle of contradictory statements and notions.

Mr. SHAW finds little to choose between the groups of combatants. He distinctly prides himself on his impartiality, not to say indifference. On account of his Irish birth he claims something of the detachment of a foreigner, but admits a touch of Irish malice in taking the conceit out of the English. Add to this his professed many-sidedness as a dramatist and playwright and we get as good an explanation as can be given of this noted writer's attitude toward the tremendous struggle now waging. But Mr. SHAW's assumption of even-handed scorn for every one concerned, of "six of one and a half-dozen of the other," does not hold out. He feels profoundly that such fighting as Germany does, for such a purpose as inspires Germany, must be met by force, and that England could not in the long run, no matter by whom guided or governed, have shirked the task laid upon her. That being the case, one wonders a little why it was worth while to cover every one with ridicule and to present a picture of Great Britain so essentially grotesque and distorted.

THE EVACUATION ORDER.

The withdrawal of our troops from Vera Cruz has been postponed because the Government at Washington has been unable until now to obtain assurances that the customs dues collected by our officials during the occupation would not be collected a second time, and that the lives and property of Mexican citizens who have cooperated with the American authorities in preserving law and order in Vera Cruz would be protected after the withdrawal. The State Department has now been assured to its satisfaction, by both CARRANZA and the Convention of Governors and Generals at Aguascalientes that these requirements will be met, wherefore the retirement of the troops on Nov. 23 is formally announced.

The American soldiers will not be sorry, and most of their compatriots will be glad. There is a strong sentiment in this country against our interference in the affairs of our neighbors. The most beneficial effect of the withdrawal, however, will be its influence upon South American sentiment. There is no doubt that Europeans in the South American States have used our occupation of the chief Mexican seaport as the basis of specious arguments that have strongly influenced South Americans against us, and led them to suspect our assurances of neighborly friendship. Some deplorable errors made from time to time by our Government in dealing with other Latin American countries have partly justified this attitude of suspicion, but no such errors have been made or are likely to be made by the present Administration.

The acceptance by President WILSON of the A B C proffer of good offices measurably allayed South American suspicion of our motives and silenced for a time our European detractors in those countries, but the prolongation of the occupation of Vera Cruz has produced more ill-feeling. It is of the greatest importance that our neighbors in South America should understand that we cherish no ideas of enlarging our territory, and that we are anxious for the preservation of every Government on this continent which honestly represents the people of a State. The expedition against Vera Cruz was rendered necessary by a studied insult to this country by a Mexican usurper, HUERTA. The occupation of the chief port was not intended as an act of war, though there is little room for doubt that HUERTA was anxious that the United States should make war on Mexico, believing that all Mexican factions would then rally to his support. The elimination of HUERTA removed the cause of our military demonstration, and evacuation of the port has been delayed only by the quarrel between the revolutionary leaders and the childish folly of CARRANZA, who refused, until he was practically forced by events, to assent to the perfectly reasonable conditions we imposed.

Now that the obstacles to our withdrawal have been removed, the order for the evacuation naturally follows. President WILSON's firm determination not to involve this country in war with Mexico is cordially approved throughout the country. If he has ever been possessed of the idea that the presence of our troops in Vera Cruz, and the orderly conduct of affairs there since last April, would tend toward the restoration of peace in Mexico and the settlement of factional disputes, he may still find comfort in the news that hostilities may be suspended until Nov. 20, and in the expressed belief of both adherents of CARRANZA and members of the Aguascalientes Convention that a peaceful settlement of the present factional dispute is not impossible. Americans, however, have grown incredulous about Mexican protestation of peaceful intentions. The rebellious spirit seems to possess the whole country.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

The appointment of Brig. Gen. HUGH L. SCOTT to succeed Gen. WOTHERSPOON as Chief of Staff of the United States Army was a foregone conclusion. He has had as much experience as any of our army officers could have in recent years, and has performed all his duties in a thoroughly competent manner. He gained renown as an Indian fighter, and saw good service in the Philippines. As Chief of Staff he will be expected to do his share nobly toward the solution of the many problems of army management and efficiency which must be met without delay. Gen. SCOTT will receive his commission as Major General next April, when Gen. ARTHUR MURRAY retires.

Meanwhile Brig. Gen. FREDERICK FUNSTON receives immediately the Major Generalship left vacant by the retirement of Gen. WOTHERSPOON. This appointment will be popular, not only in Nebraska, Gen. FUNSTON's State, but throughout the Union. It is to be hoped that the rumors of opposition to the appointment in the Senate will not be verified when Congress meets next month. Gen. FUNSTON deserves his popularity, and the efficiency of his administrative work at Vera Cruz is not to be questioned.

THE HUMAN BOND.

They well deserve to have
That know the strong'st and surest

Thus SHAKESPEARE makes Richard II., in bitter irony, address his ruthless conqueror, Bolingbroke. What the helpless King, standing within the shadow of near death, describes as the moral principle of his foe is avowed without shame by authoritative representatives and apologists of Germany. We do not believe that it is accepted by all Germans. We are persuaded that when the bewildering atmosphere of unexpected war has been cleared and Germans have time to think, many will have brains sufficiently sane and hearts just enough to see how disastrous and how wrong must be this gospel of brute force. And we are still more confident that a very large proportion of the German people, living simple and honest lives, trusting and being trusted, taking and giving the rights of every day in the good faith on which human society rests and must rest, will see that for nations as for individuals honesty is not merely the best but the only possible policy.

It is inevitably so, because those who win by might alone will soon or late quarrel over the winnings, and thus nothing can remain stable; there can be no solid basis for continuous progress; there can be nothing but a chaotic struggle of competing and destructive greeds. NAPOLEON, the most marvelously gifted of the believers in the principle of force, aided by treachery, saw his mighty plans break and crumble because he had aroused ambitions that he could neither satisfy nor still and had awakened longings for revenge against which even his wonderful skill and strength could not defend him. The inherent vice and weakness of the rule of might for right in the end brought even his genius to disaster. It is bound as surely and more swiftly to bring to disaster any combination of Powers that adopts it in these later times.

Unfortunately it cannot be denied that this rule has been adopted, we will not say by Germany as a people, but by the German Government. We have in evidence the statement of the Chancellor of the Empire in the Reichstag, Aug. 4:

> We are now in a state of necessity, and necessity knows no law. Our troops have occupied Luxemburg, and perhaps are already on Belgian soil. Gentlemen, that is contrary to the dictates of international law. * * * The wrong—I speak openly—that we are committing we will endeavor to make good as soon as our military goal is reached. Anybody who is threatened as we are threatened, and is fighting for his highest possessions, can have but one thought, how to carve his way through, (wie er sich durchhaut.)

That is, in plain language, that, war having been declared on Russia and begun against France as the ally of Russia, whatever was deemed necessary for success in that war, the breaking of a pledge, or what not, was justified. In his interview with the British Ambassador, Sir E. GOSCHEN, on the same day, the Chancellor urged Great Britain to promote her own interests by following the same rule. Here is Sir E. GOSCHEN's simple and explicit statement:

> He held Great Britain responsible for all the terrible events that might happen. I protested strongly against that statement, and said that, in the same way as he and Herr VON JAGOW wished me to understand that for strategical reasons it was a matter of life and death to Germany to advance through Belgium and violate the latter's neutrality, so I would wish him to understand that it was, so to speak, a matter of "life and death" for the honor of Great Britain that she should keep her solemn engagement to do her utmost to defend Belgium's neutrality if attacked. That solemn compact simply had to be kept, or what confidence could any one have in engagements given by Great Britain in the future? The Chancellor said, "But at what price will that compact have been kept! Has the British Government thought of that?" I hinted to his Excellency as plainly as I could that fear of consequences could hardly be regarded as an excuse for breaking solemn engagements.

This defines the issue. All that has been said as to the interpretation of the treaty, as to modifications of the obligation of the treaty by later events, by changes in the political organization of Germany, or in the extent of Belgium's domain, is but an afterthought. The German Chancellor, the German Government, on the day that the treaty was repudiated and broken, defiantly announced the right to "carve through" toward the achievement of the end desired.

Now, it is quite true that treaties have been broken in the past, and that those breaking them have been allowed to keep what they have thus gained. But it is also true that respect for treaties has been strengthened in the ratio that civilization has advanced. Not only this, but the scope of treaties has been broadened. Safe intercourse, commerce, the suppression of the slave trade, the protection of life and health, the definition of abstract and purely intellectual interests such as copyright, even the amelioration of the evils of war, even the prevention of war, and the promotion of mutual faith and honor—all these objects have in the course of the last century been sought by treaties. To a substantial degree they have been attained. It would be an incalculable calamity should any nation or combination of nations resting their claims on the open repudiation of the obligation of treaties win in the conflict based on such a contention. This, the record shows, is the case of Germany and Austria. In the conflict the duty of our Government is to maintain neutrality. In the great forum of public opinion it is the right and the duty of all men, of whatever nationality, to form and maintain a just judgment on the merits of that case.

The graphic description of the general headquarters of the German Army in France, a little town on the River Meuse, not to be easily identified, which a correspondent of THE TIMES contributes this morning, is one of the most interesting and not least important chapters of the contemporaneous history of the war. The routine of life as it goes on there is vividly described. The Kaiser, in his habit as he lives day by day on territory his soldiers have conquered, is plainly pictured, not as a plumed knight but as a soberly attired officer gravely attending to his duties. One cannot help admiring the discipline and order with which the Germans have gone about the business of this war, and the correspondent's tribute to the uniform courtesy of all the soldiers he met is well worth noting. The account of the daily goings on in this military town will be a revelation to our readers.

GERMANY'S POETS

Have Not Been Dominated by the Narrow Prussian Kulturcry.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your "Culture versus Kultur" correspondent seems to me almost as clouded as the discussions he refers to in the beginning of his article. The distinction mentioned undoubtedly exists, and Kultur in the sense defined is surely the overpowering watchword —not of Germany—but of Prussia. The definition itself, it would seem, is gleaned from the study of some one of the famous Prusso-German Kulturgeschichten, rather than from closer touch with the greater German "culture" itself. In this Kultur Prussia sees her mission to the Empire as a whole, and through her untiring devotion to it she has accomplished marvels for the Empire, and—before the war—had found admirers and imitators in every land. Today, to be sure, it is a tainted gift which no pious man will accept without proper apologies.

But the poets—and Germany has an illustrious array of them today, even though they do not command much attention in the Kulturgeschichten; I mention simply Dehmel, Hauptmann, and Thomas Mann, who, as lyrist, dramatist, and novelist, respectively, have found recognition and appreciation in Europe and America, (before the war)—the poets have not been dominated by this Kulturery. As poets everywhere they, too, are merciless dissectors of modern man and modern life, and perhaps more than many, more than the English certainly, are champions of a new order and a new synthesis—the European man. In this they showed little love for the existing state of things and, I admit, oftentimes received little applause from the zealous Prussian Kulturmensch. But this Kulturbattle worried the poets so little that they were seldom even incited to a direct attack upon it; but more often quietly disregarded it, showing and knowing at the same time that their work was at heart a struggle for a higher human order, which struggle necessitated an investigation of existing conditions and the investigation again necessitated a courageous skepticism.

I cannot see how any one can have read the works of the better German poets of the last thirty years and come to any other conclusion. Nor am I speaking of Nietzsche followers, as many a catchword artist may claim. While rather insignificant in itself, still in this connection it is important that not a few of the most powerful pioneers of "culture" of Scandinavia, Russia, and to some extent England, were translated and influential in Germany before they were recognised at home.

The war, of course, has changed all this, and will change it permanently perhaps, not because the Kulturmensch will rule supreme, but because the war has done away with all misunderstanding and intolerance, and must bring about a harmony which will contain only the best of both forces.

The Wrong Done to Belgium.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The letter of C. Stuart Gager, published in THE TIMES, deserves the commendation of every American. At the outset of this terrible war doubtless many felt as he did, having rather admired the thrift and painstaking qualities of our German neighbors. However, the barbarous occupation of guiltless Belgium and the wholesale massacre of her inhabitants have changed sentiments of admiration into those of deepest horror at so-called "German culture," and the former friendly feeling toward the Teuton evaporates as page after page of the war's annals unfolds. Like Mr. Gager's, the writer's family have been "natives of America for nearly three hundred years," so in this case also no recent environment impels this letter, and it is quite probable that a vote taken from the majority of patriotic societies would turn in an overwhelming tide of sympathy for the gallant and oppressed Belgians. As for German militarists, from the Kaiser down, one thing can be truly said: "The tree is known by its fruit."

The Times's Diplomatic Papers.

From The Hull (England) Daily Mail.

THE NEW YORK TIMES has rendered splendid service to the cause of justice and truth by publication in the United States, in a form and at a moment that arrested the instant and grave attention of many thousands of minds, of the "White Papers" of England and Germany, and the "Orange Paper" of Russia, together with other diplomatic documents and correspondence, which constitute a most complete record of the causes of the war yet issued.

The publication, we are glad to know, has had a very large sale, and we do not think that a greater service could have been done this country than that which has been so well accomplished by THE NEW YORK TIMES.

We owe a great debt of gratitude to our American contemporary. A great newspaper has worthily carried out a great and much-needed task, and it has rendered our country and people a service we find it difficult adequately to acknowledge.

REFUGEES AT DINARD.

Two Thousand Francs Received by Mrs. Duryea from Times Readers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your readers will be gratified to learn the results of the appeal you recently published from my sister, Mrs. Nina L. Duryea, in behalf of the wounded and Belgian refugees at Dinard. They are described in a private letter to me, which has just arrived, dated Oct. 22, to wit:

I have received over 2,000 francs already from my appeal in THE TIMES. I sent 500 francs to London and bought splendid flannel and yarn. Then I advertised in the tiny paper here for knitters and plain sewers, and I pay them a small wage to make large chest and back protectors. The yarn I am having knitted into wristers and stomach bands—so nice and warm for the poor soldiers. Thus the poor are helped to earn and the wounded are benefited. I have Mrs. Bell to help select the workers, because she knows well who of the poor are most deserving and wretched.

Only yesterday a poor creature, whose husband had been killed, had a baby. I gave her all the clothes the poor little naked stranger needed. It was heart-touching to see her thankful surprise. We now have over 4,000 wounded soldiers here, besides several thousand homeless and helpless starving Belgian refugees. We are so far to the west that no Red Cross help has reached us, and yet the whole country is filled with sufferers, who are wholly dependent upon the limited help we can furnish. If possible, get people to ship me a case of half-worn coats and trousers. The slightly wounded have to stay in bed while their ragged uniforms are cleaned and mended.

A group of eight little girls arrived recently with a batch of refugees, having partly walked and partly been carried nearly 200 miles, their parents either having been killed or lost in the wild flight, and so young that not one of them knew their names or where their homes had been. Paris has its millionaires, with many splendid hospitals, while we are dependent upon our own personal means. So, do ask people to deny themselves just a little—a cigar or a cocktail each day, or an evening at the play, and send us each their contribution. We have had not one adequate surgeon, but at last a fine Englishman has come, but he has exhausted his supply of gas, and many wounded are dying from the shock and pain of operating without it. It is sickening! Ask people to help us, and they will receive blessings forever.

The undersigned will gladly receive contributions of money or clothing, which will be promptly accounted for and acknowledged.

The "Extra Crew" Law.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to call your attention to a point which may not have come to your notice in regard to this so-called full crew legislation. "Full crew" is a misnomer in describing the demands made by the unions. What they are really demanding is not merely a full crew, but an extra crew—and this legislation can properly be referred to only as the "extra crew law."

I do not know what use, if any, the railroads have made of this fact. But it would seem to me that this slight difference in a word might have clarified the situation to such an extent that the public would have opposed such legislation from the beginning, and that the so-called "full crew" laws might never have been passed.

I think I am one of a numerous and growing class of citizens who feel that agitation against the railroads has been overdone, and that the least we can give them now is fairness and accuracy in the use of words to denominate ideas and measures for and against them.

A Budget by Business Men.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Let Mayor Mitchel appoint a commission of business men to act in conjunction with the Board of Estimate in the construction of the yearly budget of this great city. Who among our citizens are better qualified than business men to deal with the budget situations so vital to the economic stability of our city? There are many intelligent, experienced, capable, and far-seeing men of business in our city who would feel honored by their selection as budget makers and whose very knowledge of just such affairs would enable the city to point with pride to a budget, the result of the work of such a commission. The acme of economy would be reached and the city's finance placed upon a basis never before attained.

Business men of this city put their hands in their pockets to help pay the city's bills. Then why, apart from other essentials, should they not have intrusted to them and reposed in them a share in the making of the budget of the city? HARRY D. FLECK.

Noisy Alarm Clocks.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Every morning, between the hours of 5 and 7 o'clock, there are, by exact count, seven alarm clocks to disturb the rest of everybody in this neighborhood of Riverside Drive, as they surely must, for three of them are not the tinkling sort, but veritable gongs, and intermittent.

Now, one will scarcely believe that their inconsiderate owners sleep through the first, and sometimes the second, "period of alarm" before stopping the horrible noise. Seven o'clock is my rising hour and not a late one, but every morning I am kept awake for two hours before that time, for one clock no sooner ceases than another lifts up its hideous voice. I have lived in New York for twelve years and know the noises of this city, but this is the most annoying thing I have experienced and totally unnecessary, for any one who wishes to rise at an hour when most other people are sleeping can be called by a hall boy, as there is an all-night attendant in every house in this neighborhood. Daughters of the British Empire.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You have always so readily given publicity to any notice sent to you by the Imperial Order Daughters of the British Empire that I feel I should like through your valuable newspaper to thank the many who have anonymously contributed to our war relief work, giving us no opportunity of acknowledging their generosity personally, and to state that large consignments of hospital supplies and equipments of all kinds, clothing for civilian and refugee population, and comforts for the soldiers and sailors at the "front" go from 105 Chambers Street, New York City, every Saturday direct to London and authorized centres for distribution. All further gifts should be sent to the below address, care of Mrs. George Quirk, before noon on the Wednesday previous to the sailing.

Dr. Hall's Defense of Germany.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The criticism aroused by the pro-German interview with the Rev. Thomas C. Hall, published by you recently, was perhaps due to the novelty of a defense of Germany by some one not visibly a German. If it had been known to the critics of Dr. Hall that he was born in Ireland, that he finished his education at Berlin and Goettingen, that he married a German wife, and that he has passed years in Germany, they would probably have understood his position and would not have criticised it more severely than that of a German born.

SPARE THE DAIRY CATTLE.

Those in Chicago Will Not Spread Disease, Says C. I. Hudson.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Most people, when they read of the prevalence and spread of the dreaded foot-and-mouth disease, think only of the higher prices for meat that they will have to pay. But there is another aspect of the question which is equally, if not more, important, and that is the effect of the spread of the disease on the dairy products of the country. Beef animals have been slaughtered without any hesitation, in efforts to check the spread of the disease, and also dairy cows of no particular breed, the ordinary "scrub" animals; but when it comes to the pure-bred dairy stock, indiscriminate slaughter would be nothing short of a crime, so both National and State officials have stayed their hands. And this is as it should be. A beef steer will produce in his carcass by two years' growth 200 pounds of edible dry matter as human food, but this ends his usefulness; whereas, there are pure-bred dairy cows which have produced as much edible solids in one year of life as is furnished by twenty-five such beef steers, and the dairy cow will continue to do this for a good many consecutive years.

The value, too, of these pure-bred dairy cows as breeding animals greatly and incalculably increases their importance to the country. There are 22,000,000 dairy cattle in the United States, and 20,000,000 families. When the proportionate number of males and young animals are deducted from the 22,000,000 dairy cattle, it will be apparent that there is not one dairy cow in the country for each family. And the vast majority of the dairy cows are "just cows," about one-quarter of them only paying for their own board, and another quarter being kept at an actual loss to their owners. What wonder, then, that the United States has to import more than $10,000,000 worth of dairy products each year?

To remedy this very undesirable and even humiliating condition of the dairy business in such a great agricultural country as the United States, enterprising and patriotic people of means have been for years importing pure-bred dairy stock, mainly of the Jersey, the Guernsey, the Holstein-Friesian, the Ayrshire and the Brown Swiss breeds. Nearly 800 of these, imported animals and others bred in this country from imported stock, the finest prize animals of their respective breeds, were sent in October to be shown at the National Dairy Show at the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, those concerned having no knowledge of the fact that cases of the foot-and-mouth disease had developed in certain sections of the Middle West. Now these 800 very valuable animals have been quarantined, cases of the disease, contracted at the stock yards, having been discovered among them. Had they been ordinary cattle, they would all have been slaughtered immediately. But shall these superbossies die? Then 20,000 of our leading and influential citizens will know the reason why. So Secretary of Agriculture Houston has stayed his hand, in recognition of the great value to the dairying interests of the country of the picked animals assembled for the National Dairy Show.

In the Jersey breed, noted for its beauty and dairy efficiency, we find such people actively interested as the late James Ben Ali Haggin, James J. Hill, Mrs. George Fabyan, William du Pont, C. I. Hudson, various members of the Vanderbilt family, August Belmont, J. K. Dering, James C. Colgate, T. De Witt Cuyler, Howard Willets, George W. Vanderbilt, Percival Roberts, George T. Slade, as well as a great host of dairy farmers, East, West, North, and South.

Connected with the Guernsey breed we find such men as F. Lothrop Ames, R. Scoville, Ambrose Clark, Clarence Mackay, John Henry Hammond, Grant B. Schley, H. Howe, M. T. Ryan, and W. W. Marsh of Iowa. John R. Valentine, Hugh J. Chisolm, Patrick Ryan, F. L. Stetson, and William Frazier Harrison are prominently identified with the Ayrshires; Theodore N. Vail and Coleman du Pont with the Brown Swiss; while the Holstein interests vitally affect many large and important dairy farms, which send the great cities the bulk of their daily milk supply.

The cases of foot-and-mouth disease among the dairy cattle at the Union Stock Yards have been mostly of a very mild nature, those affected are recovering; notwithstanding, many people all over the country are now anxiously watching the course of events in Chicago, and are using their influence to have these fine cattle spared from slaughter, every precaution being taken, however, that the dairy cows will not themselves be the means of adding to the further spread of the disease.

Street Cleaning Reform.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The sweeping and gathering of ashes at night is the only real solution of the street cleaning problem. It is successfully carried out in cities abroad. Why not in New York? A great hindrance would probably be the increase in force of the Street Cleaning Department, as the present plan of storekeepers doing their own sweeping in front of shops would have to be abolished. The campaign of reforms should concentrate its efforts to overcome the minor obstacles which are in the way in placing the night method into service. Then the people of New York will have a more cheerful sight in the morning and, what's more, clean and dustless streets during the day.

The Makers of Army Supplies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In connection with the urgent appeals for Belgian and other relief, I would like to ask what help, if any, is being received from the firms in this country manufacturing and selling army supplies of all kinds, who, in their anxiety for large profits are, in the final analysis, making necessary still further appeals for help. This without raising the question of neutrality.

THE MEN OF THE EMDEN.

What matter if you
Be stanch and true
To the British blood in the veins of you,
When it's "hip hurrah!" for a deed
well done,
For a fight well fought and a race well run—
What matter if you be true?
Hats off to the Emden's crew!

Theirs was the life of the storm-god's folk,
Uncounted miles from the Fatherland,
With a foe beneath every wisp of smoke,
And a menace in every strip of strand.
Up, glasses! Paul Jones was but one of these,
Hull, Bainbridge, Decatur, their brothers, too!
(Ha! those pirate nights
In a ring of foes,
When you douse your lights
And drive home your blows!)
Hats off to the Emden's crew!

Erect on the wave-washed decks stood they
And heard with a Viking's grim delight
The whirr of the wings of death by day
And the voice of death in their dreams by night!
Under the sweep of the wings of death,
By the blazing gun, in the tempest's breath,
While a world of enemies strove and
fumed,
Remote, unaided, undaunted, doomed,
They stood—is there any, friend or foe,
Who will choke a cheer?—who can still but scoff?
No, no, by the gods of valor, no!
To the Emden's crew—
Hats off!

GLYNN ON THANKSGIVING.

Refers to Blessings of Peace While Europe Is Torn by War.

ALBANY, Nov. 14.—A proclamation designating Thursday, Nov. 26 as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer in this State was issued today by Gov. Glynn. It follows:

For the manifold blessings that Almighty God has showered upon the people of New York during the past year; for prosperous industries and fertile fields; for contented homes and peaceful marts; for the growing recognition that whatever is of solid benefit to a single division of our people must in time be of benefit to the people as a whole; for the extension of education and the fostering of the arts and sciences; for our preservation from flood and famine, plague and drought; for these tokens of the benignant and beneficent care of a watchful Providence, it is becoming that the people of New York should gather to offer thanks to Almighty God.

While in sorrow and compassion we view the misery and devastation which a world-war has brought to our fellow beings across the ocean; while we look aghast at unharvested fields dyed with the blood of brave men, and wet with the tears of women and little children; at homes destroyed; at commerce palsied; at proud cities leveled to the dust and progress giving way to desolation, our minds turn in gratitude to Him who has kept our nation whole and unharmed.

Now, therefore, I, Martin H. Glynn, Governor of the State of New York, by virtue of the authority vested in me by law, and in accordance with the honorable custom of my office, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-sixth day of November, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and call upon the people of this State to cease from their wonted occupations on that day that they may repair to their homes and places of worship and offer thanks to Almighty God."

Byrdcliffe Pottery on View at Little Gallery—Palace Screens.

At the Little Gallery until Nov. 28 is an exhibition of the Byrdcliffe pottery that should interest those concerned for the future of our native crafts. This pottery is a true handicraft, personally developed, without compromise in favor of any kind of machine, without even the intervention of the "potter's wheel." The clay is built up and shaped by hand, and the three associated potters, Edith Penman, Elisabeth Hardenburgh, and Mabel Davison, do the entire work, from the preparing of the clay to the final firing, at Byrdcliffe, Woodstock, a few miles back of the Hudson River. The kilns are in sheds out in the open air, and the very sensitive color sense, that finds expression in lovely combinations of robin's-egg blue with mulberry and brown, is fed by a peculiarly fine variety of pine woods and sunsets.

Miss Penman and Miss Hardenburgh started this hand-modeled pottery in New York about ten years ago, and during the earlier years the pieces were fired by the late Charles Volkman. Each year a new color has been developed such as "Byrdcliffe Blue," "Apple Green," and this year's poetically named "Withered Rose." The chief aim of the potters is, perhaps, color. If the color of a piece is good, that is, they keep it, even though the form may have been pretty badly warped in the kiln. In general, however, the form has improved greatly since their ware first came before the public. In one of the larger jars in the exhibition the line flows as rhythmically as in a Greek amphora. The absence of the delightful tableware shown in the summer exhibitions of this pottery is a disappointment. The motto of our individual potteries seems to be "Millions for daffodils but not one pot for salt!" All the rose beds of Belgium could not furnish enough blossoms to fill the vases made by American craftsmen.

The palace screens in the Lechevrel Collection of Oriental objects of art are the principal features of the collection, which was formed during a residence of thirteen years in China. There are three of these screens, consisting each of twelve wood panels, painted, incised, and lacquered. The backgrounds are black lacquer and the scenes represented are of the most elaborate description, forming continuous pictures, in which appear landscapes, architecture, figures of persons and animals, and the ornamental detail of Chinese Court life. The height of these screens is between eight and nine feet and their length is about nineteen feet. Each panel is separate, and the Occidental finds it difficult to understand their construction unless he knows their native use as the walls of a room, the panels fitting in grooves at the top and bottom of the room, and sliding, like the doors of a bookcase, to afford exit and entrance. The decoration of these screens appears on both sides of the panels, one side having a more elaborate design than the other. The color, especially in No. 789 of the catalogue, is delightful, with a characteristic preponderance of green and rose. Figures of carved white marble form another feature of the collection, and the lovely line of the draperies, unfolding slowly like the line of a flower petal, is most apparent in the simplest of the figures standing opposite the Kwannon at the entrance to the exhibition room, a graceful little goddess, 8 feet 4 inches in height and as delicately formed as a lotus blossom.

In Boston they seem to have done the thing New York artists have been trying to do semi-annually whenever the question of saving Central Park comes up. They have organized a "Guild of Boston Artists," painters, sculptors, and miniaturists, and the organization "carries with it the equipment of a building centrally located in the Back Bay district where there will be ample space for exhibitions, collective and individual, as well as show rooms for the sale of pictures and the like."

This arrangement has grown out of the fact that Boston never has had a general annual exhibition to which all contribute as in the case of most of the other large cities, and the Boston artists wish to gain for their city, in which they take a mediaeval kind of pride, the kind of celebrity in their field which it has gained in music through the efforts and achievements of the Symphony Orchestra. The guild is to stand for good workmanship, an assurance that anything produced will be up to a certain standard. Edmund C. Tarbell is President.

The meeting of the Architectural League next Tuesday will be dedicated to protests against the desecration of world-famous works in time of war. Thomas Hastings will present a resolution embodying protest and Ralph Adams Cram will deliver a lecture. Lantern slides will be shown of the principal historic buildings in Northern France and Belgium.

At the Folsom Galleries the paintings of Athos Casarini show his gradual evolution from the influence of Ettore Tito to the influence of the Futurists. Many of his paintings are interesting in color, and he can draw with vigor and animation, as his sketch of a cow scratching her head with her hoof testifies. A cartoon in color of the vulture of war and its prey gives admirable proof that the kind of training these new young painters are giving themselves adds to their effectiveness in the poster field, if nowhere else.

The Belgian Fund was increased by $7,962.42 yesterday, making a total of more than $465,000. Of this total $400,000 will be immediately used in the purchase of food cargoes for the two steamers that the Rockefeller Foundation is to send to Europe for the relief of the Belgian people next week. Subscriptions to the Belgian Fund should be sent to J. P. Morgan & Co., 23 Wall Street, or to the Belgian Relief Committee, 8 and 10 Bridge Street.

STARTS NEW RED CROSS AID.

Woman Hotel Managers Heads Employes in Mercy Work.

Three weeks ago Mrs. Robert Stafford, lessee of the Hotel Imperial, decided that the contribution in money that she had made to the Red Cross was not enough. Through her efforts to do more she is sending next week, through the Red Cross, a box of useful things to the wounded of each of six of the warring nations, as gifts from her friends, the employes and patrons of the Imperial.

Mrs. Stafford dictated a little statement that a subscription was being raised to procure things for the wounded and sick soldiers of England, France, Germany, Belgium, Russia and Austria, and invited her friends to join her in such a movement. Any subscriber could specify which nationals should receive the articles bought by his or her subscription. She headed her paper with a subscription of $100. Mr. and Mrs. Copeland Townsend, L. D. Smith, and Mr. and Mrs. L. H. Green immediately wrote down their names. Inside of three hours more than $300 had been raised in the hotel.

"I have been simply deluged with money," said Mrs. Stafford yesterday. "I had no idea that such a simple beginning would bring such results. And one thing has struck me—that in making their contributions, not more than half a dozen persons signified their desire that their money should go to any one particular nation. This is evidence of practical neutrality in giving to those who are in need of assistance."

CHRISTMAS SHIP OFF TO SOFTEN WAR WOE

Collier Jason Carries Away America's Good-Will and Presents for 5,000,000.

CITY SENDS "GODSPEED"

Noisy Demonstration at Departure —More Than 60 Carloads of Toys and Clothing.

The big United States collier Jason steamed out of New York Harbor shortly after noon yesterday loaded to the decks with Christmas presents for the orphaned, widowed, and wounded of the warring nations of Europe.

She will be the first Santa Claus ship to cross the ocean. Her mission is unique, and because of this, her sailing was the occasion for ceremony. Lieut. Commander C. E. Courtney, U. S. N., who is in charge of the ship, received an official "Godspeed" from Acting Mayor McAneny, representing the city, and hundreds of persons visited the vessel before she sailed and waved to her from pier ends until she was almost out of the bay.

The Jason sailed from Norton, Lilly & Co.'s pier, at the Bush Terminal, South Brooklyn. As she slipped her moorings and moved out into the harbor, whistles on dozens of vessels near by were set going—some shrill, some deep—and between the blasts from the friendly boats, the deep-toned siren of the Jason answered. This sound of steam, mingled with the shouts of those on the piers and the music of the Boy Band from St. John's Home in Brooklyn, made the going of the Jason noisy and spectacular.

The officers and crew of the Christmas ship will not see America again for many weeks, for they must take their presents to several ports, from which the warring nations can be reached. The ship is expected to stop first at Falmouth, England, on Nov. 26, where the presents for the Belgians and the English will be unloaded. The next port will be Marseilles, reached on Dec. 5, where the French presents will be discharged. At Genoa on Dec. 10 presents for Germans and Austrians will be put off and the gifts for the Servians will be left at Saloniki on Dec. 16. From this port the Jason, it is expected, will return to the United States. The goods will be distributed by United States Consuls and representatives of the foreign governments.

Gifts for Millions.

Five million individuals will be reached by the cargo of the Jason, in the estimation of Major F. H. Lawton, U. S. A., the Quartermaster, who superintended the loading of the ship. The presents that will go to this number are in 10,000 large packing cases and 10,000 express packages. They made more than sixty carloads of merchandise. And, contrary to belief in some quarters, only a comparatively small part of the merchandise is toys. There are five carloads of toys for the orphans abroad, but there are fourteen carloads of children's clothes, five carloads of women's clothing, one carload of man's clothing, and boxes upon boxes of food, shoes, and miscellaneous goods. The ship will be a Santa Claus ship to thousands of children, but it will be a giver of comfort as well as pleasure to them.

The ceremonies incident to the sailing of the Jason began on board at 9:30 in the morning, when the police boat Patrol came alongside with the representatives of the City Government. These were President McAneny of the Board of Aldermen, who represented the Mayor; Borough Presidents Pounds of Brooklyn, Connolly, and Miller, and Commissioner McCormack of Richmond, Fire Commissioner Adamson, Bridge Commissioner Kracke, Dock Commissioner R. A. C. Smith, Commissioner of Correction Katharine B. Davis, City Record Supervisor Ferguson, and Theodore Rousseau, Secretary to the Mayor.

These, with those who were already on the boat, gathered in the main dining saloon, and Dock Commissioner Smith took charge as master of ceremonies. He first introduced Mr. Rousseau, who extended the commander Courtney the Mayor's regrets at being forced to be in Philadelphia, and delivered the Mayor's "Godspeed" to the officer and his crew. Acting Mayor McAneny was then introduced as the city's official representative. He spoke of the pride that the whole country took in the ship, and of the pride the city felt in having her sail from this port. He expressed the hope that the Jason's reception abroad would be as happy as her send-off here.

James Keeley, proprietor of The Chicago Herald, which paper, with The New York World, and more than 200 other newspapers all over the country, fostered the idea of the Christmas ship, was next called upon to speak. As the originator of the plan of sending the vessel, he, of all those present, was perhaps most affected by the occasion. He spoke of the material gone the cargo of the ship would be to the war sufferers and of the message of cheer she would take to cheerless lands.

A Message from America's Heart.

"But," he added, "the real beauty of this message is that it is graven on the heart of America itself. The physical voyage of the Jason will soon be over, but the spirit of the Christmas ship will sail on and on, and touch at many ports, ports that are hearts all over the world. The spirit with which this vessel sails is illustrated by the two little boys who sent us $1.15 they had been saving since the first of the year to buy canary birds with. And I want to tell you of one present on board whose presence illustrates this spirit. A little girl was sent to the penitentiary in Illinois. She was such a little thing that when she asked permission to take her doll into the penitentiary with her she was allowed to do so. She was put in a cell by herself as she was too small to be locked up with a grown woman, and her only companion was her doll. That doll is on this boat."

John Callan O'Loughlin, who left on the Jason to take charge of the delivery of her cargo, was next called upon. He told of the gifts that had come from Texas and San Francisco and all over the country, he thanked the men and women who had helped in getting the ship ready for her voyage, and he spoke of the liberality of the United States Government in giving the vessel, soldiers and sailors needed. He particularly thanked the women of Governor's Island, the wives of the officers there, for giving the desired feminine touch.

Mrs. William K. Draper, Secretary of the Red Cross Society in New York, did not want to make a speech, but she was called for so insistently that she consented to "talk" for a few minutes. She said that it had given her great pleasure to assist in getting the Jason ready and that she was glad the Red Cross Society had had a hand in the work. After she finished the more or less formal nature of the ceremonies was abandoned, and the personal good wishes of all aboard were given to Commander Courtney.

Among those present on the boat who assisted in the work of preparation were: Major and Mrs. O. E. Hine, Mrs. E. G. Cheney, Col. and Mrs. Louis Breishman, Mrs. Leonard Wood, Capt. and Mrs. H. Dorey, Major and Mrs. Charles Satzman, Major and Mrs. F. H. Lawton, Col. and Mrs. William Black, Col. and Mrs. George Young, Capt. and Mrs. Bryant Wells, Lieut. and Mrs. E. S. Miller, Miss Helen Kracke, Mrs. George McAneny, Mrs. Theodore Rousseau, S. S. Norton, President of Norton, Lilly & Co., and F. A. Bishop, President of the Iron Steamboat Company.

DANIELS'S TRIBUTE TO JASON.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Secretary of the Navy sent the following radiogram to J. C. O'Laughlin, in charge of the Christmas cargo, soon after the Jason weighed anchor:

"Commanding officer, U. S. S. Jason, for J. C. O'Laughlin:

"My hope and prayer is that the Jason may have clear skies and fair winds on his auspicious voyage to Europe, laden as never ship was before, with a precious Christmas cargo, prompted by the generosity and hallowed by the sympathy of American childhood. Tiny Tim has his counterpart in thousands of orphaned little ones in the Old World today, crippled by ruthless war, not actually, but in present happiness and future opportunity. God bless them, every one, and may the Christmas spirit which actuates American children to send these gifts help to hasten the day when 'Peace on earth, good will to men,' shall be a blessed reality, and when nations shall go to war no more.

"JOSEPHUS DANIELS."

FIND NOTHING GOOD IN EUROPE'S TRAMS

NO ROOM FOR COMPARISON

Neither Service, Fares, Nor Wages Satisfactory to the Public or the Workers.

The American Federation of Labor's Commission on Municipal Ownership of Street Railways in Europe has made a report of its investigations, in which it finds that the condition of employes is no better on publicly owned lines than on those privately owned in Europe, that on both it is far below that of employes of privately owned American lines, and that on municipal lines abroad the cost to passengers is considerably greater than here, and the service inferior.

The members of the commission were William D. Mahon, President of the Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employes of America, and L. D. Bland. Their investigations covered Germany, France, Switzerland, Italy, England, and Scotland.

In Germany they found that 134 lines were in the hands of private companies and the other 75 were owned and operated by local administrative bodies.

"In some cases," they say, "there is joint ownership by the municipalities and private parties, and we were informed that there is a tendency to place the operation of these jointly owned properties in the hands of private parties in order to avoid and to evade the responsibility of operation and of dealing with the labor question."

H. Rathmann, tramway representative of the Transportation Workers, is quoted as saying in a report that the 1,000 members of the Private Railwaymen's Union, which is alleged to be a bogus union set up by the management, under the patronage of the Prussian Parliament, "are oppressed by officials in the executive, whose whole purpose is to produce patriotic slaves."

Government Hard on Unions.

"We were able," says the report, "to obtain the wages paid to the motormen and conductors by 192 concerns, both municipal and privately owned companies, and we could not see any great difference between them. The German tram workers have suffered from lack of unified effort. Employing concerns have attacked their movements and Governmental authority has been anything but favorable to them."

In France it was found that all the tramways were privately owned, while in Switzerland thirty-three were privately owned and eight were operated by municipalities. In Basle several years ago the refusal of the worker' demands by the municipal authorities led to a strike which was settled by the grant of some concessions. On the privately owned lines wages were a trifle less than on the municipal roads.

In Rome the wage on the municipal line was found to be 10 cents a day higher than on the privately owned roads but other conditions were about the same.

In London, where the County Council owns and operates all the tram lines in the county, it was found that since the privately owned electric motor buses had been installed a large number of tramemployes had left the service to operate buses, because higher wages were paid.

In Glasgow it was found that the employes of the municipal trams were organized up to 1911, when they made demands that were refused and went on strike.

"Their strike," says the report, "was fought as viciously by the municipality as it could be by any private employer. The General Manager was given absolute power by the City Council to deal with the men in any manner that he saw fit. He succeeded in breaking the strike, and more than 400 of the men were victimized and never allowed to return to the service. A little later the City Council conceded that the men's contest for shorter hours and better pay was right, and granted it.

High Fares in Glasgow.

"Glasgow and suburbs have more than 1,000,000 population, with 194 miles of street car track. Cities with one-fourth the population in this country carry much more trackage.

"The fares on the Glasgow system vary from 1 cent to 14 cents, according to distance. The average ride for 1 cent is 1.15 miles, and so on up to the 14-cent fare when the average ride is 14.48 miles. Fares are collected on the zone system. When a passenger rides from one zone into another he pays an additional fare. Of a total of 336,654,624 cent fares realized by the Glasgow Corporation last year, 211,462,484, or 62.81 per cent., represented one-cent fares.

"This is offered as proof that the public is enjoying cheap fares. This is not correct, for the Glasgow, like all other European systems, municipal and private, does not issue transfers, and a passenger may ride on several lines to reach his destination, and have to pay an additional fare on each. On every line he is a cash passenger, and helps swell the total class of fare he happens to pay.

"So the so-called cheap fare of Glasgow, as of Europe generally, is not so cheap when the small distance it covers is considered, and certainly not cheap when compared with the buying power of the workers, as reflected in the impossible wage they receive."

The general conclusions reported follow:

"The tram systems of Europe are not to be compared with the street railway systems of the United States. Throughout continental Europe and the United Kingdom, in the most thickly populated centres, the street railway service is inferior to ours in many respects. In the continental cities the track mileage is small compared with the United States. This contributes to density of traffic and profitable operation. The same is true of the United Kingdom, whose total street railway trackage is about 3,000 miles, as against 40,470 miles operated in the United States.

"We found the same spirit of commercialism dominating the electric railway systems of Europe, private and municipal, as exists in this country. If any credit is to be given either, it because, in our opinion, on this side of the water, for the American system, to our minds, is not only cheaper to the public, all things considered, but the service is better with a great deal more of it.

Better for Workers Here.

"Cheap fares on the zone system prove dear fares to the worker if he has to ride any considerable distance or take intersecting lines, for each zone entered means an additional fare, and there are no transfers on European systems. Zone fares and inadequate wages force the workers of Europe to live close to the workshop, mill, and factory. It is rare to find a European worker who can afford to live in suburb or country, miles away from his work, as is frequently the case here. The rate of fare for long distance makes it prohibitive and the wage will not warrant the expenditure.

"Thus the zone fare system contributes to congestion and compels the workers to live in the most uninviting districts. It retards suburban development and adds to the rents of the workers, who not only have to suffer the inconvenience of small living quarters, but are denied sunlight and sanitary surroundings as well.

"And right here we desire to comment that, with all the claim for legislative enactments helpful to the workers, municipal utility enterprise, and co-operative development, we found the living standards of the workers of Europe, tram as well as others, so far below the average of the workers of America that no comparison is possible. The inability with which the workers of Europe were grasping the truth that their efforts must be concentrated in the economic field through their trades unions was the most hopeful sign that this condition would be altered.

"None of the European systems has a night car service such as we have in our big cities. Nor have they an interurban electric service, that has contributed so much to the development of our rural districts and brought the consumer and producer in close relationship.

Wages Incomparable.

"Nor is there any comparison between the wage of the European tram employe and his brother in the United States. From the viewpoint of the purchasing power of a dollar, it has been estimated that the cost of living in various parts of the United States is 25 to 65 per cent. higher than it is in various parts of Western Europe.

"The difference in the money wage of the street railway men of these countries is much greater. The highest wage paid any body of tramway workers in Europe is safely 100 per cent. less than the rate paid in this country in the same occupation, and we found this to be the fact both on private and municipal systems.

"Our investigation showed that wherever the tram workers of Europe enjoyed advanced wage and labor conditions their trades unions were responsible for them. Where the trades unions are active there the best results obtain, and whether dealing with a municipality or a private company, the employes have found it necessary to maintain their unions to establish and protect their conditions."

CONFIRMS BEDFORD CHARGE

John H. Delaney Says Girls Were Ill-Treated in the Reformatory.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Nov. 14.—Dr. Rudolph F. Diedling's statement of conditions at Bedford Hills Reformatory is supported by John H. Delaney, Commissioner of Efficiency and Economy. Mr. Delaney said today that an examination of the reformatory had been made by his department in September and the conditions were such that he brought them to the attention of the Superintendent and Board of Managers of the institution.

"Charles H. Jackson, Chief Examiner of the department, spent two days at Bedford," said Mr. Delaney, "and found that very severe punishment was inflicted upon girls who had run away of who had been violent in the dormitories. In the isolation building three girls were found. One of them had been there for ninety days and the two others for thirty days. The cells in which the girls had spent this time were absolutely bare of furniture, and during the day they were compelled to sit on the floor. For breakfast and supper dry bread was served, but they had a substantial dinner in the middle of the day.

"The correctional record showed that a short time before one of the girls had been put in leg irons and strapped to a bed for twenty-four hours in one of these cells.

"Mr. Jackson at once brought these facts to the attention of the Superintendent, who expressed her disapproval of the methods and of the cells, but said that there were no adequate provisions for caring for the girls who were violent. Arrangements were made for the officials of Bedford to study the modern successful and humane treatment of similar cases at the Elmira Reformatory and the Gowanda State Hospital for the Insane. The Assistant Superintendent of Bedford, Miss Taft, spent two days at Elmira.

"I am surprised at the statement of the former Superintendent, Miss Katharine B. Davis, now Commissioner of Corrections in New York City, that the conditions described were not known to her. It is reported to me that the isolation building, where such severe punishment is inflicted on the girls, was built during Dr. Davis's term, and was used by her for twelve years in the punishment of violent cases."

DIDN'T VOUCH FOR ATROCITY

Pastor Says He Merely Used Tale of Maimed Children to Point a Lesson.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Nov. 14.—The Rev. Hugh B. MacCauley, Pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, denied today that in a recent sermon he had said that he knew of a woman near Paterson who had adopted two Belgian boys, made homeless by the war, and had found on their arrival that they had their hands cut off. The report that he had mentioned the story aroused considerable resentment among Germans and German sympathisers.

"I merely mentioned the rumor about these two boys, which I had heard," said Mr. MacCauley, "as an illustration in a sermon. I expressly stated that my information was not definite and that I did not vouch for the story; I gave it merely as an instance of earthly care for the unfortunate to show how much greater and more tender was the divine charity toward us, and its value as an illustration was quite independent of its accordance with fact. I did not mention the Germans nor did I say anything about atrocities. I have been connected with a number of charitable organizations which are engaged in relief work for the victims of the war, and for this reason, as well as for others, I have studiously avoided any criticism of either side in the war. I gave this story merely as I might give any other incident as an illustration. I do not know if it is true or not. My own information on the subject is very vague, and I should not be surprised if the story is at least greatly exaggerated."

Mr. MacCauley would not give information about the woman who was said to have adopted the children, saying that if the story were true, it would cause notoriety that would be unpleasant to them; but he intimated that in view of the widespread exaggeration of his remarks he might investigate the story thoroughly.

TO FIND JOBS FOR JOBLESS.

New Municipal Employment Bureau Opens Tomorrow.

The new Municipal Employment Bureau will be opened tomorrow, at Lafayette and Leonard Streets.

The New York Bureau will include nine sub-divisions, with a separate department for women, and is prepared to handle all classes of workmen in the building and metal trades, skilled and unskilled agricultural laborers, male and female servants, mercantile, professional, technical, industrial, hotel, restaurant, and institutional workmen and workwomen, and general laborers.

Contrary to the tradition of private employment agencies, the Municipal Bureau will not invite workers from out of town to New York, as it is realized that there are already too many applicants for most jobs. Mr. Sears expects to treat the question of labor supply as a normal problem, to be treated on a scientific basis, pointing out that it has been the general tendency in this country to regard employment agencies as a respectable but unfortunate last resort, made necessary by personal bad luck rather than by essential factors in industry and labor. The need of public confidence in the institution is emphasized, in view of the fact that a number of other public agencies in this country, which were hastily established without sufficient appropriation or public understanding of the needs of the situation, have failed because the popular interest and confidence was never acquired.

GOV. GLYNN SPENT $8,690.

ALBANY, Nov. 14.—Gov. Glynn spent $8,690.39 in his unsuccessful campaign for re-election, according to his accounting made public today by the Secretary of State. No receipts were recorded. The statement showed contributions of $2,500 to the Democratic State Committee and of $1,000 to the Independence League.

The Glynn Campaign Committee statement showed receipts of $19,445 and expenditures of $8,990.53.

The Prohibition committee's expenses were $5,211 and the expenditures $4,936.15, its account showed.

$100,000,000 GOLD FOR RESERVE BANK

New York Institution Expects to Have That Sum Soon After Opening Tomorrow.

STRONG LAUDS CITY BANKS

Members Agree to Make Payments in Metal or Certificates—Record Gold Holdings.

The Federal Reserve Bank of New York will have in its possession $100,000,000 in gold and gold certificates within a very short time after its doors are opened tomorrow, if the expectation of its Directors are realized.

It already has more than $8,800,000 paid in on account of subscriptions to its capital stock. The law required that these payments be made in gold, but the portions of reserves that are to be transferred by the member banks, beginning tomorrow, are payable, under the law, in any lawful money, which means anything except banknotes, and may be met, in part, by the discount of commercial paper.

The Directors, however, following the lead of the Federal Reserve Board, have made every effort to induce the member banks to make these payments also in the form of gold or gold certificates, and it was announced yesterday by Gov. Strong that arrangements had been made with the member banks in this city under which more than 95 per cent. of the amounts due would be paid in that form. The up-State banks have been similarly urged to make payments in gold so far as practicable, and it is expected that these efforts also will prove largely successful.

"The Federal Reserve Bank of New York," said Gov. Strong yesterday, "will open for business at 10 o'clock Monday morning. During Monday and Tuesday we shall be engaged in receiving the transfers of reserves from the 479 member banks. From advices which have been furnished us all the national banks in New York City will probably complete their transfers of reserves on Monday, and over $87,000,000 out of the total of $91,000,000 deposited by banks in this city will be in gold or gold certificates. A number of the banks, including some of the largest, have signified their intention of depositing some portion of their reserves in excess of the minimum required. The total of such excess deposits will probably be over $7,000,000.

"Several of the large banks will also probably apply for rediscounts early in the week, and the Chemical National Bank has asked for permission to make the first rediscount in order to show its desire to support the operations and use the facilities of the new banking system.

Praises New York Banks.

"The New York City banks by transferring their reserves so largely in gold, by their willingness to make prompt use of the rediscount privilege, so as to establish rediscounting as a normal banking operation, and by lending us a complete staff of experienced officers and clerks have given most gratifying evidence of their intention to co-operate in establishing the new banking system."

Among the banks that intend to deposit more than the amount required are the National City Bank, the National Bank of Commerce, the Chemical and the American Exchange. Others that have not expressed their purpose will probably do the same.

While the capital and deposits of the Federal Reserve Bank will be exceeded by those of at least two of the member banks in this city, its gold holdings will be far in excess of those of any other institution in the United States.

Circulars were sent to the member banks yesterday announcing that the rate of discount would be published and the members advised as soon as it had been approved by the Federal Reserve Board and instructing the banks as to the form in which applications for discounts should be made.

Checks for Collection.

Other circulars announced that beginning on Wednesday checks and drafts drawn on any Federal Reserve Bank and checks and drafts drawn by member banks of this district on any member bank in Albany, Brooklyn, or New York, would be received on deposit for collection and credit of the proceeds to the accounts of the members depositing them. Until further notice, it was stated, checks, drafts, and other items other than those specified should not be deposited, as they could not be handled with facility, and would be returned.

The checks received under this ruling will be collected mainly through the New York Clearing House, through which the Federal Reserve Bank will effect exchanges on and after Tuesday. Nearly all the member banks in New York and Brooklyn are members of the Clearing House or clear through members. There are only three banks in Albany that are members of the Federal Reserve Bank. Items on these banks will have to be forwarded for collection.

The restriction of check transactions to Albany, Brooklyn, and New York for the present is in accordance with the recommendation of the Federal Reserve Board that they be limited at the start to reserve and central reserve cities. New York is the only central reserve city and Brooklyn and Albany the only reserve cities in this State, which constitutes the district of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

FIXES RE-DISCOUNT RATES.

Federal Reserve Board's Ruling Will Be Effective Tomorrow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—The Federal Reserve Board held its final meeting before the opening of the new regional banks today, and, while a number of matters that affect the operation of the new system have yet to be passed upon, all action necessary to the induction of the rediscount system has been taken. The board announced yesterday temporary rates for rediscounting varying from 5½ per cent. for short-term paper to the East to 6½ per cent. in the West and South. It is expected that some of the rates will have to be readjusted before long.

The initial rates to go into effect on Monday are as follows:

For New York and Philadelphia, 5½ per cent. for bills and notes having maturity of not more than thirty days, and 6 per cent. for paper with a longer maturity; for Boston, Cleveland, Richmond, Chicago and St. Louis, 6 per cent. for all maturities; for Atlanta, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Dallas and San Francisco, 6 per cent. for bills and notes having a maturity of not more than thirty days, and 6½ per cent. for those having a longer period to run.

The board took this action in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Reserve Act, which authorizes it to review and determine rates to be fixed for each district. The banks were asked to suggest a rate which would be adapted to their sectional needs, and the uniformity shown in the replies made it an easy matter to fix rates for most of the cities. The lowest rate suggested was 5 per cent. and the highest 7 per cent. In some cases the rates were fixed just as requested in the replies from bankers.

"After a full consideration of the facts in the situation," said the spokesman of the board, "the board felt it incumbent to adopt a moderate and conservative policy at the outset, in view of the fact that the conditions to which the banks will be subjected in operation cannot be precisely foretold. It was felt that the adoption of rates of rediscount which would adequately safeguard the resources of the various institutions would be the wisest policy at the beginning, particularly in view of the conditions already set forth. The Federal Reserve banks have the right, with the approval of the board, at any time to change the rates, and the present rates are therefore to be regarded as provisional and subject to revision. The board expects to be governed entirely by experience as the new banks become firmly established and accumulate data which can be used for its guidance in reaching conclusions."

It was decided yesterday to require a bond of $250,000 from each Federal Reserve agent, this amount to cover the deputy agent and his staff. Regulations governing the banks were adopted; but as they will not reach most of the banks until after the opening, a telegraphic message was sent asking the Governors to conform, so far as possible, with the accounting methods adopted by the Federal Board. The Directors are to be asked for weekly reports to accompany the statement of conditions. Comptroller Williams sent the telegrams last night to the twelve reserve banks authorizing them to open their doors on Monday, although their charters will not reach them until later. The charters have been signed and sent out by express, and, pending their receipt, the Controller's telegram will serve as the certificate required by law.

GERMAN MEASLES TOO MUCH

French Boy Tries to Die When He Learns Name of His Ailment.

Marcel, the French vegetable boy who works downstairs at the Manhattan, gave the porters and pantrymen in the hotel a lively tussle yesterday morning. He wanted to jump out of the subbasement window and kill himself on the pavement in the court outside.

When he appeared for work, Marcel said he was not feeling well. He had a headache, and he was first cold and then hot, and the pantrymen found that something like rash was breaking out on his face. So they told the steward, and the steward sent for Dr. Davis, the hotel physician. Dr. Davis told the boy his diagnosis, and as a result Marcel sprang for the window. It required four men to hold him, as he screamed and struggled.

"I will kill myself," he cried, in broken English. "I am disgraced, and my parents they will disown me. I cannot go home. What shall I do?"

The doctor had already told him that he was suffering from German measles.

COIN SHOWER STOPS MUSIC.

Generosity of St. Regis Women Patrons Displeased Orchestra Leader.

Three well-dressed women, who looked like foreigners, who sat in the tearoom at the St. Regis the other night, began to fling coins at the orchestra. One eye witness says they were $2.50 gold-pieces, but another says they were new Lincoln pennies.

Anyhow, their effect upon Cesar Ronchi, the leader of the orchestra, was marked. In the part of the earth where Ronchi came from it used to be good form to shower gold upon musicians, but over here artists are not treated as the visitors were treating him and his men, and so he put down his violin and looked coldly at the three women. The shower continued, whereupon Ronchi gave a signal to his men, and they stopped playing and did not resume until the women had paid their bill and left.

JOINT BANK DEPOSIT TAXABLE AT DEATH

Appellate Division Decides That Widow Must Pay for Transfer.

WILL GO TO HIGHEST COURT

Mutually Owned Accounts Had Been Held to Relieve Survivor of Expense.

The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in Albany has decided that savings bank accounts deposited in the joint names of husband and wife are subject to the transfer tax law. Savings banks in many sections of the State have been sending out circulars asking for deposits in joint names, on the ground that the death of one of the depositors would leave the account free of tax and would relieve the survivor of having the account subjected to delay by the appointment of an administrator.

When the State Controller began appraising the estate left by John S. Tilley, the head of a ladder company, who died at his home in Colonie, Albany County, on March 28, 1913, the savings bank accounts were held out of the appraisal. An investigation revealed that Tilley had opened fifteen savings bank accounts in his name and that of his wife and that the deposits amounted to $33,461. A tax was imposed upon this fund, but the widow employed counsel, and the matter was brought before Surrogate Van Derzee.

William L. Stout of this city was retained by the Controller to handle the case. Mr. Stout argued before the Surrogate that, inasmuch as both the husband and wife had unlimited access to the fund during their lifetime, that no evidence existed of a complete gift to either the one or the other. He said that the purpose of the joint account was to permit the survivor to get control of the fund.

Merchant, Olcna & Merchant, counsel for Mrs. Tilley, argued that the entire fund was exempt, and protested against a tax being placed upon even half of the fund. They said that the widow acquired a right at the time each one of the bank accounts was opened, and that it was therefore immune from attack. Surrogate Van Derzee upheld this view of the case, and decided that no part of the money on deposit was subject to a tax. This left the question of the power of the State to tax a joint account in the same position it was before, and made about equal the decisions rendered by courts throughout the State on the matter. Some of the courts had decided one way, and some the other, and the Controller wanted to have the question settled for all time.

He directed that if the decision of the Appellate Division went against him the case should be carried to the Court of Appeals. That he has been sustained may also result in having the Court of Appeals decide the matter. Counsel for Mrs. Tilley are said to have declared their intention of carrying the case to the highest court in the State in case they lost the decision in the Appellate Division. Mr. Stout is anxious that they should do so. He said:

"There has been so much confusion upon the question as to the interest of the survivor in the so-called joint bank accounts that it will be of sufficient interest to the public to know what disposition the Court of Appeals will make of the question to well repay the Controller to aid in getting that court to act upon it. A final word on the subject will help in reducing the amount of litigation over estates, and will certainly serve to quicken action by the State authorities in transfer tax matters."

DAY OF GOLF FOR PRESIDENT

Today's Programme Includes Attendance at Fifth Ave. Church.

President Wilson came to town yesterday to be the guest over the week end of Col. E. M. House. With President Wilson were his daughter, Miss Margaret Wilson, and the President's physician, Dr. Cary T. Grayson of the navy. Chief William J. Flynn and Secret Service Agents Sloan, Murphy, and Nye came along with the President's party.

The President came on the private car Ideal, attached to a Pennsylvania train that reached the city shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning. After breakfast with his daughter, Col. House, and Dr. Grayson on the private car the President was driven to Col. House's home, 115 East Fifty-third Street. He did not leave the car, but continued to the Piping Rock golf course, where he spent several hours playing golf. After luncheon at the club he returned to the residence of Col. House at 5 o'clock last evening.

The President's programme for today includes attendance at the morning service of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, luncheon at the home of Cleveland H. Dodge, and return to Washington at 5 o'clock this afternoon.

STATE POTATO QUARANTINE.

Shipments Barred from Clinton and Franklin Counties.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—Announcement was made today that the Department of Agriculture had quarantined the counties of Clinton and Franklin in New York State on account of the existence of powdery scab among potatoes there. In a statement the Agriculture Department said:

"Technically, the department has quarantined the whole State, but through the co-operation of the local authorities in quarantining the two infected counties, it will be possible for the Federal Government to remove all restrictions upon the movement of both table and seed stock from the area outside of these two counties. The provisions of the quarantine are in general identical with those in force in Maine. Potatoes intended for seed must be grown in soil that is uninfected; and must have been stored away from all diseased stock, and must be found upon inspection by Federal authorities to be absolutely free from any traces of powdery scab. They are then tagged and can be moved in interstate commerce. Table stock can be shipped out as long as no actually diseased potatoes are found in the lot."

POLICE USING GYMNASIUMS.

Instructors Give Lessons at New Training Quarters.

Instructors from the School of Recruits have visited the gymnasiums for policemen which were opened recently in the Old Slip, Clinton, and Fifth Street Police Stations, and given the men lessons in physical culture. These gymnasiums have been supplied with weight-lifting machines, wrist machines, mats, punching bags, medicine balls, Indian clubs, dumb bells, and boxing gloves.

The policemen of the three precincts have taken up subscriptions among themselves to help defray the cost of the gymnasiums. Commissioner Woods has assigned physical instructors from Headquarters to visit the gymnasiums regularly and give the policemen lessons in boxing, wrestling, and fencing. Probably more of these gymnasiums will be opened in other precincts in the city.

Although there is a well-equipped gymnasium at Headquarters, it is too far away from their posts of duty to suit the convenience of most policemen. Many policemen are today training in athletic clubs and the gymnasiums of the Y. M. C. A.

The precinct gymnasiums occupy the upper floors of the station houses. Inspector C. F. Cahalane of the Fifth Inspection District is in charge of them.

DESERTI FINDS PEACE IN PLATONIC TRYSTS

Countess Leontie Brings Him Relief from Wife's Chastisements, Architect Says.

HIS CALM ONCE DISTURBED

That Was When the Countess Scratched His Face, Wife Suing for Divorce Asserts.

In her suit for a divorce, begun in the Supreme Court, Mrs. Esther Deserti named a Mrs. Radstone, who is known also as the "Countess Leontie." Yesterday Alexander Deserti, the defendant, who is an architect, put in an answer in which he said that he had never been guilty of any acts of impropriety with Mrs. Radstone. He admitted that he had found much solace in her society, and that whenever he was unduly afflicted with matrimonial woes he fled to her for comfort.

"The Countess is a mere friend of mine," Mr. Deserti said, "whom I met together with other artists in a casual manner. Her platonic friendship has been a source of relief to me when I felt the injustice and chastisements meted out to me by the jealous, unsympathetic, unforgiving, selfish, and greedy disposition of my wife."

Mr. Deserti said that when he first married his ambition was to reach a pinnacle from which he could view things with more complacency than comes to many artistic careers. He said he drew plans until the small hours of the morning, and his wife grew dissatisfied because she thought he was paying more attention to business than to her. This made him nervous, because he is of a highly sensitive nature. Things grew so bad that he was finally driven elsewhere to seek happiness.

According to Mrs. Deserti, her husband did not always find comfort in the society of the Countess, because, she says, on one occasion the Countess scratched his face.

Mrs. Deserti says also that her husband became so infatuated with the Countess that he only came home to change his clothes.

H. H. Pitcairn, Back from Singapore, Tells of Suicide of Stranded Young American Engineer.

H. H. Pitcairn, an American, who used to be city engineer of Manila, and who has built railroads in Borneo, arrived yesterday at the Imperial from Singapore, where he had gone in June to take a position on the local railways. Mr. Pitcairn brought a report of a tragedy, in which a young American mining engineer had ended by committing suicide, and of trade conditions in the Malay States, which he says are very bad, except so far as the importing business is concerned.

"On the seventh day of August I was handed my transportation back to the United States," said Mr. Pitcairn, "and all construction work of every kind had stopped. There was a great deal of distress in Singapore, because it was impossible for anybody to get any money by cable, but the most distressing was the suicide of a young American we knew as 'Pixie' Coffield, or Cawfield, or Corfield. The local paper spelled his name three ways.

"I had met 'Dixie' about a year and a half before in Java. He was from Chicago, and has a brother there. I never knew his real front name, and he had got his nickname through his intense Southern prejudice. You see the trouble in Singapore was that the banks were not allowed to use code words in cabling, and no bank out there would cash a cable draft without at least the code word. Coffield, as I learned later, had plenty of money in Java, and he tried to get some from there, and also cabled his brother in Chicago, but with no result. He spent every cent he had, and the proprietor of Anderson's Hotel, in the Robinson Road, ordered him to pay in advance. Coffield asked to be allowed to stay for breakfast the next morning. When daylight came, they found his body in the road in front of the hotel.

"Two native women said they had seen him come out of the balcony of the hotel during the night, lean over the rail, and cut his throat, but they said he had staggered back into his room. How the body was found in the street we did not learn.

Would Have Given Him Aid.

"If Coffield had only made his circumstances known to us, who had known him, we would have done what we could from the little money we had. The best we could do in the end was to see that he got a decent burial. I am anxious to get some trace of his relatives. He had come from Sumatra on July 27, and had previously been engineer in a tin mine.

"The German firms in Singapore were closed by Government order at the outbreak of the war. The tin mines shut down, the rubber plantations stopped gathering their product, and as these were bound by contracts, and construction work of every kind stopped and credit was suspended. But the importers found their business increasing. One big firm, Robinson & Co., now have a man traveling in the United States purchasing. That, with others like it do a great business in supplying Chinese merchants, who are buying now more largely than ever. You see these merchants usually buy by contract, agreeing to take so much, say every six months. Fearful now that there will be a shortage in supply, owing to the European war, they have largely increased their orders. It is practically impossible to get more goods out of England, so that the importers have to turn to the United States, and it is my opinion that within six months a big trade with the United States will have developed.

"One thing the British Government did early in the war was to get rid of as many Chinese coolies as possible. These had been working in large numbers in the tin mines and on the rubber plantations. The Government chartered all the Chinese steamers they could get, and loaded between 35,000 and 40,000 of the coolies on board of them, and distributed them to the ports in China from which they had come. Had they been left the problem of caring for them would have become so acute that broad riots must have resulted.

English Volunteered for War.

"I do not believe any troops were drawn from Singapore. All of the young Englishmen there went into the volunteer corps. You see, the danger of an attack from German warships did not end until the German fleet was bottled up and the Emden destroyed. All the motor cycles in the Straits Settlement were commandeered and a corps of motor cyclists formed. In addition to the garrison and the volunteers, we had a Japanese and a French cruiser and five torpedo boats of those nationalities in the harbor, while a Japanese fleet was cruising about outside looking for the Germans.

"I left Singapore on Sept. 20 on the British steamer Indraghiri for Boston. We had to put into Penang and into Colombo because of the Emden scare. Colombo was crowded with ships, and seventeen had to anchor outside the harbor. From Colombo to Cape Guardiful we ran without lights.

"Americans had pretty well cleared out of that part of the Orient when I left Singapore. Just before I got away we heard that the natives of Dutch Borneo had risen against the Government and looted one town and destroyed the bank in it. The Dutch sent two regiments against them and put them down.

"As for the war in Europe, we got practically no news of it. In Singapore a little sheet was issued every day and sold for a penny, which contained a few bulletins, but they did not amount to much.

"But from the officers of the Indraghiri I got a piece of significant news from the Philippines. The ship had stopped at Iloilo on her way to Singapore, and the officers said the night before they left the port the Filipinos had a big mass meeting, at which the speakers had attacked the United States and its flag with all the venom they could muster."

Woman Deposits $5 with Hotel So She Can Sign Luncheon Check.

A business woman who wanted to make an impression upon the man who bought for an out-of-town house decided not only to entertain him at luncheon but to impress him as well with her financial standing. So a little before luncheon she went to the cashier's window at the Imperial and put down a five-dollar bill.

"I want to sign a check in the restaurant," she said, "and I want this to cover it. I will call later and get the change."

It was not until yesterday that she did call. Apparently with a great deal of embarrassment, she stated her errand. She did not remember the date, she said, but it was some time in September.

The cashier did not remember the incident, but he spent almost half an hour going back over his books. Finally he came to an entry in his assistant's handwriting that showed that a woman had paid in $5 and that a luncheon check amounting to $4.95 had been entered against it on the same day.

Not to so much trouble to find a five-cent item, the cashier declined to hand over the nickel until the caller produced proper identification.

CLERKS' TRIALS WITH ALIENS

Those Who Seek Naturalization Papers Are Usually Frightened.

A person seeking naturalization must tell, for the purposes of identification, how tall he is, how much he weighs, give the color of his hair and eyes, and whether he has on his body any distinguishing marks. A very large percentage of the applicants seeking citizenship cannot answer these questions, most of the time because they are confused.

Often the clerk takes issue with an applicant regarding his weight, color, and height, and the clerk is always right. A Swede who was asked how tall he was said six feet. Actual measurement showed he was only five feet nine inches.

Another peculiarity of many of the applicants is their disinclination to sign their names. They seem to feel that they risk something by this display of intelligence. Often the language and bearing of an alien indicate education, and when the clerk in these cases displays some doubt of the truthfulness of the reply to the query he declares vehemently that he never learned to write. Occasionally one of this sort is persuaded to write his name, and he always does so gingerly, as if in doubt of the wisdom of the act.

County Clerk Schneider has directed the clerks to exercise the utmost patience and courtesy toward all of the applicants. One day he heard a clerk, whose patience had been sorely tried, speak harshly to a Russian.

"Don't do that," cautioned Mr. Schneider. "You must remember that the man is paying this country the highest compliment within his power. He has come from a country where individual liberty is restricted, and in the presence of any official he is naturally timid. Always be kind and gentle in dealing with those poor men."

The result of these instructions has been that no man eligible to take out his papers ever goes away without first accomplishing his errand. Mr. Schneider said that all that was needed to make many of the applicants understand the questions was to first make them understand that they had the right to get their papers and were free and independent.

AGE DISQUALIFIES SEARS.

Because he is more than 50 years old, Walter Lincoln Sears, head of the Massachusetts State Employment Agency, with headquarters at Boston, will not be able to take the examination for Superintendent of the new Municipal Employment Agency which is to be opened on Monday at Lafayette and Leonard Streets. The examination has been advertised for several days, and when Mr. Sears went to the Municipal Civil Service Commission yesterday to file his application the clerk told him he was disqualified.

"The age limit given in the advertisement," the clerk explained, "is between 25 and 50 years, and you have given your age as 51."

Mr. Sears has been temporary Superintendent of the Municipal Employment Agency, having been invited to come here by City Chamberlain Bruere and other officials. He said yesterday that it looked as if he would have to return to Boston.

"It's a good thing I haven't resigned from my Boston place," he said. "I am at present on a leave of absence, and unless the age limit of 50 years is changed, I guess it's all off with my New York job."

There are sixty-three other applicants for the place.

Scotchman Who Quit Us for Good Comes Back for Trade Boom.

Nine years ago James Donnelly, then night clerk at the Waldorf, said goodbye to his friend, J. C. Sinclair, who, after being in business in the United States for many years, was able to retire. Mr. Sinclair said he was getting old and he had made enough money, and was going back to bonny Scotland and spend the rest of his days there.

"Ye'll never see me again unless ye come to Scotland," he told Mr. Donnelly, who is now floor manager at the Waldorf.

Therefore Mr. Donnelly thought he was seeing a ghost night before last when what seemed Mr. Sinclair, carrying a suitcase, walked into the Waldorf.

"But I thought you were never coming back," observed Mr. Donnelly when they had shaken hands.

"Hoot, mon, I thocht I wasna," replied the visitor. "But over yonder we've made up our minds that ye're going to have just the grandest business ever, and so I just couldn't hold myself back. I simply had to get into harness again and get some of it."

HUSBAND HELD AS SLAVER.

Wife's Story in Night Court Leads to Action by U. S. Authorities.

Commissioner Houghton held Frank Norris, a salesman, yesterday as a white slaver in $15,000 bail. He was sent to the Tombs.

The charge is based on the way Norris is alleged to have treated his wife. He first met her as a girl of 20, a member of a respectable family in Detroit. According to her story, Norris, representing himself as holding a good position, induced her to marry him. On their honeymoon trip to Rochester, he confessed that he had neither a job nor money. At Rochester he forced the girl to go on the street, and then taking her to Albany, Hartford, Springfield and other places, it is charged, compelled her to support him in the same way.

Arrested in this city and taken to the Night Court, the appearance of the girl attracted the attention of Magistrate Barlow and he inquired into her story. She was sent to the Florence Crittenton Home, and her husband was arrested on the charge of violating the white slave laws.

SUE FOR VOLTURNO DEATHS

Relatives of Five Victims of Fire at Sea Ask $25,000.

Relatives of five of the persons who lost their lives when the steamship Volturno burned at sea, in October, 1913, began suits in the Supreme Court yesterday for a total of $25,000. The plaintiffs were Solomon Finker, who lost his son, Coppel; Matis Trifelman, who lost his sons, Leisor and Mershel; Lukas Bell, who lost his son, Lukas, and Josepha Potesil, who lost her husband, Franz. The defendant was the Uranium Steamship Company.

It was charged in the complaints that the ship carried a dangerous and inflammable cargo, consisting in part of barium superoxide, barium peroxide, aniline oils, and tar oils, and that a great many trees and plants were wrapped in inflammable material. It was charged also that the ship had no fireproof compartments and that the tackle of the lifeboats was old and defective. Hunt, Hill & Betts represent the plaintiffs.

Roentgenists Seek to Incorporate.

Application was made to Supreme Court Justice Pendleton yesterday for the incorporation of the Roentgen Ray Association, to improve the practice in Roentgenology. HALL OF FAME NOW ADMITS ALIEN BORN Separate Building for Names of Americans of Foreign Birth Not Needed.

PROTESTING ELECTORS WIN

Proposed Structure Will Be Devoted to Memory of Noted Women —New Election.

According to an announcement made yesterday by Chancellor Emeritus Henry M. MacCracken of New York University, Committeeman of the Hall of Fame, the constitution and rules of the Hall of Fame have been amended so that henceforth no distinction will be made between famous Americans of foreign birth and those born in this country.

The memorial tablets to those not born in the United States will be placed in the main colonnade with the others, and the separate Hall of Fame for Americans of foreign birth; the foundations of which have been laid at Sedgwick Avenue and Hall of Fame Terrace, University Heights, will no longer be required for this purpose. The foundations, however, will be available with some alterations for the erection of the Hall of Fame for Women, whose location at this point in preference to the previously selected sight to the south of the main colonnade has been approved by the architect in charge. The completion of the north colonnade of the Hall of Fame proper and of the Museum now seems assured, according to Dr. MacCracken, by the Fall of 1915.

When the Hall of Fame was projected in 1900 provision was made for 150 native Americans. The selection was restricted to men, and there was the added provision that only those who had been dead for ten years were eligible. The limitation to men of American birth seemed inequitable to many, and in 1904 it was announced that there would be erected a separate Hall of Fame with room for the names of twenty-five Americans of foreign birth, and a Hall of Fame for Women with room for fifty.

From the first a number of the 100 electors protested against the segregation of the foreign born, and this restriction was found to work badly in practice. Out of more than 600 persons who have been nominated for the hall, there have been not more than thirty of foreign birth, and these have been confined to six of the fifteen classes into which the persons chosen are divided according to their callings. Altogether fifty-one have been chosen, and of these the only ones who were born outside of the United States are Alexander Hamilton and Roger Williams, statesmen; John Paul Jones, naval officer, and Louis Agassiz, scientist.

In view of this and other difficulties sixteen members of the University Senate last month petitioned the university corporation to change the constitution of the Hall of Fame so that no discrimination would be made between Americans born in this country and abroad. The last obstacle was removed when donors who had pledged about $20,000 for the erection of the separate hall for the foreign born agreed that their gifts could be used for the completion of the other unfinished parts of the buildings—the museum, the north colonnade, and the Hall of Fame for Women.

The four men so far elected to the projected hall for the foreign born will not be admitted to the main Hall of Fame without a further indication of opinion. As they were chosen by special election, apart from the American-born candidates, their names will be submitted to the electors in next year's balloting, along with new nominees, to decide whether they shall be placed in the hall on a level with the forty-seven native-born Americans whose names it now contains.

INDIANS TO DANCE AT FAIR.

The historic "medicine dance" of the Seneca Nation, one of the most sacred of the old-time Indian ritualistic ceremonies, will be held tomorrow night at the Grand Central Palace by thirty full-blooded redskins who are attending the celebration of the tercentenary.

The medicine dance more than any other single feature of Indian life has affected the history of New York State. It was visions seen by the powerful medicine man that influenced every attitude of the Indians toward the early settlers. No treaty was made until after the dance had been held to decide whether the proposed action was "good medicine" or "bad medicine."

The medicine masks and tom-toms that will be used in the dance are older than the memory of the oldest man in the Seneca Nation. Long before the first settler had set foot on America these important parts of the ritual had been sent to the Indians by the Great Spirit. No one knows their origin. Even the Indians of today believe that the masks were sent to their forefathers hundreds of years ago as a mark of favor from the Great Spirit. The medicine dance, together with the celebrated "fish dance," will be staged tomorrow night as a special attraction.

SPOTTER FOR MILK BOTTLES

Hotel Objects to Guests Putting Them on Window Sills.

Passing along Park Avenue yesterday morning, a man who was walking down from the Grand Central Terminal observed another man standing outside a big hotel, apparently studying the sky. He asked the sky-gazer:

"What on earth are you looking for?"

"Milk bottles," was the reply.

"But you can't see the Milky Way except at night," facetiously suggested the other.

"That's all right," returned the sleuth, "but lots of folks that stop in big hotels have a way of keeping bottles of milk on the window sills, and it looks bad from the outside. I'm spotting 'em. This is a regular stunt with me every morning."

MALONE WON'T RUN CLUB.

Collector Says He Cannot Add to His Present Burdens.

Dudley Field Malone, Collector of the Port, said yesterday that, contrary to the expectations of his friends, he would not accept the nomination for President of the National Democratic Club.

"A committee of gentlemen waited upon me and told me that the Nominating Committee of the Democratic Club had offered me the nomination for the Presidency," said the Collector. "I told them that I deeply appreciated the offer, but was compelled to decline because I did not feel free to add to my present burdens and responsibilities."

Out of Job, He Seeks Alimony Relief

Lawrence B. Pearson, whose wife, Julie, is suing for a divorce, and who was awarded alimony of $10 a week pending the trial, has applied to the Supreme Court to be relieved from this payment on the ground that he is out of work, and has been unable to find employment. Mr. Pearson was formerly the private secretary of S. H. P. Pell, whose cotton brokerage firm recently failed. Justice Davis has suggested that Mrs. Pearson begin her examination proceedings in order to discover, if possible, what property is really able to pay the alimony.

MOVE TO TAKE COURT SITE.

Lis Pendens Filed to Prevent Transfers of Property Wanted.

The first step was taken yesterday by the city toward acquiring the land which it needs to modify the site of the new County Court House. Corporation Counsel Polk filed in the County Clerk's office a lis pendens against James K. Shaw and forty-two other property owners. This covers all the property affected, and prevents any transfer of title before the condemnation Commissioners are appointed by the Supreme Court. The court is expected to name these Commissioners in a few days.

The property to be taken includes the entire block bounded by Park Street, Pearl Street, City Hall Place, and Duane Street, the buildings on the south side of City Hall Place, from Pearl to Duane Street, and a third parcel extending from the southwest corner of Worth and Baxter Streets to Park Street and Pearl Street.

Included in it are several well-known buildings, among them the Five Points Mission, St. Andrew's Roman Catholic Church, whose pastor, the Rev. Luke Evers, opposed its destruction strongly on account of its night workers and noon masses; the Hallenbeck Building, the Deutsche Press Club, and a substation of the Interborough. Most of the property consists of old tenement houses, and as the land originally bought for the Court House site west of Centre Street is to be sold, President McAneny in proposing the purchase of the new tract reckoned that the city would save a good deal of money.

"RUBE" PRAISES HAT CATCH.

McAlpin Manager Wins Pitcher's Approval and Girl's Gratitude.

Frank Reddy, assistant manager of the office at the McAlpin, was congratulated yesterday not only as the hero of an adventure that took place in the high wind outside the hotel the afternoon before, but because no less a person than Rube Marquard had praised him before a crowd which would have given part of its head to have had Rube tell it it had made a "fine catch."

The pitcher for the Giants was not delivering the ball to Mr. Reddy. It was a hat that had tempted the hotel man to the catch which caught the crowd and drew a compliment from Marquard. Mr. Reddy had sauntered out of the hotel early in the afternoon and was headed down Broadway when he heard a woman scream. He looked around and saw a beautiful young woman, whose unconfined locks streamed in the breeze. She was gazing upward, and Mr. Reddy saw she was looking after a big black velvet hat that was soaring above. It was coming in his direction. As it appeared over his head, Mr. Reddy leaped up and got it, just as if it had been a wild pitch.

"Some catch! You're eligible," he heard a voice call behind him, and he looked around and recognized Marquard and his wife, who were also taking the air.

The crowd which had collected divided their attention between Mr. Reddy's bashful restoration of the headgear to its owner, and the pitcher, whom it knew immediately.

SUFRIN DEMANDS A RECOUNT

Assemblyman Obtains an Order Against Elections Board.

Assemblyman Solomon Sufrin, who said he was re-elected on the Progressive ticket in the Eight District but "counted out" in the early morning hours in four election districts where the returns were held back until his plurality was known, obtained an order from Justice Pendleton of the Supreme Court yesterday requiring the Board of Elections to show cause tomorrow morning why a recount of the ballots should not be made in the First, Second, Ninth and Fifteenth Election Districts. Sufrin's total vote was 600 fewer than it was expected.

"I went to the polling place at 70 Forsyth Street, which is the First Election District, at 2:30 o'clock the morning after the election and heard the election district Tammany captain, Samuel Weintraub, direct the ballot clerk to put three ballots in the box to make the tally sheet figures correspond with the vote," said Assemblyman Sufrin. "My opponent, Sidney Sharlin, according to the tally sheet, had 153 votes, but only 132 had been cast for him.

"In the police returns eighty-three blank ballots were recorded as having been voted at the Ninth Election District, while in the returns made by the poll officers 117 blank ballots are counted. I am confident that I have been deprived of at least 280 votes, while my opponent had a plurality of only 126 votes."

LAMAR HEARING PUT OFF.

Counsel Asks for Delay to Prepare Habeas Corpus Argument.

David Lamar's application for a writ of habeas corpus, which was returnable yesterday before Judge Rudkin in the Federal District Court, was adjourned until Tuesday morning at the request of Louis B. Williams, his counsel. Mr. Williams represented that, as the case involved the study of a voluminous record, he was not sufficiently familiar with it to give his client "the best of service," and so asked for an adjournment.

He asked also that the time for the change of plea and the interposition of a demurrer be extended until Tuesday. District Attorney Marshall opposed both applications, and asked that an immediate hearing be given on the habeas corpus motion. Judge Rudkin pointed out that by adjourning the matter for three days the Government was still obtaining its chief object, the detention of Lamar, and therefore granted the adjournment. Mr. Marshall said that if the writ of habeas corpus was denied he would put Lamar on trial at once on the three indictments found against him.

Lamar was greeted in court by his wife, a tall, rather stout woman. The defendant embraced her. The two then sat at the counsel table talking together in whispers. At the conclusion of the proceedings he was taken back to the Tombs

MRS. MARY SAGE CLEARED.

Indictment Found Against Ex-Teacher for Realty Fraud Dismissed

Judge Burt J. Humphrey in the Queens County Court yesterday dismissed an indictment for grand larceny against Mrs. Mary Searle Sage, formerly a teacher in the public schools and a lecturer for the Board of Education, who was connected innocently with the mortgage transaction by which George L. Rapelyea of Elmhurst defrauded Henry Schmidt and his wife out of $1,300.

In the trial of Rapelyea, who was sentenced last week to nine years in Sing Sing for grand larceny, the defendant testified that Mrs. Sage was quite innocent of the fact that the property on which he gave Mr. and Mrs. Schmidt a mortgage did not belong to him. She was an old friend of his family, which is prominent in Long Island, and when he told her that he was the owner of the property she believed him.

DETROITERS STUDY TRAFFIC

Mayor Marx and His Official Family Get Tips Here.

Several city officials of Detroit, headed by Mayor Otto E. Marx, arrived at the Biltmore yesterday to spend a few days here in studying traffic regulations.

John Gillespie, Commissioner of Police; William J. Chittenden, Commissioner of Finance; John Dust, Commissioner of Parks and Boulevards; George H. Fenkell, Commissioner of Public Works, and Edward Fitzgerald, Secretary to the Mayor, are in the Mayor's party. They expect to remain here until Tuesday, and then will visit Washington and other cities in the East before continuing their observations in cities of the Middle West.

GIVES A TAX REBATE ON MINORS' ESTATES

Court of Appeals Rules on Bequest Contingent Upon Zborowski's Attaining Majority.

SAVES MONEY FOR STATE

Surrogate Had Ruled That Such Estates Should Not Be Taxed Until Heirs Came of Age.

The Court of Appeals has decided that the estate left to Louis Zborowski by his mother, amounting to $2,522,256, shall be taxed at 5 per cent., the highest possible rate under the law, but the decision provides also that if the estate really passes to Zborowski he shall receive a rebate on the tax.

Mrs. Margaret Laura Zborowski died on July 9, 1911. She divided about $525,000 among friends, and then her will provided that if her son lived until he was 21 years old he should have the rest of the estate and that in the meantime he should receive the income from it. If the son died the estate was to go to more distant relatives.

Louis Zborowski is about 19 years old, and the appraiser taxed his interest, as a direct descendant, at 1 per cent., on the ground that he would probably reach his majority. The State Controller, through William Law Stout, appealed to the Surrogate, who held that the estate should not be taxed until it was learned whether Zborowski lived to be of age. Mr. Stout objected to this ruling because he said that it would prevent the State from collecting large sums in taxes and would involve much bookkeeping.

The case was carried to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, which sustained the Surrogate, and then it was taken to the Court of Appeals. The decision of this court that the highest tax must be imposed on the estate will have a far-reaching effect. It will touch big estates mainly because remainder interests are rarely taxable in small estates. Mr. Stout said that in one estate the beneficiary died shortly after his life interest in the estate had been appraised. His death occurred before the transfer tax proceedings had been begun, but his interest was assessed at the period of expectation based on the mortality tables used by life insurance companies. The Court of Appeals upheld this tax on the ground that it was not fixed on what had been actually received, but what might have been received. In other words the tax was based on a possibility and not on a probability.

The decision of the Court of Appeals in the Zborowski case says:

> The transfer of the corpus to the decedent's son or his issue would be subject to the lowest graded rate of the transfer tax law; but if to the designated persons, in case of his death and failure of issue, would be subject to the highest graded rate. In fact that rate should be assessed at the highest graded rate as against the Trustees subject to a rebate in case the remainder actually is vested in a person or persons whose transfers or transfers are taxable at the lower rate.

TO SELL LOSSING'S RARE MANUSCRIPTS

One Is the Journal of a Revolutionary Officer, Who Writes of the Capture of Montreal.

ORDERLY BOOKS OF HEATH

Another part of the late historian Benson J. Lossing's library of Americana will be sold by the Anderson Auction Company on Nov. 17. It consists of manuscripts, autograph letters, and drawings, mainly of the Revolution, War of 1812, and the civil war.

There are in it some interesting orderly books and journals. One of these is Major Henry Brockholst Livingston's manuscript "Journal of the Canadian Campaign, 1775." Contemporary journals or narratives describing Gen. Richard Montgomery's Canadian campaign are extremely rare. This volume contains a narrative of that campaign to the capture of Montreal by Montgomery. Major Livingston, who was graduated at Princeton in 1774, entered the American Army with the grade of Captain, and, being selected by Gen. Philip Schuyler as one of his aids, was attached to the Northern Department with the rank of Major.

Under date of Sept. 2 he notes an interview between the Commissioners from Congress and the chiefs of the Six Nations. On Oct. 9 he announces his arrival at Gen. Montgomery's camp. From Oct. 9 to 11 his entries include notes of firing and an alarm of a sortie by the British. On Oct. 18, after having been awarded a sword by Congress for his services at the siege of Chambly, he marched with 100 men to Caughnawaga to protect the friendly Indians who were threatened by the Canadians. Livingston established his camp at La Prairie, and on Oct. 21 gave a feast to the Indian chiefs, who informed him that if Sir Guy Carleton came they would attack him with 300 fighting men. On Oct. 26 an express arrived at La Prairie from Col. Seth Warner, who, with the "Green Mountain Boys," was at Longueil, saying that the Canadians and regulars were marching to attack him and asking for assistance. Livingston sent some men out of his small force, and on Oct. 30 the threatened attack was made, but the enemy was repulsed with trifling loss on each side. Livingston writes that "Carleton was a coward," and kept himself in the background far out of danger, surrounded by his regulars, whom he kept also out of the action.

There are two apparently unpublished private pocket diaries, 1775-76 and 1777-78, of Charles Willson Peale, the celebrated American artist, who executed in 1772 his first portrait of George Washington, then a Virginia Colonel, and after that painted him repeatedly during the Revolutionary War. The earlier diary contains seventy-eight closely written pages of entries of Peale's daily work and occupation from Oct. 13, 1775, when living at Annapolis, to Dec. 3, 1776. A loose leaf is laid in with memoranda concerning Hessian prisoners.

The diary is filled with reading valuable as a record of the paintings and miniatures on which he is working continuously, and with many amusing incidents of his personal experiences in the Continental Army. The sidelights on social conditions are also interesting, and the prices paid for salt, eggs, and butter, leather to sole his boots, shoes for Mrs. Peale and Raphaelle, their son, are mingled with accounts of painting the portraits of "Washington and his Lady" for "Mr. Hancock," miniatures of Miss Kay, of visits to Dr. Franklin, and delivering powder to be "prepared into cartridges."

There are also Orderly Books of Gen. William Heath, 1782; of Edmund Kirby, who was aid to Gen. Jacob Brown during the War of 1812, and of Gen. Green Clay, March 1 to Aug. 25, 1813; the Memorandum Book kept by Gen. Philip Schuyler during the Revolution; manuscript history written by James Jarvis of the attack on and defense of Craney Island, Virginia, June 23, 1813; nearly 400 telegrams received by Gens. Gideon J. Pillow and Leonidas Polk in 1861, and a letter of resignation by Stanton of the Philadelphia, Wilmington & Baltimore Railroad Company, dated Oct. 30, 1857, and relating in detail the secret journey of Abraham Lincoln from Harrisburg to Washington and incorporating the now well-known telegram: "Your Package (Lincoln) has arrived and been delivered."

Among the autograph letters is one written by Oliver Wolcott, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, dated Yorktown, May 17, 1778, and relating to the transactions of the Continental Congress. In it he says: "Duplicates of the Treaty with France have just now been brought to Congress. No other material intelligence except that Dr. Franklin was formally received on the 20 March as Ambassador to the French Court from these States. The Court has likewise nominated an Ambassador to reside here."

There are a number of letters by Gen. Philip Schuyler to Col. Richard Varick and others on the attempt of Congress to supersede him by Gen. Gunter Gates, the action of the Constitutional Congress, and other important matters. A long and important letter by Alexander Hamilton, dated New York, Jan. 27, 1796, and addressed to Stephen Van Rensselaer.

An letter written by Lafayette on Aug. 6, 1781, to Gov. Thomas Nelson of Virginia, relates to the defense of that State against the British. In another letter written by Lafayette, Paris, March 27, 1826, to Peter S. Duponceau, when the Marquis was nearly 70 years of age and had been in France about five months after his second visit to this country, he makes a comparison of the "half civilization of Europe with the superior intelligence of the United States."

There are also interesting letters by Gadwalader Colden, Thomas Jefferson, Washington Irving, William C. Bryant, Henry W. Longfellow, and Confederate Gens. Ewell, Polk, Pillow, and Zollicoffer. Other features are an interesting series of drawings of California in 1851, locks of hair of Lord Byron and John Keats, original warrant of Gen. Wise for the arrest of Frederick Douglass, manuscript relating to the first settlement of Wyoming Territory, and a Hugh Gaine imprint of the Stamp Act.

1,000,000 MILES OF GERMS

The extent to which the London hospitals are being overworked by reason of the influx of wounded from the war is indicated in the statement of the Medical Record's London correspondent, appearing in the current issue, to the effect that 1,500 disabled soldiers were arriving daily. One hospital has sent 1,776,374 doses of antityphoid vaccine to the front, and an enterprising statistician has figured out that if the typhoid bacilli used in the manufacture of the vaccine were placed end on end they would extend 1,000,000 miles in a straight line.

"With refugees and wounded," says the writer, "our hospitals and other institutes have been overwhelmed. The Red Cross and St. John's Ambulance Association have been strained to meet the urgent needs of fresh arrivals to house them on to posts, private or public. Some 1,500 a day reached here last week and from 150 to 200 parties were sent out of London to various towns. One day 4,000 refugees were fed in a waiting room and in the evening another thousand arrived. Hospitals and other emergency buildings had to be utilised. Some Belgian doctors and nurses too came and took part in helping their compatriots."

THE LAST OF HIS FAMILY.

Englishman Who Lost All His Men & Relatives in War Goes Home to Fight.

The Pacific Steam Navigation Company's liner Ordania, under charter to the Cunard Company, sailed at 10 o'clock yesterday morning for Liverpool with 845 passengers, among whom were a number of non-commissioned officers of the reserves going to join the colors.

Lawrence F. Blake, 26 years old, a civil engineer of Kansas City, Mo., said that his grandfather was killed in the Crimean war, his father died from wounds suffered in Afghanistan, two brothers were killed in the Boer war, and a third lost his life in the battle of the Aisne.

"I am the only surviving member of my family," he said, "and I am going back to offer my service to my country."

NEW CUNARD LINER ARRIVES

The Transylvania Is Equipped with Many Improvements.

Another new liner, the Transylvania, will arrive in port from Liverpool tomorrow afternoon flying the Cunard flag. She will be transferred to the Anchor Line for the Mediterranean service after the war. She is of 14,500 tons and 567 feet long, and is fitted with triple screws driven by geared turbines. This, it is said, frees her from vibration. In addition, she is fitted with large bilge keels.

The Transylvania has been equipped with the latest devices for safety, ventilation, lighting, heating and comfort at sea. The second and third-class accommodation has been designed to give the passengers comfortable surroundings and the largest possible amount of space in the cabins and on deck.

INFLUENCE OF P. S. A. L.

Keeps Young Athletes from Losing Their Amateur Standing.

That elementary school authorities throughout the country recognize the true worth of the local Public School Athletic League, is evident from the number of queries received at the New York headquarters. The athletic directors of Connecticut and New Jersey schools even go so far as to apply for sanctions from the New York P. S. A. L. for games they are to conduct within their own territory. This is done to prevent professionalism creeping into the high school competition and to safeguard the contestants from a dozen other unpleasant things which are bound to creep out where there is no control over amateur sport.

If games are conducted under P. S. A. L. sanction, every boy competing in them must conform to the league rules. In high school athletics no boy is permitted to compete after he has passed the age limit of 21. Where no sanction has been obtained there have been cases on record of much older boys representing high and preparatory schools in schoolboy competition.

Just as the Amateur Athletic Union looks after its flock, so does the Public School Athletic League. A good instance of this came to light recently. A Newark (N. J.) high schoolboy athlete, one of the best in the country in his class, was accused of being a professional. Evidence was furnished that he had abused the amateur rules by working in a position for a salary, which he undoubtedly secured through his athletic ability. A big run was held near his home city shortly afterward in which he was entered. The contest was under P. S. A. L. rules and sanction. The professional act of which this boy was guilty disqualified him from competition according to the P. S. A. L. code, but instead of waiting until the day of the race the schoolboy authorities informed this lad long previous that he was ineligible. That ended his case. He is still eligible to represent his school in events outside P. S. A. L. sanction, although his status with the Amateur Athletic Union, if he should be protested to that body, would undoubtedly be professional. As a matter of fact, Chairman Stumpf of the Metropolitan Registration Committee, rendered a personal decision in the case already against the boy.

Few people can realize the scope of the Public School Athletic League, but its work is far reaching, as this instance might indicate.

PENN MAY ROW IN WEST.

Coach Nickalls Considering Invitation to Race in California.

The University of Pennsylvania may be represented in the Panama-Pacific rowing race next Summer at San Francisco. Coach Vivian Nickalls has received an invitation to compete and is anxious to take the crew out West, provided the Penn Varsity takes a first or second place in the intercollegiate classic at Poughkeepsie.

J. J. McGovern, assistant Secretary of the exposition, sent the invitation to the Quaker coach, and said, inasmuch as there are many Penn alumni in the West who have never seen a Blue and Red crew in action since they left college, it would be worth while to accept. Nickalls is willing to take the crew. He had the following to say on the subject:

"If we annex a first or second place in the intercollegiates I would be more than willing to send my men to the exposition. I feel sure that we will finish either first or second, and then it depends upon the alumni and undergraduates to look after the financial end of the trip."

If Pennsylvania accepts McGovern's proffer, rowing of real intercollegiate flavor will be seen next Summer in California water. Jim Rice, the Columbia coach, also has under consideration an invitation to make the trip to the Golden Gate with his crew, but he is not inclined to accept. Crews from Leland Stanford University, the University of California, and the University of Washington will compete at the exposition. No date has as yet been set for the regatta, but it is planned to hold it about three weeks after the big races at Poughkeepsie.

P. S. A. L. Basket Ball Tournament.

Plans for the elementary schools basketball tournament were discussed at a meeting of the Games Committee held last week, when several protests were decided. The list of schools was increased by admitting P. S. 53, Bronx and 10 Bronx, owing to the fact that they did not receive proper notice of the date of weighing-in the classes. The elementary schools indoor track and field championships at Madison Square Garden Saturday, Dec. 19, were also discussed and several minor details arranged.

Run for Trades Schools.

The annual Evening High and Evening Trades Schools cross-country championship will be held on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 5, over the Prospect Park course, Brooklyn. Teams will be limited to eight boys, including two substitutes, but only five boys will be eligible for points. A gold medal will be awarded to the boy finishing first, with silver medals for the four next to finish. A point trophy will go to the school scoring the lowest number of points. Entries close with Dr. Ward Crampton, Secretary Public Schools Athletic League, 157 East Sixty-seventh Street, 5 P. M., Nov. 5.

The Harvester a Saddle Horse.

H. K. Devereux, President of the Grand Circuit of Trotting Associations, has purchased the trotting stallion, The Harvester, 2:01, and will use him as a saddle horse at his home in Cleveland. The famous horse, which a year ago held the track records for a trotting stallion at both a mile and two miles, was broken to saddle about a year ago and taken rather more kindly to work under the saddle than he did in harness. Mr. Devereux says he has no present intention of training his horse for records at trotting under the saddle, being content to let him hold them.

DR. MAXWELL WINS ELIGIBLE LIST FIGHT

State Superintendent Finley Issues Order Setting Aside Education Board Resolution.

CARRIED TO THREE COURTS

City Superintendent May Now Pass Over Holders of Licenses 1 and 2 in Appointments.

City Supt. Maxwell has won another and apparently final victory in his appeal from the resolution of the Board of Education on June 12, 1912, with regard to the eligibility of holders of Licenses 1 and 2 to appointment and promotion as teachers of the graduating classes in the elementary schools in this city. Dr. John H. Finley, State Superintendent of Education, issued yesterday an order setting aside the resolution of the board and sustaining Dr. Maxwell in his appeal.

In the early part of 1912 Thomas W. Churchill, who, under the administration of President Egerton L. Winthrop, Jr., was the aggressive leader of the so-called progressives in the board, offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling upon Corporation Counsel Watson for an opinion as to the City Superintendent's right to nominate from established eligible lists to the higher elementary school classes successful applicants in preference to the holders of Licenses 1 and 2.

The Corporation Counsel, after some investigation, rendered on March 27, 1912, an opinion deciding against the attitude of Dr. Maxwell. In that opinion he said:

"When the revised charter of 1911 was adopted Section 1090 provided that existing eligible lists should not be affected by the act. Therefore, since the holders of Licenses 1 and 2 were entitled to be placed upon the eligible lists for the five Boroughs of New York, it seems that their eligibility for the graduating class in the schools of those Boroughs endured after the adoption of the revised charter because it explicitly provides that the eligible lists in existence at the time of its passage were unaffected."

The Board of Education, accordingly, on June 12, 1912, adopted a resolution directing Dr. Maxwell and the Board of Examiners to comply with the Corporation Counsel's opinion. To the surprise of the progressives, however, the City Superintendent promptly appealed from the decision to the State Superintendent of Education, as a higher authority than the New York Board of Education.

The State Superintendent on July 6, 1912, granted an order staying all proceedings under the decision appealed from pending the determination of the appeal. The board then applied to the Supreme Court for a writ restraining all further proceedings upon the appeal. This application was denied by Justice Rudd on Dec. 11, 1912. The board next took the case to the Appellate Division, which on Jan. 16, 1914, unanimously affirmed Justice Rudd's decision. The case was carried to the Court of Appeals, which, in April last, unanimously affirmed the decision of the Appellate Division. The rights of about 3,000 teachers are involved. Dr. Maxwell may now go ahead and nominate from the other and later lists applicants whose appointments have been deferred pending the State Commissioner's decision.

STRICT ON CATTLE DISEASE.

Department Denies That It Has Changed Policy on Quarantine.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—In reply to charges by Western stockmen that the Department of Agriculture had reversed its policy in dealing with the foot and mouth epidemic, thereby endangering millios of attle, Secretary Houston today addressed telegrams to the Union Stock Yards, the Chicago Live Stock Exchange and the National Wool Growers Association, stating that there had been no reversal of policy and that the department now finds it has a larger amount of funds than had been supposed for carrying forward the work of eradication of the disease. His telegram follows:

"The Bureau of Animal Industry has not reversed its policy on the foot and mouth disease. It is actively pursuing its general policy of quarantining and destroying diseased animals and also of destroying exposed animals where there is any danger. The Bureau will not permit the slaughtering anywhere of exposed animals for food purposes where there can be any possible question.

"The department finds it can make available a larger amount for eradication work than was first thought possible, and will strain its resources to the utmost limit under the law. It is likely that its funds, taken in conjunction with those of the State, will hold out until Congress meets."

More counties which have developed the foot-and-mouth infection were reported to the department today, as follows: Pennsylvania, Schuylkill and Beaver; Indiana, Davies and Pulaski; Ohio, Huron and Cuyahoga; Illinois, Dekalb, Henderson, Henry, McLean, and McDonough; Massachusetts, Suffolk and Norfolk.

CHICAGO, Nov. 14.—Complete disinfection of the Chicago stock yards from foot and mouth disease was finished today and everything was in readiness for reopening of the yards at midnight tomorrow.

Dr. W. N. Neil, chief of the Federal Government's Bureau of Meat Inspection, issued a statement today declaring that the public need feel no apprehension of the meat sent out from the stock yards.

"There is no chance for the public to get meat that even has been exposed to contamination," said Dr. Neil. "The rigid precautions heretofore taken by the Inspectors in my department have been redoubled since foot and mouth disease was discovered. Cattle are examined before and after slaughter. Stock in any way exposed is buried under quick lime far from the slaughter houses."

A. G. Leonard, President of the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, said:

"I expect a fairly good run of cattle the opening day. The farmers have been notified to ship stock in sealed cars for immediate slaughter only. There will be no transshipment of cattle from here and no stock from infected districts will be received."

BUFFALO, N. Y., Nov. 14.—The East Buffalo Live Stock Yards have been completely disinfected and will open for business Monday. Shipments, however, are limited to clean counties in New York State, and a Government certificate must accompany each shipment.

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 14.—Disinfection and fumigation of the Herr's Island Stock Yards were completed today, and it was expected the yards would be thrown open within the next few days.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Nov. 14.—An order placing every county in this State under quarantine was issuile today by the State Agricultural Commission. The order prohibits absolutely the movement of cattle from one county to another.

Previous to today's order twenty-three counties had been placed under complete quarantine, while about one-half of the State was under restricted orders.

The open season for hunting, which was to have begun next Monday, was officially declared off, and today hunting will not be permitted anywhere in the State.

IF CAPITAL BE DESERVED.

LEWIS, INC.,

Park Row Building,

New York.

Our President (Mr. Lewis) was the founder and builder of the "Blue List." Interested SEVERAL MILLIONS of capital in five years!

Investigated and passed judgment upon over 4,000 financial propositions WITHOUT ONE ERROR OF JUDGMENT!

He created one selling plan alone whereby $100,000 were invested by New York City investors!

EQUITABLE INVESTMENT FOR $50,000

Lewis, Inc., has investigated and presents a one-man investment for $50,000. It is in Florida's choicest living and producing section; to raise cattle for beef. In the zone richest for best commercial beef growing; (also for commercial crop-growing on broad lines.) The partnership is with two high-class, clean-cut, successful men (one of them a bank President.) Personal activity by investor of proven integrity and business capacity preferred; but an inactive partner, partial to Florida's glorious Winter climate for annual visits, would be considered. The share is an undivided half interest in 13,000 acres of selected land; and a full half share in all the commercial equities and increment derived therefrom under wisest and most skilful management. Ideal opening for him who longs for (or needs) the "out-doors," yet doesn't want his family denied city social life; (land only six miles from one of Florida's foremost growing cities, where he can reside.) You can read full records of our investigation and learn all details at our office.

YALE FINDS PRINCETON HARD TEAM TO DEFEAT---HARVARD UNABLE TO SCORE ON BROWN

TIGERS' BRACE COMES TOO LATE

Yale Downs Princeton's Plucky Football Team by Close Score of 19 to 14.

FAST PACE TIRES BLUES

RECORD CROWD IN STADIUM

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 14.—In the bitterness of Princeton's defeat by Yale in the new Palmer Stadium this afternoon the hordes of Old Nassau sympathizers found a soothing solace in the game, gritty, up-hill fight which the crushed Tiger eleven made against colossal odds. Facing the probability of a 19-to-0 defeat, Capt. Ballin's fighting Tigers in the final period of the game rose en masse in the greatest rally that has been seen on the gridiron this season, and only the game's end, coming all too soon, put a stop to their mad onrush. They had scored two touchdowns and were keyed up for another when the grueling struggle ended as twilight was settling its purple mantle over Jungletown. Yale won by a score of 19 to 14.

For three periods Yale tore the Princeton team to ribbons. In an outburst of open football the like of which has never been shown by any but Silent Frank Hinkey's team, the Elis pounded and pounded the Princeton line to smithereens, scoring with exasperating regularity touchdowns to the number of three. Yale's erratic kicking was costly, because two attempts to kick goals after touchdowns failed, while one attempt at a field goal and a kick from placement were missed.

Yale's Thrilling Play.

Yale's play was a thrilling exhibition of the possibilities of the passing game. The 40,000 spectators who darkened the rising tiers of Princeton's new stadium had never seen football of this kind. Yale's skill was the skill of the English Rugby players. When Wilson with the ball was about to be tackled by a Princeton player he deftly tossed the ball to LeGore, and when a Tiger plunged at LeGore he cleverly tossed the ball to Ainsworth or Knowles. With this play Princeton was up in the air. They had no defense for it, and the Blue played rings around them to their hearts' content.

Not content with her success with these open tactics, Yale found the Tiger line like tissue paper early in the game. The Yale backs, Wilson, LeGore, Knowles, and Ainsworth, plunged desperately into the Orange and Black jerseyed forwards until in the last period the Blue was pretty well tired out. Yale was not worrying. Yale was far ahead. Capt. Talbott left the game; so did Red Brann and Stillman, the first ends. LeGore came out, too, and so did Wilson. It seemed an easy job for Yale substitutes.

But Yale had reckoned unwisely about this Princeton team. The sting of defeat did not depress them. Instead it proved an exhilaration, and without a word of warning they burst forth in a defiant uprising which twice pushed Yale down the field in hopeless retreat. When the game ended Princeton was fighting tooth and nail in the last ditch, while the Blue, tired and exhausted, were hanging on for dear life, hoping for the game to end.

Yale's Close Shave.

Yale's march of triumph came close to being an utter rout. Princeton, battered into submission by Harvard a week ago, bruised mercilessly by Yale early this afternoon, suddenly rose in her might and struck one blinding, stinging blow before finally limping off Palmer Field, defeated. In Princeton tonight they are not lauding Yale's spectacular aerial football, they are talking about how courageously Princeton died. The Tigers were whipped and badly whipped, but they were game to the core, and there wasn't a red-blooded man in the whole crowd whose nerves did not tingle with emotion when the Princeton boys went down beaten, struggling with every bit of spunk that was left in them right up to the last charge. They are all black and blue bruises, but in their hearts they know they have nothing to be ashamed of. The Princeton student body tonight is almost as proud of them as if they had won.

This was the biggest day the little town of Princeton ever had. From early morn the village was jammed to overflowing with Yale and Princeton partisans, who mingled together in friendly rivalry. At daylight they began to stream in in automobiles, and before the day was over every road leading to Tigertown was enveloped in a long, thick cloud of dust. The first thing the automobilists did when they arrived was to wash the dust and dirt out of their eyes so they could recognise their friends.

And such a day! There have been fine football days before, but nothing like this. Princeton was sun-flooded and the warm Indian Summer atmosphere made everybody feel good. Overhead not a single puffy, white cloud flecked the blue canopy. It was like a Summer picnic for Princeton's visitors. They grouped about on the burned, brown grass under the leafless elms eating their lunch and smiling at the disappointed crowds who were turned away from the restaurants hungry and who gaped at them with envy.

Yale and Tiger Girls.

It seemed as if the florists east of the Mississippi had dumped their choicest stock into Princeton today. It was a delightful horticultural display which the football girls showed. Furs seemed out of place on such a warm day, but even if it were a bit hot it was a pretty picture to see bunches of chrysanthemums, orchids and violets pinned to a background of leopard skin, mink, sable or ermine. And every lassie was accompanied by a Princeton youth, who wore neither hat nor coat, but was togged out in light Summer haberdashery. Many of the old gray-haired boys, who have been hopping around at football games for a score of years, said today that never have so many pretty girls been corralled in one place at one time before. Another old codger chirped out the fact that these girls who come to football games are getting better looking every year anyway.

Nassau Street was a hurly-burly of gossipping visitors, while Prospect Street, with its line of homey-looking clubs, was alive with a surging throng going from one house to another. All the side streets and surrounding open lots were choked with dust-covered automobiles. Yale sent a big delegation here today. They came expecting to win and were ready to shout about it. And shout they did.

The crowds of students which banked the sides of the Stadium were jealous of each other's singing and shouting talents. When Princeton began to sing Yale began to shout, and after the second touchdown, when Yale began to chant the song about "More Work for the Undertaker," Princeton's massed thousands set up a shout of the famous locomotive yell which did not cease until Yale gave up singing in despair.

You would never think that Yale and Princeton had any bitter feeling toward each other to hear them cheer each other before the game. And when a Yale player was laid out on the gridiron Princeton would give the crippled hero a cheer, and when a Tiger was stretched out, yelling for some cold water for his whirling, dizzy head, the Yale crowd would set up a cheer of encouragement for the battered football warrior. The players on the field, however, paid no attention to this demonstration of feeling; they smashed away at each other all the time, just as if they were mortal enemies.

Yale Got the Jump.

Yale's superiority was demonstrated early in the game, when the Yale backfield began to break loose. Once within striking distance of the Tiger goal Wilson barked out the signal for the triple pass. The ball was on the thirty-five-yard line when it started. Wilson nabbed it first and ran a little to one side, when Capt. Ballin broke through, and as he grabbed him about the legs the Yale quarter back tossed it coyly to Harry Le Gore. Violent Tiger hands were soon laid on Le Gore, and he was about to have his nose buried in the turf when he threw the ball to the waiting Ainsworth, who galloped along the side lines like a frightened animal and, eluding all his pursuers, planted the ball behind the line for Yale's first touchdown.

In the second period Yale's touchdown was just as spectacular. After continual smashing and driving at the Princeton line Yale found herself under the shadow of the Tiger uprights. The Yale stands began to howl "touchdown," "touchdown." The Princeton line became suddenly stubborn. Wilson and Knowles threw themselves into the

HARVARD IN TIE WITH BROWN TEAM

Second and Third String Men Play for Crimson, but Could Not Score.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 18.—Harvard's second and third strings of players, with one or two regulars, were held to a scoreless tie by Brown today. The Crimson men showed marked superiority both on offense and defense. They were six times inside Brown's twenty-yard line, only to be thrown back by the overeagerness of inexperienced forwards, fumbles by the backs, and poor field-goal kicking. Twice the ball went to Brown on downs.

The Browns were dangerous only in the second period, and then because of Harvard's errors. Gorden gathered in a Harvard fumble on Brown's twenty-yard line and carried the ball to Harvard's fourteen-yard line. No Brown back could gain an inch by straight rushing, and a try at goal went wide.

Two minutes later another Harvard fumble, this one on the Crimson's thirty-yard line, gave Brown a second and last chance for a score. Again the attempted field goal failed. Harvard made four long marches into Brown territory, one for forty-five yards on straight rushing and the other three for thirty yards each. The Harvard forwards broke up all but one of Brown's attempts at forward passing, the only successful pass netting but two yards. Harvard tried the open play three times. Two of these forward passes were successful, for gains of nine and twelve yards, respectively.

The Crimson rushing game was confined to plunges into the line and wide, sweeping runs behind a somewhat crude interference.

Minnesota, 14; Wisconsin, 3.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 14.—Minnesota defeated Wisconsin, 14 to 3, this afternoon in a fast game, marked by first-class football throughout. Wisconsin scored in the first quarter, when Bellows sent a drop-kick over the cross-bar from the 25-yard line. Minnesota scored first in the third period, when Solon went over for a touchdown on a forward from Hamilton on the 35-yard line and kicked goal. In the last period Hamilton intercepted a forward pass and ran 20 yards for a touchdown. Hamilton kicked goal. Minnesota gained freely through the Wisconsin line.

WILLIAMS, 14; AMHERST, 6.

Keen Following of Ball Big Factor of Williams's Victory.

AMHERST, Mass., Nov. 14.—Williams's ability to follow the ball gave the team victory over Amherst today, 14 to 6. In the second period Eells snatched a ball fumbled by Warren and ran forty yards for a touchdown. An intended Amherst forward pass went awry when La Plante, standing on Williams's forty-yard line, leaped into the air and intercepted the ball, which Ashley, the Amherst full back, had just thrown. La Plante ran the length of the field for another Williams touchdown. Eells kicked both goals.

Amherst's touchdown came in the third period. Goodrich slammed his way through the Williams defence for big gains, and Tow carried the ball over the line. The line-up and summary:
